"I am happy to send you my report, because in these hard times I can state to you some encouraging things. In looking at the large number of volumes sold, I can only account for it from the increased knowledge and fuller appreciation of your excellent productions. These volumes have been sold in a region where there were no churches of our connection. The universal acceptance I have met from people of all classes and orders of religion, I candidly believe is almost without a parallel. It affords me joy to report this to you, but it cannot equal the rapture I have felt in passing through those interesting scenes of my unworthy labours. It has truly at times been a heaven on earth. I have indeed found that the Lord had kindly prepared the way. Both members and ministers of other denominations have made many purchases. A Universalist minister located in E., purchased from me in the cars Dr. Alexander's "Practical Sermons," and several others present were by his example induced to purchase books, among whom was an able lawyer from a neighbouring city. The great day only can tell what may be done for many such souls, who may arise and call the Board of Publication blessed. Is it not animating that I can tell you, that among the hundreds of families I have visited, not one have I found, who had the means on hand, that felt indisposed to purchase. Two days have I visited among the Roman Catholics at C., among whom I have been invariably well received, and in some instances cordially welcomed, while they purchased a number of books. Others to whom I have given books have loaded me with the strongest tokens of their gratitude, whilst almost every family has received your tracts with gladness, and an apparent eagerness to find out their contents before I left them."

A COLPORTEUR'S OPINION OF THE WORK.

The following is a quotation from a recent letter of an experienced and useful colporteur in Ohio. It is indicative of his own views of the importance of the work in which he is engaged.

"I take pleasure in communicating to you that I have had great encouragement in the performance of my duties in this field. My visits are not only made welcome by the families which I visit, but they take quite an interest in conversing with me on the subject of religion and their eternal welfare. Most of the families I call upon appear to be delighted with the books of the Board, and purchase from me so far as they have the means to spare. My dear friend, I do think this colporteur system is a glorious thing, and will be the means, in the hands of God, in converting many precious souls from sin and death to life and glory. I hope you will not forget us in your prayers to the great Head of the Church, that we may succeed more and more in building up the cause of our Master.

Yours most affectionately."

FROM THE PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

A highly respected pastor, writing lately from the Province of New Brunswick, says:

"I lately saw our colporteur, who I find is doing well. The demand for books has far exceeded our expectations, and were it not that the times are not quite so good, it would be still greater.

"The quarters into which he has introduced books and tracts, and the accounts received in some instances of the results are most encouraging. I think I must endeavour to get other colporteurs into the field. Please, as heretofore, inclose some of your tracts to my address. I find them most useful in carrying forward our Home Missionary operations in destitute localities. . . . . It is no exaggeration to say, that by the increase of colporteurs, for which there is here a legitimate field, and by other modes, the introduction of the books published by the Board might be increased very speedily tenfold."

"CHAMBER OF SICKNESS."

The pastor of an important church in a neighbouring State, in a recent letter writes as follows:

"Some time since I purchased one of the publications of the Board, entitled "Chamber of Sickness." This good book has given such satisfaction, in at least one instance, that I think it no more than a just tribute to the author, and to the Board, to speak of its entire adaptation to the trying scenes in the sick room. A poor girl, at whose bedside it was my privilege to minister, spoke with delight of the comfort its contents imparted as I read them to her. She always longed for my return, that her sinking frame might be revived with the nourishment it afforded her soul. Not satisfied with this, she asked to have the book left with her, so that her mother might, during the interval of my visits, recite its precious truths, so clearly and affectionately presented. I have no other object in thus speaking of that publication of the Board, than to give my humble attestation to the worth of this book. If I were its author, the knowledge of the satisfaction it gave to one poor, very poor, bed-ridden, pain-racked invalid, would repay all the labour, and be reward full enough."

The book above spoken of is entitled, "A Companion for the Chamber of Sickness. By a Minister." It is a small work (18mo, pp. 244, price 35 cents) containing instructions and reflections suited to the sick room. We recommend both ministers and private Christians to follow the example of the worthy pastor who supplied himself with a copy, from which, as Providence afforded opportunities, to read to the sick who might be accessible to him.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

THE LILY AMONG THORNS, and OLD GABRIEL. 32mo. pp. 64. Price 5, 10 and 15 cents.

This little volume contains two interesting delineations of personal piety. The first and longest of these is an account of a Scotch woman, who, when a little girl, was by God's wondrous providence and grace, rescued from gipsey associates to become a shining and useful Christian, to the end of a long life, and amidst severe poverty and suffering exemplifying and adorning the gospel of her Saviour.

THE CHILD'S CATECHISM OF SCRIPTURE HISTORY, from the accession of David to the death of Jehoshaphat. 18mo. pp. 168. Price 10 cts.

This is the third volume of a series of Questions on Scripture History, according to Townsend's chronological arrangement. The brevity and simplicity of the answers will recommend it to parents and Sabbath-school teachers as a valuable assistant in the instruction of the young.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ——, (or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c.) to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

The new church edifice on North 6th street, in Williamsburg, New York, erected by the congregation of which Rev. Dr. Finley is pastor, was dedicated on Sabbath, February 11th, 1855.

Varieties.

The Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward, Va., now reports twenty-nine theological students as in attendance, which is nearly three times the number it had in 1852. The Rev. B. M. Smith, D. D., entered upon his professional duties in November last.

We are informed that the Savannah Church, Ohio, connected with Richland Presbytery, is enjoying a season of refreshing from the Lord. Seventeen persons have been received on profession, and quite a large number of others are hopefully serious.

New Church at Buffalo, New York.—At the meeting of the Presbytery of Buffalo City, held on the 10th inst., an application was presented by a number of the members of the Central Presbyterian Church of that city, to be set off and organized as the Delaware Street Presbyterian Church, which, on motion of the Rev. Dr. Lord, was unanimously agreed to. The Rev. Mr. Rankin was appointed to effect the organization. The Chapel of the Female Academy has been rented as a temporary place of worship. The material of this colony is such as to afford good reason to hope that another strong Old-school church will soon be gathered in that flourishing city.

It is stated that the number of missionaries labouring throughout the world, is about 3,612. These, if equally distributed, would allow but one missionary for about 167,000 souls.

Madagascar.—In the chief city of Madagascar and its vicinity, a thousand persons are known openly as disciples of Christ; and they are regular in their attendance on divine worship on the Sabbath, and during the week. Considerable numbers in other places also are professed and practical believers. Many of them are judicious men, holding official stations. Though circumstances are unfavourable, converts continue to increase; and persons of high rank, and of noble birth, are among the Gospel labourers.

WATCH AND PRAY.

BY ADELIA MORTON.

WATCH and pray! watch and pray!
Pilgrims on life's tearful way!
Strength ye need each fleeting hour,
While ye feel the tempter's power;
Watch and pray!
Faith shall turn the night to day.

Hope and trust! hope and trust!
Child of sorrow! child of dust!
Place not here thy fond desire
But to heavenly things aspire!
See on high
Joys that ne'er will fade or die!

Pray and fight! pray and fight!
Keep thine armour ever bright!
Soon thy trials shall be done,
Soon the crown of vict'ry won!
Watch and pray,
Looking for the better day.

Watch and pray! watch and pray!
Ye that seek the brighter ray!
Grace can all thy foes subdue,
Grace thy fainting strength renew!
Watch and pray!
Pilgrim on life's tearful way!

A FEARFUL CURSE.

Judges v. 23.—Curse ye Meroz, said the angel of the Lord.

It is not necessary for us to oppose the cause of Christ in the world in order to bring on ourselves this curse. Meroz did nothing, and was therefore cursed. Not bearing fruit caused the barren fig-tree to be cursed; not doing ruined the unprofitable servant; and we need only stand still and do nothing, to bring on us the curse of Meroz.

And that was a blighting, withering curse. It devoted the city to destruction and covered its very foundations with oblivion. No one can tell where it stood. There is no place to which the traveller can point, and say, there stood Meroz! As he approaches Mount Tabor and gathers around him its hallowed associations, he can only say, Meroz once existed, but it was cursed, and where it stood, none can tell!

The curse to which they are exposed now, who come not to the help of the Lord, may be the curse of indifference. If we do not enlist in the cause of Christ, we shall by-and-by feel indifferent about that cause. And to be indifferent about an enterprise in which all heaven, and all hell too, are deeply solicitous, is a most melancholy and fearful state of mind. If God visits a church with the curse of indifference, it will inevitably languish and expire!

Or it may be the curse of barrenness. If we come not to the help of the Lord, we can expect to bring forth no fruit. It is only they who go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, that can hope to come again rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them. Ps. cxxvi. 6.

Or it may be the curse of darkness and desertion; or the curse of dwarfishness; or the curse of worldly conformity; or the curse of persecution—and the church may yet see as dark days as she has ever seen; or, as our not coming to the help of the Lord is an evidence of our want of love to him, it may be an eternal curse—the curse of everlasting condemnation!

Omission of duty is a decisive indication of character. We may be known by what we omit as well as by what we perform. Omission brought the curse on Meroz. The nobles of the Tekoites put not their necks to the work of their Lord. Neh. iii. 5. And if we put not our necks to the work of our Lord, it needs not a prophet, nor a prophet's son, to tell us that we have not the love of God in our hearts; and hence are exposed to his fearful curse. W. J. M.

THE STATE OF GRACE.

A young man, who had lately become religious and was about to unite with the church, was accosted by a neighbour of his, an Arminian in sentiment, who asked him if he believed that Christians cannot fall from grace. The young man replied that he had been brought up by parents who instructed him in the Shorter Catechism, and that he was yet to be convinced that the doctrines he had been taught were untrue. "I can prove," said his neighbour, "that the Calvinistic doctrine of perseverance is not true, in five minutes."

"You acknowledge that Adam fell, and that before his fall he was perfectly holy?" "Yes." "You acknowledge that the devil and his angels fell, and that before their fall they were perfectly holy?" "Yes." "What then, I ask, is to keep you from falling?"

The young man was unused to religious controversy and cared not to engage in it. But on a little reflection he saw that the argument, instead of proving anything against the doctrine in question, was strongly in favour of it. Accordingly, he replied in the following way. "You admit that Adam fell, and that before his fall he was perfectly holy?" "Yes." "You admit the devil and his angels fell, and that before their fall they were perfectly holy?" "Yes." "How then, do you expect to stand?"

The fall of creatures, previously holy, conclusively proves that the holiness of a free agent is not a sufficent security against sin. There must be something in the ground of the Christian's standing, different from that of the standing of Adam and the fallen angels, or his salvation would be an utter impracticability. Something there must be to cause him to stand, which in their case was wanting. Grace is just that which constitutes the difference. Believers are in a state of grace. So says Paul. "Being justified by faith we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also, we have access into this grace, wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God." Here we are told that faith in Christ introduces us into a state, differing from our former state of legal obligation, and of guilt; a state in which we stand or abide, accepted before God, and which will issue in our eternal glorification.

The state of grace is a justified state, and consists in our being subjects of the sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit and objects of the Divine favour.

The security and permanency of this state, is owing, not to any sufficiency or strength of believers themselves, but to the purpose of God concerning them and their salvation, and his execution of that purpose. Thus,

1. The believers standing is of Divine purpose. The purpose of God respecting them, includes their personal election in Christ, and their predestination to salvation. This purpose is free, eternal and unchangeable.

2. It is of Divine wisdom. In the salvation of the elect, God acts in accordance with a plan on which all his attributes and ways are made to harmonize.

3. It is of Divine truth. In saving his elect, God has respect to his covenant engagement and veracity. The plan of salvation, devised by infinite wisdom, comprises the new covenant, of which Christ is the head and surety. By his obedience, Christ has obtained for all them who are chosen in him, the gift of effectual calling to a state of holiness and enjoyment of Divine favour, and their preservation therein.

4. It is of Divine power. Every part of the great plan of salvation, God executes. His power raised Christ from the dead, and gave him to be the living Head of the Church and the Lord of life and glory. His power quickens the sinner, dead in trespasses and sins, and raises him to spiritual life. His power supports that life in the believer, and his power will eventually raise the whole body of believers, at the great day, to glory and immortality.

The state of the believer in Christ is then a blessed one, indeed. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven and whose sins are covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin." Hence,

1. Admission into this state is what all persons should chiefly seek. To be translated from a state of guilt to a justified state, from a state of sin and misery to a state of sanctification and the enjoyed favour of God—what a gain, how incomparable, how desirable, how worthy of all the sacrifices we must make to attain it. Surely, it is wise to follow the Saviour's counsel: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

2. Children should choose this good part "that shall not be taken from them," as well as older persons. The young and the old, all need an interest in Christ, without which they must alike perish. The earlier in life the Lord is sought, the better. How many souls are lost by failing to seek him early. "Suffer little children to come unto me."

3. How careful should every one be not to mistake the way of admission into this state. Christ is the way, the truth, and the life. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Many try other ways, but they try in vain. They "spend their labour for nought." Come to Christ for rest.

4. What holy love and zeal should animate those who are in this state. "The love of Christ constraineth us." They should "live not unto themselves, but unto Him that died for them, and rose again." Evidently he cannot be in this state who draws not from it considerations for holiness and against sin. The believer's word corresponds with his obligations, and his greatest complaint is that his love and zeal are so cold.

The young man referred to above is now an aged and respectable ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church. I received the story from his own mouth.

Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.

MEETINGS OF THE BOARD.

On Monday, the 12th of March, the Board held their stated monthly meeting. The Vice-President, the Rev. John McDowell, D. D., presided in the absence of the President. The usual business was transacted.

On the following day, the Board held a special meeting; the President, the Rev. J. J. Janeway, D. D., in the chair. The committee of five, who were appointed to prepare a report on the subject of Church Extension, made a majority report, which was approved of by four of their number. The chairman of the committee, the Rev. Joseph McElroy, D. D., submitted a minority report, expressive of his individual views on the subject. A substitute for the report of the committee was then offered by the Rev. Dr. McKinney, seconded by the Rev. Dr. Hodge, viz. to recommend to the General Assembly to establish some new organization for the purpose of prosecuting efficiently the work of Church extension. By a small majority of the Board, this proposition was negatived; the majority thinking it best to refer the whole matter to the General Assembly, without expressing any opinion as to what had better be done. This vote, however, should not be regarded as indicating the judgment of the majority that the Assembly ought not to establish some new agency for the more efficient prosecution of the great work of Church extension, but simply as expressing their opinion, that under all the circumstances, it would be inexpedient for the Board of Missions to suggest any plan, and more judicious to refer the whole matter to the superior wisdom of the General Assembly.

After thus disposing of the substitute, the Board, with great unanimity, adopted the report of the committee, which is as follows, viz.

"The committee appointed at the meeting of the Board on the 13th of November last, on the subject of Church extension, and directed to report to-day, beg leave to recommend to the Board that they direct their Corresponding Secretary in writing the Annual Report, to give a detailed account of what the Board has done in conformity to the action and directions of the last General Assembly on the subject of Church extension; and to refer the whole matter of any change in the present plan, if any change is judged expedient, to the wisdom of the next Assembly."

MINISTERS NEEDED IN CALIFORNIA.

We publish the following letter from our esteemed correspondent, in the hope that it may induce some of our ministerial brethren to respond to the loud and pressing call from California. While we cheerfully publish such letters, in order to secure, if possible, the reinforcements which our brethren need in their distant and important field, we deem it proper to make a few remarks. Our brethren sometimes write as if the Board of Missions could at any and all times furnish them with as many missionaries as are needed. This is far from being true. We have not men at our command, and cannot remove ministers, without their consent, from one part of the country to another. All that we can do, is to publish the wants of different sections, and urge their claims; as we have done and are still doing. The Board have cheerfully commissioned as many suitable men as could be induced to go to California, and would gladly appoint as many more as are needed; and, if necessary, would bear their expenses in travelling to their field of labour. We earnestly call the attention of our ministerial readers to the subjoined letter, and request any of them who may be disposed to go to California, to place themselves in correspondence with the Board.

Stockton, California, Feb. 15th, 1855.

Rev. Dr. G. W. Musgrave:

My Dear Sir—My long silence has chiefly been owing to the multiplicity of my duties, and to the want of any items of interest suitable for publication in the Record. It is almost one year since I commenced preaching in Stockton. The city has not increased in population very greatly during that period, but it has undergone a very perceptible moral change. All the churches are more fully attended than they were one year ago, and the mass of irreligious men in our midst are beginning to feel that the safety of property and the welfare of the country are dependent on good morals; and that correct morals can be propagated in no other way than by sustaining religious and educational institutions. Therefore they give substantial aid in supporting the ministry and in maintaining public schools. Indeed, they are ready to engage in every good and beneficent work. Two weeks ago, a Young Men's Christian Association was organized under very favourable auspices, and about forty young men enrolled their names as members. The object of such associations is well known. We hope it will prove a valuable auxiliary to the Church, in calling the attention of young men to the subject of religion, and in surrounding them with wholesome restraints. Discourses are to be delivered before the association semi-monthly by the clergymen of this and other cities. The opening address will be delivered tomorrow evening by the Rev. Dr. Scott, of San Francisco.

The Sabbath is now generally respected in Stockton. On that day all the stores and banks are closed, except those kept by the Jews; and the sound of revelry is scarcely ever heard in our streets. The gambling-houses have entirely disappeared, and houses of ill-fame are fast disappearing. The cause of temperance is prevailing rapidly, and absolute drunkenness is almost unknown among us.

There is a very good state of religious feeling among the members of my congregation, at present. The weekly prayer meeting is well attended, especially by the young men, who take an interest in the welfare of Zion. The Sabbath-School is not so flourishing as I could wish, but the Bible class has a large number of members, who are punctual in their attendance, and faithful in the study of the sacred Scriptures.

At our last communion season, two young people united with the church, on profession of their faith, and six were received by certificate.

I trust the Lord has not suffered me to labour altogether in vain. Some of the scattered seed of divine truth has already germinated, and the Lord can cause other seed, though long buried, to spring up and bear precious fruit. In all respects, I have been prospered beyond my deserts, and have abundant reason every day to thank God, and take courage.

My chief object in writing this letter is to call your attention to the lamentable destitution of ministers of our Church in California. Till recently, I supposed that you had learned, through others, the precise state of things here. Rev. Dr. Yantis, of Oregon, sailed for New York last September. Previous to his departure, he attended a meeting of our Synod in San Francisco, and the Synod requested him to make a full statement of our wants to the Board in Philadelphia, and to urge the Board to send us half a dozen ministers immediately. On inquiry, I find that none of our brethren here have written to the Board. I, therefore, assume the duty myself.

There are now only four Old-school Presbyterian ministers preaching to American congregations in all California; and one of these, (Rev. James Wood, of Los Angelos,) has the consumption and thinks he shall soon be obliged to relinquish his labours.

The First Church in San Francisco is still vacant, and impatiently waiting for a minister.

There is another excellent church edifice in San Francisco, erected by Rev. Mr. Woods last summer, now standing vacant. It is located in a beautiful and populous part of the city, but far removed from any other church. Mr. Woods preached in this edifice only five Sabbaths, and then left it to seek a warmer climate. He organized no church, but left the edifice in the care of Dr. Scott's church. Last week I made inquiries about it, and was told that if the Board would send out a good minister to labour in that part of the city and preach in the edifice, and would agree to support him for one year, he could, in that space of time, and probably in a much less time, gather a large congregation, and organize a permanent self-sustaining church. There the edifice stands, entirely vacant, and waiting for some one to occupy it.

There is a large and growing population at Mission Dolores, three miles from San Francisco, where a church is much needed, and where, I was told one could be successfully planted. Mission Dolores is really a part of San Francisco, and the most beautiful part of it, being situated in a fertile valley, bordering upon the bay, and watered by a creek of the purest spring water.

Unless the Board sends a minister to occupy that field, it will be soon occupied by others.

Sacramento!—There are more than twelve thousand inhabitants in Sacramento and no Presbyterian church. The present is a favourable time for organizing one. There are many Presbyterian families there, who have expressed a wish to be organized into a church, and a willingness to erect a place of worship and support a minister. They are expecting the Board to send a minister, because the peculiar relations they now sustain to another church make them feel a delicacy in sending for one themselves. Sacramento being now the permanent capital of the State, and a city of growing importance, the Board ought by no means to suffer the present opportunity of planting a church there to pass by unimproved. It should be done immediately—six months hence it may be too late. A popular preacher could not fail to be eminently successful, and none other ought to be sent.

Nearly every other important place in the State, which was unsupplied six months ago, has been supplied by our New-school and Congregational brethren, who, with commendable zeal, have sent to California a large number of ministers, and are continually sending them. Unless something is done immediately to furnish ministers for the places I have mentioned, our church may as well abandon this field altogether. We have two Presbyteries in California, but there is a quorum of members in only one of them. Instead of advancing, we are losing ground. To avert the destiny that seems to be awaiting us, we all earnestly entreat the Board to send us more men, and send them at once. They will cost the Board nothing but their passage. No interesting preacher ever lacked a support in California.

I have written this letter very hastily to send it by the mail, which is closing. I will say in conclusion, that second rate men will not do for this field at all. We had rather be without them than with them. The country is full of them already, but they are not engaged in preaching, for they can get no hearers. But men of energy, piety, and learning, even though they may not possess the highest oratorical power, will always be eminently successful, and be well supported. There is not a mining camp in the mountains but will pay a good minister a competent salary.

Rev. Dr. Scott's church is completed and paid for. It is filled to its utmost capacity, I am told, every Sabbath; and often the aisles are all packed full.

The Rev. S. Woodbridge, of Benicia, is holding the even tenor of his way, but there is at present only a small population in Benicia, to whom he can preach. The Rev. James Woods, of Los Angelos, writes me, that he has found only one Presbyterian in that city, and only six professors of religion of all denominations combined. He preaches every Sabbath in the Court House, which is almost always crowded with attentive listeners. But the state of his health is such, that he expects soon to abandon the active work of the ministry. There will soon be a minister needed to supply his place, and it would be well to have one on the ground.

Mariposa and Murphy's camp are yet unoccupied. In each of these places, a talented young man would receive a handsome salary.

I remain, Dear Sir, sincerely and truly yours,

WM. C. MOSHER.

REVIVALS.

CHAMBERSBURG, Feb. 19th, 1855.

Rev. and Dear Sir—A severe cold has confined me at home for three weeks. Hoping to be able to resume my labours the present week, and having several appointments to meet in a distant part of my field, I have thought it expedient to forward my Report a few days earlier than the time specified for its presentation.

Since my last Report, eight churches have been visited on behalf of the Board—four in the Presbytery of Huntingdon, two in the Presbytery of Carlisle, and two in the Presbytery of Northumberland. The amount contributed by these churches this year will be about eight hundred dollars. Series of meetings were held in six of the above-named churches, and with very marked indications of the special presence of the Holy Spirit. The meetings were generally commenced early in the week, in each of the churches, and were held twice a day until after the Sabbath. Three conference meetings were held in connection with the special services in three of the churches, Shippensburg, Hollidaysburg, and Milton. The smile of the Head of the Church was specially imparted to these meetings of ministers and elders, as they "spake one to another" concerning the state of religion, and the claims of the perishing at home and abroad, on the prayers and labours of God's people. Inquiry meetings were held daily at the close of the afternoon and evening services, and a large number of the youth of the church attended them. In the six churches attended to, between two and three hundred gave evidence of seriousness, and many of these professed to have found peace in believing. There are some special features in this awakening which are worthy of notice, and a brief allusion to them may be useful. The first is, that a work of preparation, under pastoral supervision, preceded the awakening in several of the churches. Pious people had been often together for prayer and conference, with their pastors and elders, "and the Lord hearkened and heard it."

Another interesting feature of the work is its connection with Christian education. A majority of the subjects of the work are in high schools, male and female, whose principals are members of the Church, and where the fundamental truths of the Bible, as set forth in our Shorter Catechism, are systematically taught to the pupils. There is reason to hope a goodly number of these educated young people, several of whom are sons of ministers and elders of the Church, may be thus early called by the Spirit, in answer to prayer, to fit them to go forth, in future years, as the heralds of the gospel to the perishing of our land and of the world.

A third feature of this awakening is its relation to the cause of missions. "There is a close connection betwixt missionary work and revivals," remarks Rev. Mr. Burns of Kilsyth, in his interesting narrative of the work of grace in that church. Delightful testimony to the truth of this statement is furnished in the fact that in all the churches where God's Spirit has been specially present in his quickening power, large and liberal donations were made, during the meetings, without any urging on the part of the ministers, for the spread of the gospel amongst the destitute of the land.

The last feature of this revival that we intend to notice is the illustration it furnishes of the importance of united co-operation of ministers and elders in the work of the Lord. "Two are better than one," the Bible says. In five of these pastoral charges, this was strikingly verified. The pastors aided each other for a week. The Lord blessed their labours, and many fathers and mothers will have reason to thank God for these united pastoral labours, throughout the unceasing ages of eternity. The times we live in loudly call for working men in the ministry and eldership of our Church. Great preachers are needed to meet the calls from the great churches of the land. But great churches and small churches, in city, town, and country, need preachers "filled with the Holy Ghost," men who will speak "with other tongues," as the Spirit gives them utterance. Revivals are needed to make preachers what the Church of God and the souls of lost sinners require them to be—"men who have understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." Revivals will meet the demand for ministers, and nothing else will. The world has attractions for our young men, from which God's Spirit alone has the power of rescuing them. With their eyes open to see the visions of truth, usefulness, and glory, in union with Christ and his Church, they will come in smiling crowds, each saying, "Here am I, Lord, send me."

And why should we not have revivals, powerful, glorious revivals, in all our pastoral charges, in all this great land, in all our cities, towns, and villages? "The Lord's arm is not shortened, that He cannot save, nor his ear heavy, that he cannot hear." The Spirit is with Jesus, the Head of the Church, "without measure;" and it is he who says, "Bring ye all the tithes into the store-house, and prove me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Sincerely yours, D. McK.

THE CHURCH AS A FINANCIAL AGENT.

It is admitted by all Christians that they are stewards of God, holding their property in trust from him, and they ought to use a portion of it in promoting his cause. It should not, then, be an occasion of complaint, that the contribution of money for religious uses is a part of the business of every congregation. Yet it is often said that the calls are too numerous, that the financial duties are made too prominent, and are urged with undue importunity. I have no doubt that it really appears so, even to some intelligent and liberal minds. But the system of benevolence of our Church is not open to this objection. The calls of our Church, for the general efforts of benevolence, are only four or five in the year. The striking disparity between the calls and the favourable responses might rather suggest the conviction that the latter are too few; that considerations of duty, with regard to money, are unduly neglected.

The reports to the last General Assembly show that of our 2,868 congregations, contributions were made to—

Dom. Missions by	1322,	being	112	less than half.
Foreign "	" 1063,	"	341	" "
Education,	" 749,	"	30	more than a fourth.
Publication,	" 440,	"	37	less than a sixth.

Or it may be exhibited thus, for—

D. M.,	1322	contributed,	1546 did not.
F. M.,	1063	"	1805 "
Ed.,	749	"	2119 "
Pub.,	440	"	2448 "

Again, as a summary of the whole of the 11,472 collections asked by the General Assembly, only 3,574 were made, while 7,898 were omitted. It is a fair and solemn question for the conscience of the Church, of her ministers and people, to consider whether the "calls" are too many, or the answers too few.

But I will not do the congregations injustice. They have made many contributions besides those which I have mentioned. The Church has become a financial agent, not only for her own but for many other interests. It is the calls of these, added to her own, that makes them appear so crowded and clamorous. Applications have, in some cases, to be put on file, to come up in succession at respectable intervals. And thus our church collections have to take their turn and chance with the rest; and we sometimes have to be content with "e pluribus unum"—one out of the many that the interests of the Lord, in the Church's hands, require. I do not call in question the worthiness of other objects, nor the right or obligation of people to support them; but it seems rather hard that the wise and benevolent enterprises of our Church should be crippled by such displacement. Other contributions, in addition to these, and not to their exclusion, would better comport with the financial agency of the Church in Christ's cause.

Allow me the further to illustrate our last year's contributions, to give just a glance at those of the Free Church of Scotland, our noble Presbyterian brethren. They have 737 congregations, and six regular collections are appointed, by the General Assembly, for the year. Of these 4,422 collections, only 123 failed last year! If we had come up to their measure of faithfulness, we should have had 11,175 collections, instead of 3,574. Their failures were hardly three per cent., while ours approach closely to the startling ratio of sixty-nine per cent. How greatly we excel our Scottish Presbyterian brethren in—delinquencies! I pray that this year may show better results. J. F. M.

FROM A MISSIONARY ON THE FRONTIER.

January 1st, 1855.

My Dear Sir—The interval is commonly so short, between the times of my receiving your letters and the date of my next quarterly Report, that the last may not still be too late to say how much your words of encouragement and trust have sometimes cheered us in our work. At the receipt of your last, we were in the midst of the darkest hours we have ever felt in our labour. Those simple lines of exhortation and hope, came like balm to my bruised spirits; and I felt new power to trust in God and go forward. I cannot express the strength which they brought, in an hour of faintness. But, at such times I have been led to remember, how often the lonely missionary must be cheered by correspondence with the Board. My prayer is, that in your seasons of despondency and gloom, you may be refreshed with water from the Rock.

The quarter just expired, affords little of special note to report. Yet I desire to say what I trust God is doing. We have now been so long worshipping in an assembly by ourselves, that we are probably able to measure justly the effects of our separation. These at first appeared severe, and to some, appalling. But they were greatly increased by our being compelled to struggle under difficulties, such as are found only in opening a new place of worship in a new country. We frequently held service with scarcely more than half a dozen present. The opposition which we have had heretofore scarcely felt, and only detected covertly, has now risen in open form and action. * * *

But, my heart rejoices when I can tell you that these things are not so with us now. We have left this jealousy and rivalry unnoticed. But we have endeavoured to awake ourselves to our own work. And now our weekly prayer-meeting is more fully and regularly attended than ever before. Our members manifest a deeper interest than ever before. Our influence is deepened; our allies are gathered much more firmly around us. Our congregations are now about as large, and more deeply interesting than ever before. And this appears not by a relaxation of the gospel conditions to the popular taste, but in a more earnest and searching exposition of its truth; and we hope that in some individual cases, the Spirit has borne God's message to the conscience. I feel more anxiety in my work than ever before. I am constrained to cry out under our callousness, and unworthiness. But, oh that God would humble us, and bless us, even for his own name's sake.

I remain most sincerely yours, in labours for Christ. J. I. S.

CATECHETICAL INSTRUCTION.

February 3d, 1853.

Dear Brother—At the close of another quarter I have still to speak of the continued mercies of God in preserving the health of myself and family. I have been enabled to preach three times and ride fifteen or twenty miles every Sabbath, except when the weather was such as to prevent the people from attending. Great changes continue to take place in our little village. Only four families remain of about thirty that were here about three years ago. Several families have come in lately, who appear to have some capital, but I fear they will be no advantage to our church or to the cause of Jesus Christ. Oh it is sad to see so much ambition for this world, and so little concern for the world to come—so much formality, and so little piety. I am taking much pains to teach and explain the Shorter Catechism. Some thirty or forty children and youth have commenced to learn. I hear them in private families, sometimes two or three families together. I thought I understood the Catechism, but I never knew, until I began to explain it to the children in the presence of their parents, and of opposers, how rich and precious it is. It contains milk for babes, meat for strong men, and wholesome food for all. It affords an excellent opportunity to explain and to defend the doctrines of our Church, that is, of the Bible, in a very plain and simple manner. I have some very pleasant, and, I hope, profitable recitations. We had three added to the communion of this church, Sabbath before last, and I expect that several will be added to the church in ——— soon; but still I can hardly say that our prospects are very encouraging. We have much to try our faith and patience in both churches.

Yours, most sincerely, &c. S. R.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN TEXAS.

Dear Brother—Another quarter calls me to report to you; that report can contain but a detail of the ordinary routine of toil in a new country. I have ridden some five hundred miles, and preached in new places, and suffered some by hard storms and high waters, &c., but these things are so much a matter of course, that a missionary of ten years' experience in Texas as it has been, and still is in many parts, ceases to remember or record them.

We have had an unpleasant winter and several appointments have been failures. I hope soon to see some fruits of my labours at our spring communions. Five persons have been added to the church here, but still there is a general dearth over the land.

Presbyterianism is largely on the advance. More ministers have come into the State during the past year than ever before in any three years. Yours,

J. W. M.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year. Provided we have their address.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

MINISTERS' SONS AND THE MINISTRY.

A southern correspondent writes, "that the sons of ministers are the most hopeful class from which the ministry comes. In Concord Presbytery, N. C., there are five Morrisons, six Pharrs, and three Penicks. In Lexington, Va., and adjoining Presbyteries, are four Browns, sons of Rev. Mr. Brown, two Morrisons, &c. The Rev. John B. Davies, who was forty-four years pastor of Fishing Creek Church, S. C., has two sons now preaching in Bethel Presbytery, and their two sons are in Columbia Theological Seminary."

The above facts, though not singular, are very suggestive. God has not confined the succession of the ministerial office to the families of ministers, as he did that of the priestly office to the Levites; and yet the history of the Church shows, that he has drawn largely from such families in proportion to the whole number of those called to this office. The Rev. Drs. Alexander and Miller (nomina clara) furnished five sons for the sacred office, the former three, the latter two. The Rev. Dr. Hodge has two sons in the Gospel ministry, and the Rev. Dr. George Junkin has also two. The venerable Dr. Matthews, Professor in the New Albany Theological Seminary, left at his decease two sons, already engaged in the ministry, and a third a candidate, who is now a preacher of the Gospel. The Rev. Francis Monfort, for many years a useful pastor in the West, has four sons in the ministry. Two missionaries in China, sent out by the Presbyterian Board, Messrs. S. N. & W. P. Martin, are sons of the Rev. William W. Martin (deceased,) whose long and useful ministry is remembered by thousands in the West with lively gratitude; and a third son has lately been licensed to preach; to say nothing of family connections, some eight or ten of whom belong to the clerical profession. Many other facts of a similar kind might be adduced. We call attention to them, in order to make a few remarks.

1. Ministers of the Gospel generally, more than most Christian parents, direct the minds of their sons to a serious and prayerful consideration of their own duty, with reference to the sacred office. Whether the children of ministers are trained more carefully than those of other parents, is not now the question. We may assume that the general religious influence exerted upon both classes, is substantially alike. All we mean to assert is, that Christians in secular business do not, to the same extent with ministers, bring this subject to the favourable consideration of their sons, even after the latter become pious, and that this fact alone is generally sufficient to account for the difference in the results. A call to the Gospel ministry is not miraculous, nor by immediate revelation, but by the concurrence of God's providence and grace. The work of grace may be genuine, and with it there may be a desire for this office. Providence may also favour the purpose, and it may be almost formed, but for the want of proper encouragement from parents and other relatives, or, as sometimes happens, from strong counter influences positively exerted upon them from those quarters, young men are induced to change their purpose, and engage in some secular avocation.

Now suppose, in these cases, or even in cases where their minds are merely in an inquiring mood, without having approximated to a decision, the early counsels of friends had been in favour of their becoming preachers, or at least their attention had been called to the subject, and they had been asked to decide for themselves in a serious and prayerful manner, and no advice given, or influence exerted to bring them to an opposite choice. Can any doubt, that many now in business would, under God, have become ministers of the Gospel? Let those business men answer, who have at times been rendered unhappy, for years past, by the compunctious visitings of conscience, owing to a conviction of having neglected their duty in this particular. And, again, let those answer (we believe there are many such,) who, though not rendered unhappy, like the former, by a consciousness of having disobeyed a Divine call, yet can look back with a distinct recollection that the influences brought to bear upon them by their parents and friends, had much to do in forming their plans for future life, and that those influences were unfavourable to their making choice of the ministerial office.

2. A further object which we have in view, in inviting attention to the above facts is, to remark that minsters' sons who have a good opportunity to learn the pecuniary pressures and trials incident to this office, are not deterred by these considerations from becoming preachers themselves. There are "shady sides" in the life of a minister, and these recur, in many cases, very often. Doubtless the people are too frequently in fault, in permitting those who "sow to them in spiritual things," to share with them so sparingly in "their carnal things." Yet these "shady sides" are greatly relieved of their gloomy aspect by the "sunny sides" with which ministers of the Gospel are favoured, consisting first of "food and raiment," with which a prince among the apostles declared we "ought to be content;" and secondly, of that "meat" which was so delicious to the spiritual taste of our Divine Lord, that his appetite for food was quite gone, so absorbed was he with the delightful prospect of reaping a rich harvest of souls. The office of the Gospel ministry offers little to tempt the avarice or ambition of an unsanctified aspirant for wealth or fame; and we are glad that it does not. It would be a great calamity to the Church, if this office became so lucrative as to be sought as a mere profession, for the purpose of acquiring an easy and honourable living. Even with the small incentives which now exist, instances occur occasionally of men's entering this office "for the sake of filthy lucre."

But though, as a profession, its duties are laborious and self-denying, and its pecuniary reward small and scanty, yet with moderate desires, and the provision which the law of Christ concerning ministerial support secures, as a general thing, from the churches, the faith of a pious young man need not be unduly taxed, in deciding to become a minister of the Gospel; especially if a part of his domestic training has been to be satisfied with the necessaries, or at most the comforts of life, without seeking its luxuries. And we know of no school in which this salutary and important lesson can be learned more effectually, than in a well-ordered and well-conducted minister's family. This may be an additional reason why such families furnish so many candidates for the sacred office. He who is thus taught in early life to be contented with a competence, and is made to feel happy in its possession, will not be averse to entering this profession on account of its small pecuniary income.

3. A third remark is also in point, in view of the above facts, viz., that if all pious parents should direct the minds of their sons to a serious and devout consideration of this question, and express their willingness and desire to have them become, by the blessing and will of God, ministers of the Gospel, it is highly probable that such families would furnish as many candidates for the sacred office, in proportion to the number of their sons, as the families of ministers. Though the Lord sometimes, in the exercise of his gracious sovereignty, calls into the ministry, as well as into his kingdom, men whose family connections are such as to render this result very unexpected, and even surprising to those around them, yet the history of his proceedings, with reference to this matter, shows that his ordinary method is to call his ministers from those households where it is regarded as an honour and privilege to have one of their number to become an ambassador of Christ, and to pass by those where this office is undervalued, or considered inferior to other pursuits, or where it is felt to be an act of condescension for persons of their social standing and high worldly prospects to engage in it. We should be glad to believe there are few Christian families who entertain these low and unworthy views concerning the Gospel ministry. If we estimate, as we ought, the worth of souls, and the important and dignified employment of those whose official duty is daily directed towards their conversion and salvation, we should not only consent without reluctance to have our sons called to engage in such a work, but feel grateful to God for conferring upon us and them this signal favour.—Presbyterian Magazine.

STATISTICS OF THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

The number of students in the several Theological Seminaries under the care of the General Assembly, or otherwise connected with the Presbyterian Church, (as nearly as we can ascertain,) is as follows:

Princeton, New Jersey,	115
Allegheny, Pennsylvania,	51
Union Seminary, Virginia,	29
Columbia, South Carolina,	32
New Albany, Indiana,	19
Danville, Kentucky,	37
Total,	283

We have official information that 4 are studying theology under private instruction; and it is highly probable that there are 12 or 15 others who are not officially reported. Supposing the whole number in Seminaries and elsewhere to be 300, the annual supply of ministers in our Church for the next three years will be about 100. In the Minutes of the last Assembly 41 ministers are reported as having died during the year; which is probably not a greater number than the average of deaths which may be expected to occur for three years to come. This will make our actual annual increase of ministers for the next three years about 60. From 1853 to 1854 the number of churches had increased by 97; which was less than may be anticipated hereafter, considering the constant increase of population, and the opening of new fields for missionary labour. But without any greater increase than heretofore, there will probably be 40 more new churches added to our communion annually than the number of licensures which will be granted to candidates. Unless, therefore, there is a great error in our calculations, or unless additional ministers shall come to us from other lands, the deficiency of ministers compared with the number of churches will be greater three years hence than it is now, to say nothing concerning the foreign field, which calls most urgently for a large increase of labourers, but the consideration of which makes our prospective deficiency of ministers still greater compared with the supply.

Our increase of candidates in colleges and academies affords some relief to this discouraging state of things, but this relief is not immediate. If ever there was occasion for the Church to offer her earnest and importunate prayers that men now engaged in other professions might be converted and called into the gospel ministry, there seems to be a demand for it now. It is well known that some of our most distinguished ministers of former days were called from the bar to the pulpit, and that a considerable number now engaged successfully in preaching the gospel have been students of law, and some of them reputable practitioners in our courts. Is it too much for the Church to ask and to expect of God, that many others of this class may be led in a similar manner to change their profession, and devote themselves to the "cure of souls?" We respectfully submit this question to the serious consideration of those who are devoutly "praying the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

Ministerial Fidelity.—If fidelity is required in him who takes upon him any secular charge, can too great attention, do you think, be given, in fulfiling that duty which embraces the salvation of mankind? "Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds, Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves; should not the shepherds feed their flocks? The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost. Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord; thus saith the Lord God: Behold I am against the shepherds, and I will require my flock at their hands." Let any man ponder well the force of these words, and then let him say, whether he to whom the salvation of those souls is committed for whom Christ died, can be too fervent in his prayers, or too urgent in his solicitations to "render them a people prepared for the Lord?" Can you conceive the remorse, the agony of that shepherd, who shall be overwhelmed with the reproaches of his flock, when they shall stand together at the tribunal of God, for having betrayed the most sacred trust which Divine love could commit, or human care undertake.—Clapham's Sermon.

Flights of Rhetoric.—I have not found that God hath made much use of laboured periods, rhetorical flowers, and elegancies, to improve the power of religion in the world; yea, I have observed how Providence hath sometimes rebuked good men when they have too much affected these pedantic fooleries, in withdrawing from them his usual aids, and exposing them to shame.—Flonel.

"Pray that Sermon."—A young licentiate, after throwing off a highly wrought, and, as he thought, eloquent Gospel sermon, in the pulpit, and in presence of a venerable pastor, solicited of his experienced friend the benefit of his criticisms upon the performance.

"I have but just one remark to make," was his reply, "and that is to request you to pray that sermon."

"What do you mean, Sir?"

"I mean just literally what I say—pray it, if you can, and you will find the attempt a better criticism than any I can make upon it."

The request still puzzled the young man beyond measure. The idea of praying a sermon was a thing he never heard or conceived of; and the singularity of the suggestion wrought powerfully on his imagination and feelings. He resolved to attempt the task. He laid his manuscript before him, and on his knees before God, undertook to make it into a prayer. But it wouldn't pray; the spirit of prayer was not in it, and that for the very good reason—as he then clearly saw for the first time—that the spirit of prayer and piety did not compose it. For the first time, he saw that his heart was not right with God; and this conviction left him no peace until he had "Christ formed in him the hope of glory." With a renewed heart, he applied himself anew to the work of composing sermons for the pulpit; preached again in the presence of the pious pastor who had given such timely advice; and again solicited the benefit of his critical remarks.

"I have no remarks to make," was the complacent reply. "You can pray that sermon."

The Scriptures should be Perused Daily.—Such being the utility, excellence, and perfection of the Holy Scriptures, since they are not only the best guide we can consult, but the only one that can make us "wise unto salvation," it becomes the indispensable duty of all carefully and constantly to peruse these Sacred Oracles, that, through them, they may become "perfect, thoroughly furnished to every good work." This indeed is not only agreeable to the divine command, and to the design of the Scriptures, but it is further commended to us, by the practice of the Church in ancient as well as in modern times, and by the gracious promise made by Him who cannot lie, to all true believers, that "they shall all be taught of God."

What time is to be appropriated for this purpose, must ever depend upon the circumstances of the individual. It is obvious that some time ought daily to be devoted to this important study, and that it should be undertaken with devout simplicity and humility; prosecuted with diligence and attention; accompanied by prayer for the divine aid and teaching, together with a sincere desire to know and perform the will of God, and laying aside all prejudice, to follow the Scriptures wherever conviction may lead our minds. For it is indubitable that persons of piety, who are anxiously desirous of the knowledge of divine truth, are aided by the Spirit of God, in searching out the meaning of Scripture, particularly in such subjects as have an especial reference to faith and religious practice.—Bishop Horne.

More Frequent Preaching.—I would encourage theological students to preach more frequently than they generally do. I would not have them neglect their studies. But an important branch of their studies should be the composition and delivery of sermons; and the maxim that "practice makes perfect" applies to no one more truly than a minister. I shall never forget the remark made to me when I was a young preacher. When once putting the day of preaching afar off, under feelings of unfitness and despondency, my honored tutor observed, "The way to learn to preach, is to preach." Those words have come to my mind at distant intervals for more than forty years; and I am more confirmed in their truth than when they were first delivered. I would have young men study prayerfully, diligently, patiently, perseveringly. I would have them meditate on all good and appropriate knowledge; but until they accustom themselves to give utterance to the proper capacity to do so. "The way to learn to preach, is to preach.—Rev. Dr. Sharp.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

COLLEGE STATISTICS.

The following statistics were gathered from the reports made on the recent day of prayer, (Feb. 22d,) from the most of the Colleges represented in Princeton Theological Seminary. From the nature of the case, these reports cannot be made out with perfect accuracy, but it is believed that they approximate a correct result to a degree sufficient to make them useful.

If all our Theological Seminaries would annually on the day of prayer take pains to collect accurate reports similar in design to the present, it would form the basis of a knowledge which would be very valuable to the Church. We would respectfully make the suggestion to our brethren.

State of the Colleges represented in Princeton Theological Seminary for the year 1854.

Dartmouth College, N. H.

During twelve years this institution has had from two hundred to two hundred and fifty students yearly. About one-third have been members of Evangelical churches, and one-sixth of the whole number have had the ministry in view.

Probably there is the same proportion of pious students in the lower classes.

Three months since the College enjoyed a revival of religion: there were four hopeful conversions.

Washington College, Pa.

No. of students, about	150

About one-fourth are professors of religion, twenty or twenty-five of the whole number will probably study for the ministry.

All the classes recite weekly in the Presbyterian standards. The effect is salutary.

Oglethorpe University, Ga.

No. of students,	65

About one-third are professors of religion, ten candidates for ministry.

There is no general religious interest. The number of pious students rather smaller just now than usual.

Hanover College, Ia.

No. of students,	135
" professors of religion,	65
" candidates for ministry,	32

After the above was in type, we received the following facts from one of the professors of Hanover College, Ia.

Prior to 1848 more than 100 ministers had received their classical education in that Institution. Since then, 94 candidates for the ministry have entered that College, who received or are now receiving aid from the Board of Education; and a considerable number have entered the ministry who had not received aid from the Board, and several are now looking forward to the ministry, who defray their own expenses and have not put themselves under the care of Presbytery. Of the 130 students now attending college, 65 are consistent professors of religion, of which 54 are Presbyterians, 3 are Methodists, 1 is a Baptist, and 1 an Associate. The large majority of the other students are the children of prayer, and are exemplary and studious. Of the 54 Presbyterians, 19 have been received into the church at Hanover, after they entered college.

Wabash College, Ia.

No. of students in all the departments,	200
" " " " College proper,	52

Probably one-third of the whole number are professors of religion.

During the last fifteen years, of eighty-eight Alumni, forty have become ministers.

About five hopeful conversions during the last College year. A class has never gone through College without experiencing a revival of religion.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE, TENN.

No. of students, about - - - - 100

But few are professors of religion.

There was a revival of religion last fall at the College; two of the students were added to the church. Probably others were converted.

BETHANY PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY, N. Y.

In a communication recently received from this institution, the writer says, "It is with great pleasure that we can report our academy as in a more prosperous condition than ever before. The late term closed with ninety-five pupils. Total number of (different) pupils during the year, one hundred and thirty-three. But best of all, God's Spirit has been in our midst during the last few weeks. At least twelve of our pupils give evidence of having been born again. Others are inquiring. Among the conversions is our teacher of music." . . . . . "We hope for greater results in answer to the prayers that will go up in our behalf to-morrow."

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL IN WISCONSIN.

The following is an extract from the last quarterly report of a parochial school in Wisconsin.

"The whole number of scholars has been thirty-eight; they have been taught the Catechism regularly, and several wholly committed it. We have also had the daily reading of the Scriptures and prayer, and there appears a manifest difference in the deportment and conduct of our scholars, from those who are under the influence of the public schools. The whole expense incurred by sustaining the school, has been $228.25, with permanent fixtures to our school-room and other expenses, amounting to $56.68, making in all, $284.93, leaving $184.93 paid by us over the $100 allowed us by the kindness of your Board, of which, $50 has been received, and $50 we still await your further pleasure for. Perhaps I ought here to state that all of the supporters of this school, by law are compelled to pay a tax to help to keep up the district schools, but which they do not feel as if they desired to send to, so long as this can be sustained. The term now in progress is fuller than the two previous ones, and the prejudice which seemed to arm itself against us in the start is slowly giving way, and the manifesto of the State Superintendent of public instruction in his circular, opposing prayer and religious exercises in school, induces us more earnestly to desire to sustain our school that we may keep our children from the irreligious influence of our present public schools."

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL IN NEW YORK.

The school from which the following interesting account has just been received, is located in western New York. After mentioning some discouraging circumstances, the report proceeds as follows:

"But there are circumstances connected with our efforts which encourage us to persevere, trusting to Him whose cause we are endeavouring to serve. We are, and have always been to some extent, performing a 'missionary work' in our school, by admitting scholars without charge, who would otherwise get little or no religious instruction; and the Lord has been greatly pleased to show us that our labours have not been utterly in vain. We are well assured that many, for whom, apparently, no other provision was made, have here obtained their first and only ideas of the Christian religion. One little boy, the son of irreligious parents, has died within the last year. During his sickness he was prone to talk of God and of heaven, and of his desire to die and be with the Saviour. When asked where he had learned such things, his answer was—'at the parochial school.' A woman to whom these facts were related, made application to have her son received into the school, saying she wanted him taught in like manner, the Bible and commandments and catechism. This woman and her husband are both irreligious, and do not attend church anywhere. The boy was received, and is now also in our Sabbath-school, and every week carries our Sabbath-school books and papers to his parents. A lady asked him one day—'Are you the little boy that swears?' He replied—"No madam. I used to swear, but I don't now—I go to the Parochial school.'

"Incidents like these are truly encouraging; and we are not without hope, that, by perseverance, our difficulties may be overcome, and our school may ultimately be placed upon a paying basis as to its pecuniary interests. That it has already done a good work, a work worth all our pains, not only for those that have attended, but in its general influence upon the public schools, we have not a doubt. Nor do we doubt that it is still needed—not so much for our own children, who generally receive religious instruction at home and in the Sabbath-school, as for others. While, therefore, we are not without anxiety for its fate, it is our present purpose to persevere."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America the sum of ——— dollars to and for the uses of the said Board of Education and under its direction.

[When real estate or other property is given, let it be particularly described.]

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, New York, March 13th, 1855.

India.—The latest intelligence from India is, from Lodiana, Dec. 20th; Gujerat, near Lahor, Dec. 12th; Mympurie, Dec. 19th; Saharanpur, Dec. 16th; Amballa, Dec. 5th. The missionaries at these different stations were all in the enjoyment of good health. Mr. Janvier, however, as also Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph, had recently been called to mourn the loss of a dear child. In relation to his, Mr. Janvier, after alluding to the death of his beloved wife, which occurred some months previously, says: "You will probably have heard, before this reaches you, of the further stroke the Lord has been pleased to lay upon me. My precious Walter is gone too. The dear child finished his brief, bright earthly career on the 26th of October. Fearfully sudden was the blow. His illness was very short, and occasioned me no alarm till within an hour of his departure. He was my Benjamin, but he was the Lord's too. He took only what belonged to him, and at such a time and in such a way as he saw best. My heart bleeds anew, as I again detail my sorrows, and I must still say, 'Peace! 'tis the Lord Jehovah's hand.'" In relation to the death of the other child, Mr. Janvier further remarks, "Death has been much among us in these days. Our dear brother and sister Rudolph have just been afflicted in the loss of their youngest child, a babe of seven months. He died at Lahor, where they were detained by his illness, after the annual meeting. The remains were sent here for interment, and I had the sad privilege of attending to the duty last week. We opened the coffin, and took a last look at the sweet lamb. Very lovely was the little face. But I am reminded of the unearthly beauties that played about the features of my precious Walter, after the released spirit had gone, and I must again forbear."

Mr. Foreman, writing from Gujerat, a large town to the northwest of Lahor, makes some interesting statements about the prospects of the missionary work in that part of the country. "We have not been without encouragement of late in our work; not a few of the Musulmans have shown a greater disposition to inquire into the claims of Christianity. Three men and their wives lately came to us as inquirers; another Musulman from the city has also joined us, broken caste, and asked for baptism.

"A young man from Gujerat, who avows his determination to embrace Christianity, is now standing by me. Besides these, two boys, in the poor-house at Lahor, who have learned to read our books, have expressed a desire to be baptised."

The Annual Report of the Lodiana Mission contains an interesting account of the death of one of the girls of the Orphan School. "Miriam was about fourteen years of age. Although she had not become a member of the visible Church, yet there seemed to be cheering evidence that she was indeed a child of God. Her illness was protracted, and, at the commencement of it, she had many doubts and fears; but gradually the darkness fled away, and she was enabled to lay her load on Jesus. Her Bible and Hymn Book, the Pilgrim's Progress, and the story of Jane, the Young Cottager, were always near her; and when too weak to read herself, she would ask those around to read to her. On being asked why she loved Jesus, she answered: 'Because He bore my sins.' Instead of evincing, as formerly, a reluctance to die, she had a strong desire to depart, and be with Christ; and thus she died, trusting in the atonement of the crucified One."

China.—The only intelligence received from the missions in China since our last, are two letters, one from Shanghai, of Nov. 24th, and the other from Canton, Dec. 9th. Mr. Culbertson's health became so much impaired during the months of October and November, that he found it necessary to take a sea-voyage; and, through the kindness of Mr. McLane, U. S. Commissioner to China, he got a passage on board the U. S. steamer Powhatan to Hong-Kong, where he arrived the 1st December, and proceeded the next day to Canton. The sea-voyage had proved decidedly beneficial, and he hoped soon to return to Shanghai, to resume his labours, with health greatly improved. He speaks of the trade at Canton as entirely suspended, in consequence of the surrounding country being in the hands of rebels. No produce could be brought to the market, and ships consequently could not load. The city, however, is not yet very closely pressed.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowrie had entered upon their labours at Shanghai, and were devoting their time mainly to the study of the language.

Siam.—The only intelligence from this mission of a recent date, is a letter from Mr. Mattoon, of the 27th of November. He and Mrs. Mattoon were in the enjoyment of good health, and were prosecuting their missionary labours as usual. Dr. House had left the early part of the month, on a preaching tour to the upper country and expected to be absent about a month. The missionaries were greatly cheered in hearing of the appointment of Mr. and Mrs. Carleton to their mission, and hoped soon to have the pleasure of welcoming them at Bangkok.

Africa.—The latest dates from Africa, are from Corisco, 15th November, from Monrovia, December 2d; Sinou, December 15th. The missionaries at Corisco, were well, and the schools had been resumed, and all their missionary operations were going on as usual. The new Presbyterian church at Kentucky, was dedicated to the worship of God the latter part of November, and the congregation was enjoying special tokens of the Divine presence at the date of our latest letters.

Indians.—We have letters from the Choctaw mission, February 15th; Chickasaw, January 24th; Creek, February 14th; Seminole, January 3d; Chippewa, February 5th; Iowa and Sac, February 8th; Omaha, February 6th. Mr. Reid, in a letter dated 29th January, mentions that five persons had been received to the communion of the church at Sixtowns, and five at Spencer, a few weeks previous to the date of his letter. Of those received at Spencer, three were colored persons and two were members of the schools. He remarks, "there is much seriousness now among the boys of the school. There is also an interesting state of things in one of the neighbouring schools. I have never in all my life, preached to people who give such fixed and earnest attention as this people."

At Tallahassee the mission family were all well, with the exception of Miss Price, who had gone to Park Hill, to be under the care of Dr. Hitchcock. Her sickness was not regarded as serious, and it was hoped that she would return soon in improved health. There had been a good deal of sickness in the country, but the members of the school had been favoured with unusually good health through the winter.

Mr. Dougherty mentions that three Indians had been received to the church at Grand Traverse, at their last communion, and that six others had applied to be received to the church, but it was thought best to postpone their reception to the next sacramental occasion.

CIRCULAR.

The following circular was prepared something more than a month ago, and forwarded by mail to a large number of Christian friends in different parts of the Church, and we are happy to say that it has met with a prompt and generous response from a few individuals. Only a small proportion of the necessary amount, however, has yet been received, and we have determined, therefore, to lay it before our readers generally, in the hope that their benevolence may be stirred up, and the entire amount be made up before the end of April.

Mission House, No. 23 Centre Street,
New York, February 1st, 1855.

Dear Sir—You will remember that a deep feeling of interest was awakened in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, at their meeting in Philadelphia, in the Spring of 1853, in behalf of the Waldensian Church, by the presence and heart-stirring address of the Rev. J. P. Revel, the Moderator of their Synod. Under the influence of this feeling, the General Assembly made an earnest appeal to the Churches under their care, to aid these devoted and faithful Christian brethren in carrying on the work of evangelization, which they had begun, and were prosecuting with so much zeal and fidelity. It was thought especially desirable that the Presbyterian Church should endow their Theological Seminary at La Tour, and as only $20,000 was needed and asked for this purpose, assurances were given by several of the leading members of the Church, that this sum should be raised at an early day. At the Mission House, this object has been kept constantly in view; statements have been made in the missionary journals in relation to it from time to time, and all the contributions forwarded for this object have been reported in the same way with those that were contributed for the general missionary work. And whilst there is cause of gratitude for many generous contributions to this fund by individual members of the Church, we lament the necessity we are under, of stating that $10,000 is still needed to complete this endowment.

It is exceedingly desirable, for various reasons, that this sum should be raised before the next Annual Meeting of the General Assembly; and in view of this, an appeal would be made to the Churches generally, were it not for the fear that it would interfere with the ordinary collections for missionary purposes, which cannot be disturbed at the present time, without great detriment to the missionary work generally. In view of this state of the case, we have thought it expedient to make this appeal to a few of the lay members of the Church in different parts of the country, whom God has blessed with more abundant resources than the generality of their Christian brethren, and who, we have no doubt, would feel it a privilege as well as duty, to contribute of their substance to this most important object.

The Waldenses have peculiar advantages, under the mild and liberal government which they enjoy at the present time, for promoting the cause of evangelical religion in the various States of Italy; and the zeal with which they have embraced the first respite from persecution, to engage in this labour of love, induces the hope that their future history will be as remarkable for their efficiency in spreading abroad the gospel, as their past has been for steady and unwavering endurance of suffering for its sake. There is no way in which the members of our Church can participate more heartily in the labours of these faithful witnesses of the truth, or render them more effectual aid, than by contributing to the endowment of the Theological Seminary at La Tour, where it is hoped many faithful ministers will be trained to preach the gospel in all parts of Southern Europe, and ultimately, in more remote parts of the earth.

It has been suggested that if a plan were adopted to get a hundred individuals to subscribe $100 each, the requisite sum would be secured at once. But as there are those who would like to contribute, without being able to give as much, and others who, out of their abundance, would be willing to give more, we would not propose any definite sum, but leave it with each individual to contribute according as God has given the means. At the request of Dr. Revel, the money already received for this endowment has been invested in this country, and the same arrangement will be made in relation to what may be raised hereafter, the interest being forwarded semi-annually to defray the current expenses of the Institution.

Any contributions for this object may be forwarded to William Rankin, Jr., Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions, No. 23 Centre street, New York.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. H. V. RANKIN.

Kind treatment.

Leaving the boat, our party after breakfast started first for Ha-pee. Here the chair-bearers found it necessary to stop for a half hour, which the people, who had never before seen a foreign lady or child, enjoyed the full benefit of. While I remained in the street by the chairs, the two ladies went by invitation into a neighbouring house, where, however, the crowd soon compelled them to seek refuge up stairs. But the privacy of this apartment proved no obstacle to the neighbours, and they found it more satisfactory to come down. They had abundant opportunity to give an account of themselves, as they were plied with nearly every question that female curiosity could call forth. It gratified the people however, exceedingly, to have them reply, which of course they took pleasure in doing, though they did not have the opportunity of imparting religious truth. That they could answer them in their own language greatly surprised the women, and more especially when they discovered that they knew what the bystanders were talking about. The excessive curiosity of this people was, however, unaccompanied with rudeness, and they gave us a good natured "good-bye"—"come again," when we left. Just out of the town, one of the richest men there invited us into his house, but for fear of being too much delayed we were obliged this time to refuse his invitation. Soon after, we reached the brow of the mountain pass, overlooking a beautiful plain on the one side, and the sea on the other. We hurried on a few miles further by the sea-board, and reached Long-san-su. This is a walled city, built, with many others, in the Ming dynasty, as a protection against the Japanese; though the walls are now so overgrown with grass as hardly from a distance to appear. The inhabitants are very few, and live much scattered. Everything appears very old. An elderly scholar, who seemed to be a head-man among them, invited us to go into the only temple we saw in the place, and treated us with great kindness. Tea was prepared for us, and a dinner would have been furnished had we consented. Here, as again on the walls, I addressed the people who had collected, and answered all their questions. Mrs. Rankin had a long conversation with a Ningpo woman, who had come to that secluded spot, and had lived there nine years, seeking for more perfection than she had yet attained—passing her time in her mode of fasting and prayer. Just outside the west gate is a flourishing village through which we passed, and another still further, on the east side. This is as pleasant and cleanly a village as I have yet seen in China. Several rich men reside in it, one of them cordially invited me into his shop to take tea with him, which I accepted. Just opposite was an establishment where this grateful beverage was gratuitously distributed to the chair-bearers, as it is daily to all passers by. The object of this benevolence is invariably to secure merit. We passed through several other villages, and in all of them distributed tracts and books, and spoke an occasional word as opportunity was given. We returned by another and more picturesque mountain-pass to our boat. We all enjoyed the trip exceedingly, and none more than our little boys, who walked a full three miles, including the whole of the steep pass over the mountain. The people everywhere were greatly taken with a foreign child, rather too much indeed, for his own comfort at Ha-pee, where he was frightened at the uproar. We returned towards evening, and passed a score of villages, at each of which I got out for a few moments to distribute books. Late at night we were all safely at home.

Trip to Yu-yias and Shang-yu—Distribution of books—Canal boatmen—Cordial reception.

June 23d, 1854.—Brother S. Martin and I returned yesterday from a more extensive trip than any we have yet taken. Having laid in a large supply of books, we left on Monday night to go up the river, with Shih-neaon and Ling-yiu, two of the young Christians. The tide became favourable at midnight, and at daybreak we found ourselves sailing among beautiful scenery, which indeed prevails after we had passed the first range of hills. At nine o'clock we stopped for half an hour at a town which seemed never to have been visited before. We were obliged however, to hasten on, lest the tide should fail. I found ample employment in taking a sketch of the windings of the river, and marking the names of the villages we passed, while Brother Martin made use of his musical powers (wherein he is more blessed than I,) in singing hymns with the young men who accompanied us. At two P.M., we reached Yu-yias, forty miles from Ningpo, where we went ashore at once and spent the whole afternoon; we divided the place between us, each being accompanied by a native Christian, and thus must have visited nearly all the shops. When our books were exhausted, we went to the boat after more. After my books were nearly all gone the fourth time, I went up to the top of the city walls and preached to the crowd who had followed. Again, after sundown, on the bridge, I had another excellent opportunity of making known the word of truth to the people, who said, "You must come again and tell us more of these things."

This bridge is of three broad and well built arches, and communicates between the old and new cities, both of which are surrounded by walls. In one of the cities is an ancient palace, built in memory of royalty. Yu-yias was attacked by the British in the war, though not many lives were sacrificed. It belongs to another department, and its dialect is somewhat different from that of Ningpo, though we had little difficulty on that score. We were treated well in general, both in the shops and streets, and received no insult further than an occasional, though always unsuccessful, attempt to snatch away books. Shih-neaou, who accompanied me, was not so fortunate, for the crowd on the bridge beset him at once, and got away most of his books. He could only express his indignation at the want of politeness, and rejoined me quite crest-fallen.

Before midnight, we were again on our way still further up the river, and at two in the morning, entered a canal, one that is called the "lower sluice." As the canal is several feet higher than the level of the river, by the help of two capstans, boats are pulled up an inclined plane to the top, whence they slide down on the other side. The sluices are often paved with large stones, covered with mud, which becomes very slippery. There are people living near by the sluices, (which are very common,) hired for the purpose of turning the capstans. As it was night, however, they were naturally slow in making their appearance, though their steps were soon quickened, by the boatmen calling out that we were messengers from the Mandarins on important business. This abominable duplicity had the further effect of saving themselves the ordinary fee. On our return, however, we exposed the deceit and paid the sluicemen a double allowance. All our reproofs to the boatmen, however, were of no avail; for as soon as we reached the "middle sluice," five miles further on, they attempted the same scheme, which we at once put a stop to. Nothing seems to be more natural than lying to Chinese boatmen.

At daybreak we were in sight of the walls of Shang-yu, (Zong-nyu according to our dialect.) It promised to be a hot day, but we had our work to do. We concluded to keep quiet and out of sight however, until we had breakfasted, after which we had the boat drawn up to the water (west) gate, through which it could have entered, but as yet we knew not how the people would receive us, for as yet no foreigner had been near the city. We concluded, therefore, to carry as many books as we could, and to keep together, until it was evident that all would be well. We soon found, however, everything so favourable, that, as usual, we divided, so as to go over as much of the city as we could. Our experience of good will on the part of the people, was the same. One man indeed came up to me with some concern, to know what we were doing there, and two refused to accept books; but, as an offset to this, many invited us into their shops, some of which invitations we accepted, and freely talked to the people. One venerable gentleman came out with tea, of which he insisted that I should drink the whole; another man called me into his house, and collected a few of his neighbours to talk with me: and as in Yu-yias, the Ningpo shopkeepers were especially cordial and communicative. We each addressed the people once or twice, though the extreme heat of the day, and the difference in dialects restricted us in this department of labour. Those who did collect about us were more respectable in appearance than ordinary audiences at Ningpo, and were all quiet. They urged us to talk more, and seemed to get a general idea at last of our discourses. In this our first visit, we thought it prudent not to protract our stay, and we accordingly left the same day, hoping to return after the summer is over, and see whether any good results have flowed from the day's work. We rejoiced that the Lord had thus opened our way, and permitted us so satisfactorily to distribute pages of sacred truth. O that these little messengers may be the means of leading some souls to Christ!

The country is beautiful about Shang-yu. On one of the hills overlooking the city, stands a large square pagoda, the shadow of which, the people say, produces a swelling in the limbs, which is quite prevalent in that neighbourhood! In so quiet and secluded a city, we were surprised to find a good deal of business done. It probably has much dealing with the country further south-west, and we may hereafter, from this point, advance in this direction more into the interior. A Frenchman has recently returned from a distant trip into the province for purposes of merchandize, and for us it will be still safer, for he knew nothing of the language, and yet experienced no harm.

Return to Ningpo—Rich men and scholars—Encouraging views.

On our return, we passed by Yu-yias, late at night, and early the following morning, were by the first range of hills above Ningpo. Here we stopped awhile, to see some stone-quarries, at a place called Da-ying, and then proceeded to a considerable town, called Pun-pu. While I was employed in that, and contiguous places, Brother Martin crossed the river and visited two villages some distance off. In this whole neighbourhood a good many rich men and scholars reside, though there are but few shops. We had in consequence to go from house to house, and were received with different degrees of respect, though in general with hospitality. The scattered situation of the houses required a good deal of walking, and I was in consequence more exposed to the hot sun than usual, the effect of which has since been rather disagreeable.

We returned Thursday evening, delighted with our trip, in almost every respect. We were permitted to visit two distant cities, and scores of towns and villages, scarcely any of which had been visited before, to preach more or less fully in many of them the Gospel of Christ, and to distribute several thousands of pages of religious and otherwise instructive truth. The way is open for further visiting these places, and, we trust, of extending our efforts to regions still beyond. Everywhere we have been well received; and our faith has been strengthened we hope, by all the way in which we have been led. The trip will probably also be of benefit to the young men who accompanied us. We can but hope, too, that God in his infinite mercy will accompany the means which we have been permitted to employ, with the saving influences of His Holy Spirit.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. J. M. JAMIESON.

Visit to a sacred bathing-place—Brahman harpies—Hindu notions about Ceylon—A temple and its ornaments—Questionable application for a book.

Visited the bathing-place this morning, and preached twice. Found many readers among the Brahmans, but very few of them would take books. They would rather have pice. The river is at present quite dry in many places, and it is only by yearly excavating the channel that the interested priests can preserve a little muddy water in the holy place. Around this they hover like vultures over a frog pond, and pounce upon the poor pilgrims with no less rapacity than their feathered representatives snatch up their unconscious prey. Each Brahman had a huge volume filled with the names of his customers. Many of these lists extend back five or six hundred years. They have been handed down from the fathers to the sons, who claim the right of fleecing the descendants of all the past generations whose names are in their books, whether they perform any sacred rites for them or not. These harpies saunter out, book in hand, four or five miles in all directions, in search of pilgrims, and demand of them where they hail from, and their names. Should their ancestors have been so unfortunate as to be booked, they seize upon them as their spoil. It is amusing, as well as mournful, to see the schemes of the Brahmans to entrap the pilgrims, and their eagerness to avoid paying the fees. They sometimes form squares and advance to the attack quick step, and while the priests are securing the outer lines, the centre break through and escape, only to be caught by another band of book men. They, poor creatures, don't like to pay the parson any better than many worthy people in America, and think it no sin to give him the go-by when they can.

22*d*.—Have spent this day at the same place. Went out in the morning to preach. Had a large and attentive audience, and gave away a good many books. In the course of my remarks, I told the Brahmans I had seen Ceylon, and had proved what their Shastres state concerning it to be false. It is written in them that Ceylon is inhabited by demons, that the houses and forts are built of solid gold, and that Ram, when he conquered the island, broke down the bridge which connected it with the main land, and that since that period no man can approach it. On the contrary, I told them, Ceylon belongs to the English, and its houses and inhabitants are the same as in Hindustan. My statement called forth much astonishment, but no one called in question my veracity. I advised them to send a deputation, and ascertain whether the Shastres or I were false.

Saw a splendid temple, built a few years ago by a celebrated faquir named Saib Náth. It must have cost some $50,000. This is only one of many, equally splendid, which he built at other places. He collected all his immense wealth by begging. The temple is in the usual style of Hindu architecture, and is covered with figures of men, monkeys, birds, and beasts, in paint and stucco, more grotesque than ever Punch delineated. In hundreds of niches sat squatted faquirs in pristine dignity, and with stomachs a la Falstaff. Here stood the picture of a demon, in bright colours, with five arms. In one hand he held a sword, in a second a spear, in a third a club, in a fourth a human head just severed from the body, and in the fifth a bottle, from which he was in the act of drinking. There were avatars and demons, fighting furiously; tigers devouring men; serpents with heads erect, and forked tongues protruded; and, to crown all, Englishmen sitting on chairs, surrounded by servants administering to their wants cordials in the shape of beer-bottles and glasses!

> "Mighty and beautiful, but given
> To idols of a creed profane;
> They cast the shade of earth on heaven,
> By fancies monstrous, vile and vain."

How different from the emblems of the gospel of peace and purity which adorn the true Christian temple!

After my return to my tent, a man came to me and said his son was so vexed at my not giving him a book in the bazar, that he had been raving and rolling on the ground ever since; that he had come to get one for him as the only way to please him. I declined giving the book, and prescribed the free use of the rod instead thereof. I suspect the whole story was a hoax. The shades of night have again gathered around me, and the toils of another day have ended. How sweet, in the stillness of my sylvan home, to commune with a reconciled God, and my own soul. To him I commit my labours, self, and all dear to me.

PAPAL EUROPE.

The following report, by the Evangelical Society of Geneva, of the labours of two Evangelists in the southern part of France, whose support is furnished by the Board, gives an encouraging view of the prospects of Evangelical religion in that part of the world, and will be read with lively interest on this account, as well as for the very interesting facts and statements which it contains.

STATIONS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF T——.

I.—Station of G——.

A faithful and devoted Evangelist.

In our last report on the stations of T., in May, 1853, we said that the health of our dear Evangelist C., which had been severely tried during the last year, began to recover, and the account which he gave of his labours, showed no cessation of activity. We can now, thank God, say that he is going on most favourably, and has been able to undertake his missionary excursions with renewed activity, and even his preaching in the different villages in the mountains of T. However, care is still requisite, but the zeal of our faithful agent is so great, he will seldom consent to take care of himself, and as soon as he regains a little strength, he begins his labours at once. The doctor at G., thinking it would do him good to take the waters of V., (Department of A.) for three weeks, the committee gladly agreed to the plan, but C. could hardly be persuaded to leave the new converts in T., even for a few days. In June he writes to us, "I do not think you should go to any more expense for me, you have already done enough, and though deeply grateful for your good intentions, I think that your money would be a thousand times better bestowed, in furthering the Redeemer's cause. As I feel my strength gradually returning, I trust that my Saviour will restore that measure of it, of which illness has deprived me, so that I may continue my walks. Last Saturday, at A., when I saw three-fourths of the inhabitants assembled to hear God's word, my conscience would not permit me to go and play the gentleman at V., and leave these dear people hungering for the bread of life." However, we thought it right to insist on C's trying this remedy, and we are rejoiced to be able to add, by the mercy of God, it has succeeded admirably. He wrote some days after his return, to us: "I am convinced of the efficacy of the waters of V., for my health; the Lord, in his infinite mercy, has blessed them to my recovery, for on Sunday, I was able to preach twice in the open air, in the morning at A., and in the evening at V., without feeling the slightest fatigue. Thanks, then, for the great sacrifice that you have made for me, and above all, thanks to my merciful Saviour, who has made the fruits of your liberality, effectual to his unworthy servant. May he enable me to show my gratitude by my Christian demeanour."

Labours of the Evangelist, while seeking the restoration of health.

Besides, even this was not lost time in the gospel service, for our friend was enabled to preach Jesus Christ, to the 2,000 bathers at V., where his heart was saddened, to find so much superstition and materialism. He also was rejoiced, to be able to preach the truth at the Sabbath meetings. His trials have extended to his family, for one of his daughters has been dangerously ill, and his delicate wife obliged to nurse her. But the Lord was with them! and he writes, "the frequent exercise that my poor wife was obliged to take in nursing our child, whom we could not leave, night or day, has done her so much good, that she can walk with a stick, and even get down to the street. If you only knew what pleasure that gives me! Oh! is not the goodness of the Lord great!"

Desire to hear the pure Gospel.

During the summer, C. continued visiting the places he had already evangelized, and new ones also. He finds that the people are everywhere disposed to listen to the preaching of Jesus Christ. At A., a village at some leagues distance from G., where a meeting was advertised, the only room they could procure for it was much too small, the passage and even the staircase were filled. The exhortations of our brother had such an effect upon the numerous assembly, that regular meetings have been held there ever since, with the same enthusiasm, notwithstanding the violent opposition of the curé, and the difficulty of finding a suitable room. This place is somewhat remarkable, because, before the revocation of the edict of Nantes, all the inhabitants were Protestants. May the Lord enable those who labour in that field now, to take up the work of the first reformation, and to place the gospel again in the position from which persecution alone drove it. "The baker of the village has lent us a large building, consisting of four walls, and an opening in the centre of the roof for light, at the end of which is his oven. There, having placed a small table, and the Bible upon it, I had a range of loaves which were around the oven behind me, and the bread of life in front, with more than 200 people, of all ranks, who were seeking the Lord, while I meditated upon Isaiah i. 18. What am I, O my God, that I should be permitted to speak of such lofty subjects. They are so holy, purify thou my lips and loosen my tongue—I cried out in my prayer, and my merciful Saviour heard my supplication and came to my aid, he sustained me by his presence, and touched the hearts of several of my congregation, who asked to converse with me after the meeting."

He writes later, about the same village: "I am happy to say the Lord has smoothed our path; as to a place of meeting, I have been enabled to hire a large room, which the proprietor has fitted up with benches. I went to announce this to the mayor, and invited him to join our meetings. He received me very well, and provided it made no disturbances in the country, said, he had no objections to our proceedings. I took advantage of this observation, to speak to him of the true basis of all preaching, the two great points, love to God, and to our neighbours, thus, directing him to Christ."

We have often spoken of the village of A., where a remarkable revival took place, and where a small congregation of humble Christians bear a noble testimony to Evangelical truth, in the midst of fanaticism and superstition. There are hot springs at A., whose fame is on the increase, and numerous bathers come from both France and Switzerland to them. This year, Mr. D., a minister of the Evangelical church, at G., was there for his health, and was enabled to preach the truth often, while our Evangelist was at V. The room is now much too small, for not only have we a congregation of 50 converted Catholics, but in summer, the Protestant visitors also attend. A larger and more suitable place is so much the more requisite, as many Catholics would then come to hear the message of salvation. An Englishman living at G., has offered to give the ground necessary, and we hope to be able to construct a modest building, capable of containing the chapel and the school; contributions to procure the 7 or 8,000 francs, required for this object, have been set agoing at G. The need for this building, shows the progress of the truth at A., and we earnestly trust the money may be forthcoming. The Jansenist families, whom our Evangelist has visited for some time at G., continue to give satisfaction. Without being completely converted, they stand out against the errors of the Roman Catholic church, and keep strictly to the Bible, which they read steadily. They even try to dispose of copies of it, which greatly assists C. This respect for the word of God, detaches them more and more from man, and from those whom the Romish church call saints.

A steadfast convert from Popery.

"Mrs. P. asked me," writes C., "why we had not at least the image of Christ in our churches and houses, as our faith reposed on Him alone? I read the first verse of the xx. ch. of Exodus, to her. This lady has a great veneration for the Bible; she said, 'You are always right;' she told me that her eldest grand-daughter had found this sentence in her catechism, 'No salvation out of the church!' Then followed the question, 'Who are those out of the church?' Answer, 'The Mahometans, Jews, Protestants,' &c. The child expressed her astonishment, saying, 'Oh! it is not possible, dear grandmamma, that our good Mr. C., who is a Protestant, should be out of the church, and not be saved; for, of all those who come to see us, he is the only one who speaks always about God, the gospel, and Jesus Christ, and gives us those nice little books, which make us cry; and the Jews are not cast out either, for I read in my Bible, that 'all Israel shall be saved.'"

We heard lately from our Evangelist, of a man at

G., a Roman Catholic by birth, whom God has led, through his means, to the truth as it is Jesus. Finding himself ill, he was taken to the hospital, where our Protestants are sadly tormented as to their faith. The Sisters of Charity who attend in the room where he is, not being able to bring him back to the church, sent the curé to him, who tried first to make him confess. "God be praised," said he, "I confess many times a day." "And who is your confessor?" "The eternal God, who knows our inmost thoughts." "Come, come, no joking, I know you were born in the Roman Catholic church." "It is true, I was born in it, but the gospel has enlightened me, and I"——"Yes, yes, you mean to say, you are a good Catholic." You are right, sir, I hope, through Christ's merits, to be a member of the Catholic church, and even of the Apostolical, but not of the Romish." "It is true, then, that you have left the religion of your fathers at the very moment when it is spreading over all the world." The curé proceeded to relate to him the conversion of several English Protestants to the Roman Catholic church, and a Jewish musician. "You cannot but acknowledge that ours is the most attractive religion," said he, "since it swallows up all the others." "I think it is too attractive, sir, you have so many magnificent things in your churches, that God is never thought of, that I assure you that I have read and re-read my Bible, and I find your ceremonies and services condemned at almost every page." "I forgot," said the curé, looking at his watch, "that I had an appointment at this hour." He came again, and attempted by various arguments, to bring V. back to the Roman Catholic church, but that faithful disciple of Christ was firm to the end, and is now with his Saviour, who bought him with his own blood, and whom he confessed upon this earth. The following are some details of his last moments. The solemn hour approached, and I was privileged to be with our dear brother. The Lord granted him the use of his senses to the last; so that I prayed with him, repeating the magnificent promises of the gospel, which are yea and amen to the believer, and which fully sustained him. I fancy I can still see his face beaming with joy, a few moments before bidding us adieu, when I told him how the preaching of the gospel was flourishing at A. and V. Even in the last struggle, a smile of gratitude to God illumined his countenance, so anxious was he that his former companions should come to the Saviour. "Yes, yes," said he, squeezing my hand, "the Lord will do his own work, and though secretly, it is certain that the gospel will compass the earth, in spite of its enemies. Oh! if the world only knew the happiness of having Christ for a Saviour!" He tried to pronounce some other words, but I could not understand him, and he fell asleep in Jesus, like a child. May I too, die the death of the righteous!"

We regret, not to be able to give longer extracts from C.'s letters, but those we have already quoted, show how blest his ministry has been to the conversion of many.

II. Station of V——.

School, its size, influence and prospects.

In passing from the station of G. to that of V., we shall find the results achieved small as yet, but the work progressing favourably. We have no striking facts to relate, but do not let us expect too much at once, nor lose sight of the text, that "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation;" and though it is destined to become that great tree which will afford shelter to multitudes, yet it begins from a grain of mustard seed. This remark particularly applies to V., where the work chiefly consists at present in a school, which we trust contains the germ of a church whose numbers will some day fill the locality, and strengthen the present small congregation.

Our friend H. speaks of the school in the following terms: "The numbers in the school at present, make it of some importance. Twenty-eight children attending it daily; indeed, were more to seek admission, we should be obliged to add to the furniture. And, observe, these children are not the refuse of other schools, but children whom I begin to teach from the first elements. The reflection, that the after wellbeing of nations and of the church, depends upon the education of the juvenile branches, encourages me, and I do not despise any of these little ones, however young they be. As to obedience, and general good conduct, I bless God for it; but to enable me to say that the school progresses really well, I must find their young hearts renewed by his Spirit, and changed.

"During the last month, 3 new scholars have been added. I have now 31, of whom 23 are boys, and 8 girls. Some among them are very well disposed. I have arranged a prayer-meeting at 8 o'clock on every Monday evening for them, when they can make known their wants to the Lord. May he bless this, undertaken in his own name.

"I have now 35 pupils, who go on much to my satisfaction; though certainly I might wish for more application and unvarying piety, yet they have none of those vices, so pernicious to schools in general, and are not rebellious to my instructions. The increase in our numbers is always favorable to missionary purposes, new hearers being obtained for God's word, and by degrees they become pious." The work of evangelization goes on slowly, but surely. The little flock at V. seems to increase, both in numbers and in piety and sincerity.

Renunciation of Popery by two young ladies, and others.

"Three young ladies," H. writes, "who have for two years past attended our meetings, but had not given up the Roman Catholic church, have recently declared that they will have no more to do with mass, and that they believe the Lord has given them strength to take this important step. A carpenter, who has attended our meeting since I came, has been assaulted by the people in his neighbourhood. They said he gave up his own soul and his children's to the devil; he answered, that he wished they were all as anxious about their souls and their children's as he was, and then they would do as he did, and seek the truth at the fountain head. New faces appear at every meeting, I trust the Lord will increase the work, by adding new souls to his flock, which is still very small. We have much need to pray for that, especially when we consider the great wickedness of the town."

Increasing attention to the subject of religion.

"Our meetings augment in proportion with the school, for almost all the parents who entrust their children to my care, attend, though irregularly. Some never fail, and seem on the eve of conversion. The love of the gospel does not come in a day, most people have to go through struggles, fears, and even doubts. But the Christian life manifests itself in the little nucleus already formed, so that in spite of difficulties, which sometimes arrest its progress, V. is in a hopeful position."

Religious meeting in a barn.

Our Evangelist extends his labours, and assists in the work already begun by C., at V. and A. "I had a meeting," he says, "of between two and three hundred people at A., on Saturday evening. Our friends had prepared a barn for it, but it was much too small; there were almost as many in the street as in the barn. I took care to warn the mayor of it, so that he was present himself, and perfect tranquillity prevailed. Some old men said, after the meeting, 'If we were not so old, we would become Protestants.' I explained Acts xxviii. 32, to them, and did not retire to rest, till after midnight."

These meetings continue, though they are not attended by so many, those who came from curiosity not returning; however, everything seems to indicate a true work has begun. But, as it is ever the case, the enemy of souls does not sleep, but works incessantly, if not without, still within. Thus, some disputes have arisen between two members of our flock at V., on temporal concerns, which have greatly distressed our Evangelist, and confirms the scripture, "It is impossible but that offences will come, but woe unto him through whom they come!" May this circumstance teach us to pray for the strengthening in the faith of those who make a profession of the gospel in our stations. It is not enough to have led them to it, they must persevere in the narrow way from which so many snares from within and without are ready to turn them. Let us help those who labour among them by our prayers.

Interesting case of conversion.

We end this report, on V., by an extract from H's letter. "A young man of R., was living as most young men live, alas! in levity and pleasure, without God and without hope. A beloved sister, who was in the faith, was removed by the providence of God, from this world. She had spoken much to her brother, during her illness, but he seemed never to feel what she said; however, after her death, his mind dwelt intensely on the reality of all he had heard, and suddenly he passed from darkness to light in the Lord. He is, at present, ill, but happy in his mind, and edifies me much. Often he says, 'the death of my sister, was the beginning of my spiritual life.' I was lately reading the 12th chapter of Hebrews to him. Ah! he indeed feels the trials which the apostle there describes; he knows that God punishes him in love. He needs much patience and encouragement, for his father persecutes him on account of his change of faith."

An important remark must be made on these two stations. While serious restraints have been put upon our work in other parts of France from the civil authorities, our agents in T. have never been interrupted in their course. It is a signal blessing, and incurs a serious obligation to work without delay, as the Scripture says, John ix. 4: "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."

SOUTH AMERICA.

The following extract of a letter from the Rev. Thomas L'Hombral, dated Buenos Ayres, December 1st, 1854, gives an interesting view of the manner in which his mission is regarded by the civil authorities, the results of his labours thus far, and will no doubt be read with pleasure by all those who feel an interest in the promotion of evangelical religion in that part of the world.

I am now officially acknowledged by the Government as a missionary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, for attending to the religious wants of the French population. In that character, and under the protection of the law, I can, indirectly, labour among the native population. Our official acts are as valid before the law as those of the Roman Catholic priests. On Saturday, 25th November, I married a couple in the North American chapel. The bridegroom was born a Roman Catholic. That circumstance, and also, I presume, the novelty of the ceremony, attracted a good number of people, French Roman Catholics and natives, who wanted to see how a Protestant wedding is performed. Thus far it has been customary among the Buenos Ayrean clergymen, either Catholics or Protestants, to marry in the house of the parties concerned. On the next day, Sunday, 26th November, we had four natives and two French Catholic families at our little meeting—a great increase in our number, we thought, and which, under the blessing of God, may become a serious one. These good people have been kind enough to testify their respect for the reasonableness of our religion.

Our people have thought it expedient to elect four officers (elders) of the church. One of them is a blacksmith, much respected in town; another a watch-maker, who seems to be a very pious man; the third one exercises a great influence over the gauchos (the native peasantry) of the environs of Buenos Ayres; the fourth one is a most amiable and worthy diplomatic man and intimate friend of the United States Consul. These four gentlemen and the pastor form the consistory of our little church. At the first meeting of the consistory, which took place last week, it was resolved that a monthly subscription should be raised among the friends of the cause, for paying the organist and the leader of the singing (the chantre.) It was also spoken of our meeting place, which is not our own. . . I think I have told you that we meet every Sabbath, at half-past two, in the North American chapel. However, we are as yet too few for thinking of putting ourselves at home. I have preached three times in English for the new North American clergyman. The North American chapel is no longer attended solely by North American citizens. They have gone, or are going away from Buenos Ayres, hoping to do better elsewhere. Most of the people of that church now are either English or Scotchmen, dissatisfied, somehow or other, with the English and Scotch churches and pastors.

You have very likely learnt by the papers that we are in war. The Republic de la Plata was invaded about a month ago. The invaders have been expelled from the soil. However, the national guards are all on foot. All are speaking of battles. Buenos Ayres is in a state of siege. God alone knows what will take place to-morrow.

MISCELLANIES.

EASTERN AFRICA.

The following account of the condition and prospects of the mission of the Church Missionary Society in Eastern Africa, taken from the Church Mis- sionary Record for January, will be read with interest, especially as it contains much valuable information about one portion of the continent of Africa, of which very little is known to the Christian public.

General View.

A little more than ten years have elapsed since the attention of the Society was directed to the East-African coast, and the first attempt was made to introduce the gospel into vast regions, which had been lying for generations in unbroken darkness. No more important effort has ever been made by the Society, when we consider the vastness of the territories concerned in it, where, Satan's empire being undisturbed, the strong man armed had long held his goods in peace. The claims of the East-African coast were providentially urged on the Society; and, whatever be the final issue of the effort, there is One who sees and approves: "thou didst well that it was in thine heart."

The aspect of this Mission at the present time is far from encouraging. The prospect of access to the interior nations appears, for the present, from a variety of circumstances which we cannot detail, to be well nigh closed up, and jungle growth is again overspreading the paths by which the foot of the white man had penetrated to new tribes and countries. We cannot be surprised that such should be the case. It would have been more surprising had it been otherwise. The introduction of the gospel remedy on the west coast of Africa was not without discouragement and resistance, and, through the slave-trade, the enemy contended with the Missionary force, disputing every inch of ground, and compelling them to the abandonment of the first stations which had been commenced, and for some time successfully carried on. The same antagonism must be expected on the East-African coast. But the example of unconquerable perseverance in a good work, which pervades the proceedings of the Society in the Sierra-Leone Mission, remains to be imitated in East-Africa. There, also, "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

The Rev. Dr. Krapf having been constrained by impaired health, in consequence of the fatigues and privations to which he had been subjected on various journeyings, to revisit Europe, the Mission has remained in charge of the Rev. J. Rebmann and the Rev. J. Erhardt. Mr. Rebmann has continued to reside at Kisuludini, near Mombas, on the coast. Mr. Erhardt proceeded to Usambára, in accordance with Dr. Krapf's promise to King Kmeri, to commence there a Missionary station; but found himself unable, from the unsettled state of the country and the jealousy of political rulers, to permanize his residence there. He accordingly retired to Tanga, on the coast, where our last letters left him.

The following extracts of a letter from Mr. Rebmann, dated April 13, 1854, contains a summary of the labours in which he had been engaged during the previous half-year—

Visit from a Galla.

Among our visitors, who are far from being inquirers after the truth, we have had, for the first time, a Galla. You have been informed, in former communications, that the Gallas come twice a year to the Wanika of Kiriáma for trade. Further to the coast they generally do not venture themselves; so that, all the time I have been here, I never saw nor heard of a Galla coming to the Rabbai territory. Nor did this Galla, with his two Kiriáma friends, start from their encampment with the purpose of seeing the European, but he had only accompanied them to a Suáheli man, who carries on some trade at a little distance from us, and only when they did not find him at home it was that they resolved upon visiting the Msungu. He was a middle-aged man, and said to be the son of a chief still living, which he also quite looked. We treated him as hospitably as we could, and felt very anxious that he should return home, not only with amazement at what he had seen, but with some knowledge of the object for which we are staying in this country. This was greatly facilitated by one of his Wanika friends having a most perfect knowledge of the Galla language. After I had reason to consider myself understood by the Galla, I put the question to him, what he had to say to the supposition of my going to his country with the same object, and especially whether I should at all enjoy some protection from them. Upon which he very truthfully, and with much good sense, replied, that the Gallas, though they were men, still they were not men (meaning, not humane.) As to himself, who had now got acquainted with me, he would do all he could for my well-being; but other Gallas would look upon me as a sorcerer, who had come to destroy their cattle, on which account they would also allow no Suáheli-man to come to their country. Again, he would be sometimes absent on trading business, when he could no more be responsible for my life, &c. If I should like to come to their country and stay there, he would advise me first to get acquainted with as many Gallas as possible when they come to Kiriáma for trade, and then I should be safe.

Journey to Usambára.

We have received Mr. Erhardt's account of his journey to Usambára and back, and of his three months' stay in the dominions of Kmeri, from August 9th to December 1853. It is far too lengthened to admit of its being introduced into the pages of a publication like the "Record," which has to condense into so limited a space so wide a range of materials. We must content ourselves with a summary and brief extracts. After the expiration of the rainy season, Mr. Erhardt started from Kisuludini on August 9th. Traversing the soft and undulating country in which are situated the plantations of the Wakamba, he descended into the Wakuafi wilderness, and the river Umba was reached on the 14th, its waters truly welcome after the thirst to which the party had been subjected. Passing through a jungly district, they reached, next day, the first range of the hills of Bondei, on the tops of which the villages of the Wabondi are perched like birds' nests; and on the frontier of Usambára, in the Daluni territory, under the shade of a spreading euphorbia, our Missionary passed the night of August 16. Here he was soon surrounded by a strange mixture of people anxious to see the Msungu —"the naked Mkamba with his red painted body; the proud Msegua, wrapped in his highly-coloured cloth; the tall thin Mdigo, firmly grasping his bow and arrows, with a few skin-clad Wabondei." There strange rumours reached them of the death of Kmeri, or some of his sons, and the confusion of the kingdom; so much so, that Mr. Erhardt resolved on despatching a messenger to one of Kmeri's sons, Ngotoningi, governor at Kigongoni, to ascertain the practicability of going forward. This personage arrived on August 19, and enjoined on the Missionary further delay, until Kmeri's mind was ascertained, to whom three soldiers were despatched. This territory, Daluni, is thus described:

The country called Daluni is a plain of about ten or twelve miles in length, and variable breadth, stretching in a north-west direction between the first mountains of Bondei and the wilderness. Being well watered by numerous springs coming out at the foot of the mountains, its fertility is most astonishing, producing chiefly Indian corn, mdama (guinea corn,) and cocoa-nut groves. This plain is claimed by nobody. As much as a family can cultivate is their undisputed right. Only the hills and mountain belong to Kmeri; and are ruled by his sons and daughters, and inhabited chiefly by Wabondei or Washinsi. The latter means "the conquered:" the former name is taken from their country, Bondei, and the name by which they call themselves. The people inhabiting the plain are Wadigo, Wakamba, Wasegeju, Wasegua, and Alà, living together in separate hamlets, but those being entirely intermixed.

The Wadigo, as already stated, are Wanika, having sought refuge here from the cruel hand of slavery. Their business is almost confined to rearing cocoa-nut trees. The nuts they sell to the coast, and the palm-wine they do not want themselves they exchange for Indian corn and mdama to the Wakamba.

The Wasegeju are rather few in number. They live more on the mountains of Kmeri than on the plain. Between them and the Wadigo is an old feud.

The Wasegua at Daluni, and in Kmeri's dominions generally, are partly runaway slaves—i. e. stolen people, who would have been sold into slavery if they had not made a previous escape beyond Pangani—partly emigrants who have left their country south of Pangani, on account of constant wars, in quest of quiet habitations. The Wasegua are the most sightly figures of all Wanika. They are all tall, able-bodied, broad-shouldered men. Their jet black faces have very expressed features, with prominent cheek bones and a high Roman-like nose, with only too broad a base for calling it fine. Their ears are largely perforated according to national custom, and their wool they shave off. They are all naturally bold, and, without restraint, cruel. Their subsistence they get chiefly by warlike excursions and slave hunts. Only the females and slaves take to the hoe, planting a little Indian corn and mdama, the latter chiefly for making some kind of beer. Of singing and dancing to the monotonous beating of a drum they are most passionately fond, keeping it up whole nights. Their singing is the most melodious I ever heard in East-Africa.

The Alà, the remnant of a scattered tribe, are but very few in number, but still keeping up their own language. Their exclusive business is hunting, for which Daluni is most favourably situated, from its proximity to the wilderness. The only female I saw, the others being out hunting, was of a slender make, middle-sized, very black, but with soft, agreeable features, and an intelligent look. So many different elements of nations, living intermixed, and more closely connected by inter-marriages, produced a most singular confusion of tongues. The current language is chiefly made up of Kikamba and Kisegua, with some Kidigo and Kisegeju expressions, and, in fact, wholly understood but by themselves.

A party of Kmeri's soldiers, headed by Mberéko, Dr. Krapf's mláu, or introducer to and from the king, having at length arrived as his escort, Mr. Erhardt proceeded, on Aug. 26, on his journey towards Fuga, the capital, reaching in the afternoon Muango, the highest mountain range of Bondei.

Muango is a very deceptive mountain; in looking up we always flattered ourselves that, after having cleared a certain promontory, we should have mounted the whole; but hill was towered upon hill, and mount upon mount, so that when the sun went down we had not seen the end of hills yet. The steep sides of the mountain are covered with gigantic grass, far more luxuriant than the plain. Trees of large dimensions and valuable wood are only now and then to be seen, underwood being very scarce. At some parts the wild grape has got the ascendancy over the grass, and produced very good sized black grapes. On the higher parts of the mountain we met with very large isolated blocks of stone, lying and hanging about in every direction. At some places they are even piled up to considerable heights. It was curious to me to find that they were the very same kind of sand-stone, some even with very similar holes, as those I had seen in the wilderness.

Aug. 27.—After six o'clock we started again for ascending the highest and steepest ridge of the Muango, which was enveloped in a dense fog. At ten o'clock we stood at the top, but lost the immediate reward of our ascent—the prospect—which must be a grand one on the highest peak of Bondei. Dark masses of clouds kept whirling up and down the precipitous sides of the last ridge, being driven by such cuttingly cold currents of wind, as in England blow sometimes in the latter parts of the year. The relative height of this mountain I esteem from 8000 to 9000 feet. Only the higher parts of the mountain are inhabited by the Wabondei, where they have their villages and their banana groves, their only but never-failing life-stock. Sheltered as they are against the cold winds, and watered by the innumerable rivulets coming out of the mountain, they thrive exceedingly well. The west side of the mountain is steeper and richer in water than the east, but there is nobody to avail himself of the rich fertility of the soil. Idly the clear water rolls down the steep descents. Towards the base a small spur is shooting out towards the narrow plain beneath, commanding the finest possible prospect upon the valley, or rather pass, Mfunegenda. Towards the north I saw the horizon-bound wilderness; and towards the south, a fine lake and the plain of the Rufu (Pangani). By this pass the great wilderness connects itself with the plain of the Rufu, so that all the mountains of Bondei, Usambàni, and Páræ, may be compared to islands starting out of this wilderness.

Aug. 31.—The prospect at the top was very fine; lost towards the east in banana groves of the Wasamba, with now and then a village perched on some steep place; towards the west we looked down upon the mountains around Fuga; and, beyond them, upon the large plain through which the majestic Rufu rolls its waters. The highest points of Bumburi cannot be under 10,000 feet, and the high peaks of Masinde, which are south-west by west from here, are still higher. Usambára, no doubt, is a splendid country even now, but what will it become when the blessings of Christianity are shed abroad? O, may the Lord hasten that time!

Sept. 1.—Before daybreak two reports of muskets announced that Kmeri was on his way to me. When I was called, I found him seated on a rough, native bedstead, placed under a large tree, close to a channel of water, which is brought from a great distance for watering his women's plantations. All the Wafumo wa Fuga ("the spears of Fuga," a title of the great men of Fuga) were seated before him on the ground, where I had my place also on a large cow-hide. After I had shaken hands, I introduced myself as the brother of Krafu, having come, by his permission, to stay with him, for teaching him and his people the book of God. Krafu, Rebmani, and myself, had come from Usunguni for the sole purpose of teaching people the book of God, that they might be happy not only in this world, but also in that to come. After the king had asked some questions about Dr. Krapf, he said, "I like to have Wasungu in my country. To Mkrafu I have given Mount Tongue, that he may live there; but as you have come in his stead, I give it to you, and yours it is." Knowing the uninhabited region in which Tongue is located, I asked the king for another place, giving as the reason the uninhabited state of the country. Kmeri said, "If Tongue does not suit you, I offer you the two districts, Krige and Kigumba, in Bondei. Within those you may stay wherever you will. My son Merikuaniuma is Governor there, who must take care of you." After a little while he added, "I had better call my son here to tell him all about you: in the mean time, you had better stay with me." After I had thanked him for his kindness, I returned to my hut.

VISIT TO THE SOUTH.

The Rev. William E. Schenck, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication, has made arrangements to leave in a few days for the South, and will, if Providence permit, pass through Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, and other important points, arriving at Nashville, Tennessee, in time to attend the sessions of the General Assembly. His chief object is to confer, as generally as possible, with the brethren at the South in reference to the operations and interests of the Board, and to devise means, if possible, for extending its usefulness in that portion of our widespread land.

APPOINTMENT OF AN AGENT.

The Board of Publication have recently appointed the Rev. John H. Rice, lately of Charlotte Court House, Va., as its Agent. Mr. Rice has accepted the appointment, and will immediately enter upon his labours in the States of Kentucky and Tennessee. His efforts will be largely directed towards securing aid for the Colportage Fund of the Board, now in an overdrawn and needy condition. He will also do what he can towards promoting the circulation of the publications of the Board, by an increased and more efficient employment of the colporteur system, which is found, by long experience and close and careful observation, to be the best and only widely practicable means yet devised for reaching the people of all classes with printed religious truth.

Mr. Rice has been extensively and very favorably known, both as a preacher and a pastor, in Virginia, and we earnestly commend him to the confidence and cooperation of the pastors and congregations of the region to which he now goes to labour for the Board.

COLPORTAGE IN THE SOUTH.

The Southern Presbyterian, published at Charleston, S. C., under date of March 3d, contains the following:

"We were surprised, a few days ago, in being told that the impression prevails in some parts of the country that our Board of Publication was about to abandon the scheme of circulating their books by means of colportage. That this is an entire mistake we feel authorized to assert, not only by the frequent publications made by the Board of their views, but also by the tenor of a recent letter from the Corresponding Secretary. If there has been any reduction in the number of Colporteurs, it has not been owing to a loss of confidence in the advantages of this particular method of carrying forward their enterprise, but to a deficiency of men or of funds for its prosecution. To abandon colportage after its adaptedness to the wants of the country and its efficiency for good have been so signally demonstrated by actual trial, would be 'a step backward' which the Church every where would rebel against, and the Board would be the last to consent to. Only let our churches supply the requisite means, and the Board will urge forward and extend the operations of this department of their work, until every part of the land shall be penetrated by the 'light and the truth,' which, as experience has shown, it is peculiarly fitted to diffuse at once speedily and widely.

"We reserve for our next issue some thoughts on the value of colportage in the present distressed, not to say alarming, condition of our Church, arising from the paucity of ministers."

This paragraph contains the clear and strong convictions of the Board of Publication and of every member of its Executive Committee. We are gratified to know that such is also the prevailing conviction of our Church throughout our Southern States, as well as in other portions of the country. We presume the impression above alluded to had its origin in certain resolutions passed in October last, by several of the Southern Synods, urging their churches to supply themselves with libraries of the publications of the Board, and to engage actively, by their own members, in supplying likewise the families of their several vicinities. Those Synodical resolutions did not, however, contain a word in disapproval of colportage; but, on the contrary, recommended its churches at the same time to take collections for the Colporteur Fund of the Board. In all these recommendations, the Board has often and cordially united. It would greatly rejoice to see all our churches furnishing themselves with the Congregational and Sabbath School Libraries published by the Board, and their members actively engaged in introducing the books into all the families within their reach. But we are persuaded that if any were in favour of withdrawing from colportage, and relying upon such congregational efforts only, or chiefly, they would indeed be taking "a step backward which the Church every where would rebel against"—a step which would lead to sure and grievous disappointment. For many years this very kind of congregational effort was the great reliance of the Board for getting its books into circulation. It was urged by ecclesiastical bodies, high and low, was advocated by the agents of the Board, and was urged in its pamphlets, yet the results were small and unimportant. It had a long and thorough trial, and proved to be, in the present state of the churches, entirely inefficient. As such, it was laid aside as a main dependence, and the colporteur system was introduced. The results were immediate and wonderful. Vitality and energy were at once infused into the operations of the Board, and we doubt whether any organization ever formed for similar purposes has enjoyed, in the same length of time, so rapid an expansion of its issues as has the Board of Publication, within the last ten years. Much yet remains to be hoped for. Very much remains to be attempted. Yet, in the hundreds of thousands of volumes of precious religious truth now annually going forth, from our Publication House, to every corner of the land, the Church has an abundant proof of the suitableness and efficiency of the colportage system.

There is no portion of our country in which colportage is better adapted to do great good than in the Southern States. There are there comparatively few towns and large villages. The religious destitutions are neither few nor small. In wide and sparsely populated districts, the preaching of the Gospel is very inadequately enjoyed, and in such communities the religious book and the labour of the colporteur, who alone can be ordinarily expected to bring it, becomes doubly important. In an account of a Convention of Colporteurs of the American Tract Society, held a month or two since, in Charleston, S. C., at which a large number of pastors as well as of colporteurs, delivered addresses, it is said that "the conviction was deepened, day by day, by the revelations made, that there is no portion of our country to which colportage is more admirably adapted, and none in which it has been more widely blessed." These are the convictions of many, if not all, of our most intelligent pastors at the South. One who is pastor of a large and important charge in Alabama, wrote a few days since as follows:

"We need at least five more colporteurs in Alabama, and if we can get the men, I have no doubt of the readiness of our people generally to sustain them. We are by no means indifferent to this branch of your—or rather of our enterprise, (for I like to think of our Boards as our own hands, with which we are labouring for our Master, and not as a separate interest appealing for our charitable aid.) We feel the need of colporteurs in Alabama. We have extensive destitutions which it is hard to reach with the living ministry. This instrumentality is our next reliance. That we have done but little, is mainly due to the difficulty of securing men."

So also says, within a few days, one of the most prominent and wisest pastors in Mississippi—"You cannot substitute anything for colportage."

Only let the churches furnish two things, and the Board of Publication, by the colportage effort, will do a great and blessed work for the Church and for the land. Those two things are men and money, both which they have it in their power to furnish. And so fast as it can secure these, it is the purpose of the Board to press forward its work of colportage with increased vigour.

A RESPONSE.

Some of our readers will remember that we published in the February number of the Record, an earnest petition from a feeble church, in one of our Western States, for a donation of books, for the use of the congregation. We were much gratified by receiving a few days ago a donation of $10, in answer to that appeal, from a lady of one of our Southern States, through her minister. To this sum, $5 were added from another source; and $15 worth of books, carefully selected, have been despatched to the little church at the West. We trust the blessing of God will go with the books to their destination, and will also abide with the generous donors. We have not yet received any response to the appeal from Texas, found in the March Record. Who will give us the means to send a supply of good books thither?

P. S.—Since the above was written, a letter, postmarked "Raleigh, N. C.," has come to hand, inclosing $2. It reads as follows:

"To help to send a set of the Board's publications to those children, in Northern Texas, 'perishing for want of spiritual food.'

"Feed my lambs."

A letter from a Christian brother in one of our Northern States has also just come to hand, containing the balance of the sum needed to send to Texas the books asked for.

CALIFORNIA.

The wonderful history, rapid progress, immense resources and prospective influence of this new land, invest it with immeasurable interest to the Christian, as well as to all others. In the present immature but rapidly forming state of society there, every influence of every kind that shall tend to promote a soundly moral and Christian character in its population, ought to be brought to bear upon it with the utmost energy. The Presbyterian Church is doing something to promote religion in California, but she ought never to cease from asking the question: "What more can be done?" The Board of Publication have more than once had this question under consideration, but, while there was a strong anxiety to do whatever might be wise and practicable, the way has seemed to be, to a great extent, hedged up. The most it has appeared in its power to do heretofore was to send, in two or three instances, invoices of its publications to ministerial brethren in California, committing to their judgment and zeal the work of sale or distribution.

A communication was received, a few weeks ago, from Rev. Dr. Scott, now at San Francisco, from which the Board was gratified to learn that he is disposed to lend his kind and zealous aid in securing the circulation of its publications there. He had already formed a plan for that object, and, at his request, a large supply of books and tracts were at once sent forward. Of these, a certain proportion were sent for gratuitous distribution. Dr. Scott has assumed a position of great eminence and usefulness in that city, and is gathering around him a large company of zealous and energetic Christians. He will be able, therefore, to do very much towards the introduction and general diffusion of our denominational literature in California. We trust he may find many and cordial coadjutors, and that our books and tracts may find a wide and useful circulation in the Land of Gold.

RESPONSIBILITY.

We are permitted to make the following extract from an excellent discourse recently preached in the Seventh Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, by its valued Pastor, the Rev. E. P. Rodgers, D. D. We hope its solemn thoughts may come home to the hearts and abide in the memories of many.

"Not only our spoken words, but our written and our printed words, will meet us in the judgment day. When we call in the pen of the scribe, or the iron tongue of the press, and give to them the spreading of our thoughts over a far wider range, and bringing our words to the ears of myriads of hearers, we proportionably increase our responsibility, and furnish additional matter for the solemn investigation of our last account. An infidel sentiment, or a licentious idea, may drop from the lips of the skeptic or the profligate, and may soon accomplish its work of corruption, and die away; but the infidel tract, the licentious novel or poem, rings out its message of corruption and death in the ears of a nation, and transmits its deadly poison to succeeding generations. No man can rightly estimate the power of thought thus made immortal. It is the most potential of all human influences. It was well said, 'Give me the making of the ballads of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws.' What a wonderful power the reading of Cæsar's will, by that prince of demagogues, Mark Antony, had on the Roman people! In the days of the Stuarts, a manual of devotion forged by a bishop, and attributed to Charles I., exerted a powerful influence in the restoration of that race to the throne; while a burlesque Irish ballad, made to be sung in the streets, contributed much toward their overthrow. Even the most frivolous and flimsy literature may be the vehicle of corruption, just as the plague in the East may be communicated from a cast-off glove, or ribbon, or a city be enveloped in flames, kindled by a spark from a peasant's rush-light. There is no engine so fearful for destruction and death as the press. Those little leaden type are more fearful missiles than the balls and shells of a battery. In the Reign of Terror, there were days when the guillotine with its ceaseless clank was not so destructive a machine as the printing-press. One ran with the blood of hundreds of the dead, the other diffused a poison through the hearts of millions of the living. A frivolous literature has a power for evil beyond its intrinsic weakness and worthlessness. But when it becomes profligate and licentious, then its deadly influence cannot be exaggerated. In a country like ours, of more books and more readers than in any other, such a literature is to the mind what poison would be, diffused through every well and spring and reservoir, at which our millions slake their thirst. Skeptical works, whether the foul ravings of bald Atheism, or rampant infidelity, or the insidious elevated scientific treatise on the structure of the earth, or the unity of the race; radical and anarchical sentiments distributed through the columns of newspapers or other periodicals; flashy novels and poems which suggest more than they say of impurity and vice; history made a vehicle of deceit, and scoffing at revelation, these make up a literature which is a curse to a people, and which is rapidly becoming a curse to our nation.

"Men must answer at the bar of God for the words they have written or printed, as for those which they have spoken. There is a fearful account awaiting those who have corrupted and poisoned the literature of their country or age, who have written many pages, which 'dying, they have wished to blot.' When the books are opened before the throne of God, there will be a revelation most astounding of the recorded iniquity of men. There will be the infidel tract, glowing in the light of that throne, on which sits in awful majesty, the Deity whose being it denies. There will be the skeptical history, with the ban of infamous diabolical falsehood stamped on its pages. There will be the works of all the essayists and novelists and poets, and men of science and philosophy, who contributed to give a false, frivolous, corrupting and deadly tone to the literature of the world. And every false, corrupting, polluting, disgusting feature of their works, will be stripped of all the marks of wit, and fancy, and beauty, and brilliancy, which wreathed and disguised the poison-cup, and in the white light of that day, the universe shall see how hideous, and loathsome, and vile they are. Ah! let men who write and print, remember, that as they inscribe the characters on the perishable page, there is an unseen Reporter and Copyist, who transfers them to the pages of those imperishable volumes, which are to be opened on the judgment-day. Let the editor as he writes his leaders, and sends forth his columns broad-cast, wrapping the mind of the people in his daily sheet, (some of which in this land are like the burning shirt of Nessus,) let him remember that he is literally writing for immortality. Let every man remember who writes, from an epistolary fragment, to the huge elaborate tome, that whatever be the subject, style, sentiment, or character, of what he writes, it will all come forth when the books are opened. Did you ever write a letter of hypocritical friendship, or cunning artifice, or covert malice, or frivolous folly, or censorious gossip, or foul slander? They are all there in those mysterious volumes, copied in indelible ink, by the letter-press of God's providence. Every word which we have spoken or written or printed, is all recorded there, and we must meet them all at the judgment-day."

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

THE PRESBYTERIAN PSALMODIST: a collection of Tunes adapted to the Psalms and Hymns of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Approved by the General Assembly. Edited by Thomas Hastings. Translated into character-note by J. B. Aiken. Presbyterian Board of Publication, 265 Chestnut st., pp. 370. Price 75 cents.

This is the edition of the Psalmodist in Aiken's character, or in the seven character notes, so earnestly called for by many who prefer this system of musical notation, and the publication of which was directed by the last General Assembly. The causes of its late appearance were explained in the last number of the Record. In the quality of the paper, clearness of the type, and general neatness and beauty of the mechanical execution, we think it cannot fail to give entire satisfaction to those who may use it.

NEW "HYMNS FOR YOUTH," designed for Sabbath-schools and families. Compiled by the Editor of the Board. Presbyterian Board of Publication. pp. 365. Price 10 cents without discount.

This is a revised, enlarged, and re-arranged issue of the "Hymns for Youth" before issued by the Board. It contains 565 Hymns, besides Doxologies, Indices, the Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, and the Creed. An alphabetical arrangement has been adopted in this book, which gives to it a simplicity and convenience of order, not possessed by any other Hymn Book with which we are acquainted. The collection of hymns will be found to be comprehensive, yet select and excellent; an improvement, unless we are greatly mistaken, on any other Sabbath-school Hymn Book yet issued anywhere.

Rev. Dr. J. L. Yantis of Oregon, has been elected President of Richmond College in Ray county, Missouri.

Prof. Israel Ward Andrews has been elected President of Marietta College, Ohio.

The new and beautiful church at Tamaqua, Pennsylvania, of which Rev. W. R. Glen is pastor, has by a recent effort been entirely freed from debt.

The Presbyterian church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, of which Rev. A. B. Clark is pastor, was last month entirely destroyed by fire.

The Presbyterian church at Slatersville, Lehigh county, Pennsylvania, was dedicated on Sabbath, February 11th.

Varieties.

A most gratifying spirit is said to be abroad among the churches in Virginia, in regard to the salaries of their pastors. In some cases the salaries have been doubled, in others increased one-half, and in not a few arrangements are making to provide parsonages.

An interesting work of grace is said to be in progress in several Sabbath-schools in the city of New York. More than seventy anxious inquirers are said to have been at the room of one pastor. The Mission schools of the city are sharing in the great blessing.

The new Triennial Catalogue of the College of New Jersey at Princeton, exhibits the following facts:

Whole number of graduates,	3390
Deceased,	1367
Still living,	2023
Clergymen graduated,	638
Clerical graduates living,	305
Clerical graduates (O. S. Presbyterians,)	265
Clerical graduates (N. S. Presbyterians,)	25

Revival.—The Cohocksink Church, Philadelphia, (Rev. Daniel Gaston, pastor,) is enjoying a season of refreshing. Eighteen members were recently added on profession of their faith.

Revivals in Milton and Lewisburg, Pa.—The Presbyterian churches in these two flourishing towns are now in the enjoyment of a very pleasant religious awakening. The former is under the care of Dr. Watson, and the latter under the care of Dr. Clarke. They have been assisted, recently, in their ministrations by Rev. Dr. McKinley, of the Board of Domestic Missions.

Religion in San Francisco.—In the San Francisco Evening News we find notices for religious services on the Sabbath, at seventeen different places of worship. This looks well for the future morality of the commercial metropolis of the Golden State.

The Mahonites.—The Patriarch of this Popish sect lately deceased, and his place has been filled by a man much less rigid in his notions on the subject of the Papacy; there is now some hope that the missionaries may gain access to the "Holy Mountain." "There is much more live flesh," says Mr. Wilson, "about the Papists than about the Greeks"—more copies of the Scriptures are sold to the former than to the latter, although the Greeks are most numerous. A good token of the future.

Bibles at Nice.—When Lord Shaftesbury was at Nice two or three years ago, he took a step of which some sticklers for formality complained. He listened to the complaints made with reference to the want of Bibles, and, acting with that boldness which generally characterizes true wisdom, he took it on his own responsibility, as President of the British and Foreign Bible Society, to order the immediate issue of 20,000 Italian Bibles. This order was carried out through the instrumentality of the Rev. W. Carus Wilson and others. The Bibles were circulated throughout Piedmont and the North of Italy; and we believe that amongst the many acts of Christian philanthropy which have characterized the career of Lord Shaftesbury, there is none more calculated to throw lustre on his name than the boldness of this act of his.—Record.

Mission to Italians.—A late number of the Christian Times, of London, states that one man in Europe has thought to improve the opening which the present remarkable crisis in Turkey affords for new enterprises in extending the knowledge of the Gospel. We wish there were hundreds, equally enterprising, to avail themselves of every opening to every race and class of the population of Turkey, until it should be so that the end of the present commotion should leave the whole empire pervaded with evangelical truth.

"Returning to Constantinople, we gladly mark a new feature of interest in that city, now crowded with people from many nations. M. Turin, a Waldensian, is there, as a missionary to the Italians. Amongst the Italians he has indeed an arduous work in hand, for they are, most of them, extremely bigotted; but the bigotry relents with many. An Italian school under his care flourishes; and whatever may become of the parents, the children are in a way of learning well the first elements of Christianity. An evangelical Italian school could not be collected in Rome-ridden Italy, and therefore it is impossible to estimate too highly the value of this teaching on the Bosphorus. The zeal of M. Turin is carrying him into a wide field of labour among the French in that city, both inhabitants and soldiers. The hospitals are open to his visits, in spite of all the fury of Romish emissaries of both sexes, and the only fear is lest he be overwhelmed with toil. The gentlemen who have originated this mission to the Italians at Constantinople will surely be sustained by the friends both of Italy and Turkey, in holding up the hands of M. Turin, and enabling him to concentrate his labours with more adequate resources on the particular class of persons for whose welfare he was sent."

NOTICE.

We are desired to give notice that there are now no copies of the Minutes of Assembly for 1853 and 1854 on hand for sale; and that the Forms for Sessional Reports are sold by the Board of Publication at 18 cents per dozen; and the Forms of Licensure and Commissions to General Assembly at 25 cents per dozen. The only forms furnished by the Stated Clerk are those for Presbyterial Reports.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD APPRECIATED.

A poor widow in one of the Western States, in giving directions how to send her paper, makes the following remarks, which we could wish every member of our Church might ponder and adopt.

"It is with deep interest that I read the Record, and I hope that I will never be so poor as not to be able to take it. When I first sent for the Record my object was to inspire a missionary spirit in my children; but I find there are many advantages in reading the Record. The Christian who reads it and duly appreciates its truths, will pray more for the missionaries; more for the heathen; and pray more for the Board of Publication and for the colporteurs; and more for the church of Christ everywhere. Yes, he will do more—he will be more benevolent and give more willingly to the great cause of his Lord's kingdom. I know of no better spur in the same bulk of reading than the Record. I am astonished that there are so many in the Presbyterian churches that do not read it.

I was left a widow in 1850, with six small children, three sons and three daughters. It has been my desire ever since I became a mother, that these my children be prepared for some good in the service of God. But I am often ready to sink in sorrow, as it respects the education of my children. I stand alone in my views of educating children in the district. My views are as you have them in the Record—a religious education. It has often been said to me, 'Your children are no better than other children.' By nature they are not, and I have feared that if sent to the schools that we have here, they will be no better by practice.

"I shall pray for and help you in any way that I can, so long as God gives me the means to do it."

DIVINE DECREES AND HUMAN FREEDOM.

It is safe to reason from the effect produced by a designing agent to the purpose of such agent. Corn is grown in a certain field; from this it is certain that the cultivator purposed to raise corn there. A father has given a liberal education to one of his sons, and withheld it from the rest; this makes clear his purpose to that effect. In regard to human agents and their actions we reason in this manner with confidence. Why should we hesitate to apply the same method to the divine doings? We ought to feel the greater confidence in such reasoning when applied to the Supreme Agent, since his wisdom is omniscient, and cannot be baffled, since his power is infinite, and cannot be defeated. How, then, is it possible to deny the force of such arguments, or the justness of such inferences, as these following? A part of the angels maintained their allegiance to God; therefore it was the purpose of God that they should stand firm. Another part apostatized; therefore it was the purpose of God that they should fall. Adam transgressed the covenant of his God, and involved himself and his posterity in guilt and condemnation; therefore it was the divine purpose that this should be. A part of the human race are saved by Christ, and another part are not; such, therefore, was the divine purpose concerning them. Wisdom never acts without a purpose, and eternal wisdom can frame no new purposes. To say that God acts without a purpose, is to deprive him of wisdom; to say that any new purpose can arise in his mind, is to impute to him mutability. As surely, therefore, as God saves a part of the human family, and leaves the rest to perish, so surely did he purpose to do it. The certainty of the action determines the certainty of the purpose, and the extent of the action determines the extent of the purpose; while the immutability of God involves the eternity of the purpose.

It is objected to this view, that it converts men into machines, and makes God the author of sin; and the modern objector, like the cavillers of Paul's day, exultingly asks, 'Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?' The point of the objection is, that a divine purpose and a free human agency are incompatible; so incompatible that, if such purpose have respect to a sinful action, the human agent is free from blame, and God is the author of the sin.

Is this so? It was the purpose of God that Pharaoh should not let his people go, till he had shown his wonders in Egypt; that Sennacherib should invade the territory of Israel for the punishment of its inhabitants; and that Jewish scribes and priests should crucify his Son? Did these divine purposes destroy the free agency of the actors, or make God the author of their sin? No man will dare utter such a blasphemy. How, then, does a divine purpose that some angels should fall, destroy their free agency in rebelling, or make God the author of their sin? How does a divine purpose that man should apostatize, destroy his freedom in apostatizing, and make God the author of his sin? How does a divine purpose not to save a part of the human race, interfere with their freedom in sinning, or make God the author of their damnation? If a divine purpose does not clash with free agency in one instance, it need not clash with it in any. If it is consistent with man's freedom in one event, it is consistent with his freedom in all events. But a divine purpose and free agency, a divine purpose and a sinful free agency, did meet in the obstinacy of Pharaoh, in the ambition of Sennacherib, and in the malignity of the murderers of God's incarnate Son. This none can deny, without denying the plainest Scripture testimonies. Why, then, may not a divine purpose and a sinful free agency have met in the rebellion of angels and the apostasy of man? Why may they not meet in the final condemnation and ruin of men? If God must necessarily be the author of sin by decreeing these events, then, by a like necessity, he must be the author of Pharaoh's sin in refusing to let the people go, of Sennacherib's sin in his wars against Jerusalem, and of the Jews' sin in crucifying the Lord of glory, because he decreed those events. No difference can be shown in the principle of these several cases. 'God decreed the fall of man, therefore he is the author of the sin, by which that event was effected,' and 'God decreed the death of Christ, therefore he is the author of the sin, by which that event was effected,' are one and the same argument. If the conclusion is logical in the one case, it is logical in the other, and if it is illogical in the one, it is illogical in the other. If we feel that it would be blasphemy when stated in reference to the death of Christ, we must own that it would be an equal blasphemy when uttered in reference to the fall of Adam. It is true, that we know the reasons which moved God to decree the death of his Son, while the reasons which moved him to decree the fall of angels, the apostasy of man, and the restriction of salvation to a part of mankind, are unknown to us. Doubtless there are reasons for these decrees, as wise in themselves and as honourable to God, as for the decree respecting the death of his Son; and, if we knew them, we should see the divine glory shining as radiantly in the former as in the latter. The unfathomableness of the divine decrees is no argument against their existence, their wisdom, or their goodness. To suppose that the counsels of the Most High are not good and glorious, because we cannot fathom the reasons on which they rest, is to make man's folly superior to God's wisdom. It is to exalt human ignorance to sit in judgment on the divine sovereignty.—"Adam and Christ," by Dr. Wines.

RULES FOR HOME EDUCATION.

1. From your children's earliest infancy you must inculcate the necessity of instant obedience.

2. Unite firmness with gentleness. Let your children always understand that you mean exactly what you say.

3. Never promise them anything unless you believe that you can give them what you promise.

4. If you tell your child to do something, show him how to do it, and see that it is done.

5. Always punish your children for wilfully disobeying you, but never punish in anger.

6. Never let them see that they can vex you or make you lose your self-command.

7. If they give way to petulance and temper, wait till they are calm, and then gently reason with them on the impropriety of their conduct.

8. Remember that a little present punishment, when the occasion arises, is much more effectual than the threatening of a great one should the fault be renewed.

9. Never give your children any thing because they cry for it.

10. On no account allow them to do at one time what you have forbidden, under the like circumstances, at another.

11. Teach them that the only sure and easy way to appear good, is to be good.

12. Accustom them to make their little recitals with perfect truth.

13. Never allow of tale-bearing.—Selected.

POETRY.

It is seldom our privilege to be able to present our readers with such appropriate and beautiful poetry as the following. We desire to return sincere thanks to our fair friend for this choice gem, and would be glad to receive, from time to time, similar effusions from her gifted and prolific pen.

THE HOME MISSIONARY;

OR WORSHIP IN THE WILDERNESS.

BY MRS. J. L. GRAY.

To our lowly sanctuary,
Reared amid the cooling shade,
Comes to-day the missionary
Here to break the living bread.

Seldom drops the dew of Hermon
On this thirsty forest ground,
Seldom doth a song of praises
Through these sylvan arches sound.

Seldom moves the healing waters,
By the living preacher stirred;
Seldom is the gospel message,
By these forest children heard.

Spread the tidings, spread the tidings;
Tell the story far and wide;
Come from valley, glen and mountain,
Come from hill and dingle side.

Come, though humble be our temple;
Come, though rude its shrine may be;
Contrite hearts are holy altars;
Sweet their incense, Lord, to thee.

Hunter of the tangled thicket,
Hither with thy children come;
Lead them to this open fountain;
Guide them to a heavenly home.

Mother, on thy tender bosom,
Bring the babe, that God hath given;
Here present thy cherished blossom,
Sign, and seal its name for heaven.

Grandsire old, and weak, and weary,
Tottering down life's pilgrimage;
Hear once more the life-fraught message;
Listen to the sacred page.

Man of God, no longer tarry,
Come, thy waiting flock to greet;
Feed them with the heavenly manna;
Lead them to the Mercy-seat.

Ah! thou comest, weary stranger!
Traveller of a thorny road;
Yet is thine a glorious calling,
Servant of a faithful God.

What, though toil and want depress thee;
What, though darkening clouds may lower;
This is not thy home, my brother,
Traveller of a stormy hour.

Christ, thy master and thy pattern,
Had not where his head to rest;
Roll on him thy care, thy sorrow;
Lean when fainting on his breast.

This is not thy home, my brother!
Soon a welcome voice shall come,
Well done, servant good and faithful,
Leave thy labours, hasten home.

Home, to that bright world above thee;
Home, where saints and martyrs be;
Home, with Christ, thy elder brother,
There, remains a rest for thee.

Earth receding, heaven appearing,
Peace and joy, and Eden's bowers;
Oh, to die as doth the righteous;
Be like his my closing hours.

As weary stars, their night-watch ended,
Steal to sleep in sunbeams bright,
So to heaven the saint retireth,
Paling, fading, lost in light.

LOUD CALL FROM MINNESOTA.

We publish the following communication from a respected missionary of the Board in Minnesota, although there are some strictures contained in it which we feel to be unreasonable, so far at least as they reflect upon the present Executive Officers of the Board. The claims of every part of the country have been impartially exhibited and urged in the Home and Foreign Record, and so far as our correspondent is concerned, we think he has no ground whatever for complaint, as many of his reports and letters have, from time to time, been published in our columns. If the wants of one section are more frequently presented than another, it is because the brethren residing there, furnish us more frequently with articles for publication.

With respect to the official tours that have been made, the present Secretary of the Board, although but about eighteen months in the office, spent a considerable portion of the summer in visiting the north and north-east; and during the past winter made an extensive tour to St. Louis, New Orleans, Charleston, &c. It is his purpose, God willing, to devote as much of his time in this way as the business of the office will allow, and he intends, with the leave of Providence, to visit the north-west during the approaching summer. But no man can be everywhere at the same time, nor can any man accomplish everything at once.

We have made repeated and earnest efforts (as our correspondent has been from time to time informed) to procure additional missionaries for Minnesota, but have not, until recently, been able to secure a single man. A brother has just started for that field, and we suppose will be there in the course of a few days. We should be very glad to send several more, and do now invite and earnestly urge applications for that growing and important field. We shall also be pleased to publish in our columns any further appeal in behalf of Minnesota, as we are of any other section of our country, whether it be north or south, east or west.

St. Paul, Min. Ter., Feb. 27th, 1855.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D.D.

Rev. and Dear Sir—I have not written much in behalf of Minnesota since you were elected to the office of Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions; nor would I now trouble you, but for the reason I have to believe that the wants of this Territory are not sufficiently known. Its importance is not sufficiently felt even in your Executive Committee. I do not mean that it is overlooked or neglected, because of any prejudice against this latitude, or any conscious preference for the south; but it is not known, because it lies north of the range of vision of Old School Presbyterianism.

The proceedings of the Board for the past six years, as well as their numerous official publications, will prove that our Church has had her attention directed particularly to the south and south-west. The officers of the Board have taken great pains to call the attention of the Church and of ministers, to the wants of Texas and other southern fields. While as yet, very little has been said about the claims of Minnesota, and its advantages as a field of labour for our Church. Another fact is significant. The officers of the Board have from time to time made tours into the great west, but have never proceeded north of Galena and Dubuque. All north of these points is to our Church "terra incognita," a region of eternal snows and magnificent ices, while all south of these points has received due attention.

Now the truth is, there is no more desirable country in the whole west than this, which is drained by the upper Mississippi. You will travel far before you will find such beauty, healthfulness of climate, and other advantages of country, as you will find in Minnesota. Now, what we ask is, that the officers of your Board should know enough of this country to be duly impressed with its importance, and to bring it before the Church through the organ of the Board, as they have from time to time brought Texas before the Church. Let them urge men to seek fields of labour here, as they have urged them to seek in Texas, and we will not long have it to say, that we have but one church in this whole Territory.

This field is prospectively more important than the one with which I am comparing it. It is a better soil, and will sustain a greater population. It is free soil, and hence will be owned in smaller tracts, and be more densely populated. It is in a northern climate, and hence will have a more enterprising and influential population. I am in matters of religion no northern or southern man. I long to see our Church spreading herself in every direction, and keeping pace with the ever-widening wave of emigration. I take no part in the cry for the north-west, if that cry is to imply any censure upon any of the proceedings of the Church in time past. But I most heartily sympathize with all earnest attempts to call the attention of the Church to this great north-west, as by far the most important and promising missionary field open to our Church in the whole world. I cannot contemplate with indifference the tremendous power and influence which is soon to be centred here.

Congregationalists, New-school Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists and Episcopalians, are all alive to these facts, and are rapidly increasing the number of their labourers. Some of these have, besides men labouring at particular points, agents whose business it is to travel throughout the Territory and visit every town and new settlement, for the purpose of gathering up and organizing their scattered members.

We need something of this kind. If nothing more can be done for Minnesota the present spring, can there not be found one able and faithful brother, whom you will appoint as missionary at large in Minnesota. Now is the time to gain a footing, to lay the foundation.

Yours, in our Lord,
J. G. Riheldaffer.

INTERESTING DETAILS.

We are very much pleased with the detailed account given in the following report of the labours of our missionary. Such particular statements of missionary labour performed, and interesting incidents, cannot but be gratifying to our readers. We wish that all our missionaries, instead of furnishing us with merely general remarks, would give us more detailed accounts of their labours, as such particular statements would not only furnish the Board with useful information, but would also serve to interest our readers more in the missionary work.

29th March, 1855.

Dear Brother—As my quarter draws to a close, I make my report. Still I have cause to thank the Lord for his continued goodness to me, unworthy as I am. Health has been granted me, and various advantages for labouring in the service of our Redeemer. I have come far short of what I ought to have done. I have to acknowledge in every respect, how much I have failed in duty: and yet I have reason to believe that some good has been done. As my acquaintance and influence among the people becomes strengthened, I feel that I labour to more advantage than at first, when I had everything to form new, in the way of meetings. There seems evidently a value for the means of grace, and this increases the more they are used. This I think a good symptom. Especially, I believe the Spirit of the Lord has been somewhat at work here, to own and prosper my poor efforts. Prayer I have put first in everything, trying continually to act upon the principle, "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and he shall direct thy path." If any good has been wrought, the praise is all to the Lord. By prayer, I have constantly sought the presence and direction of God. As to the amount of work, I have been preaching to upwards of eight hundred persons, averaging three times on the Sabbath. The meetings have been well attended, sometimes crowded; characterized by good order and serious attention. I have dealt very plainly with them, not shunning to tell them honestly their guilt and danger. I have found invariably that I have never lost influence by being faithful; persons have indeed often remarked, that my extremely plain preaching, a good deal of it in the form of warning, met their entire approbation. In addressing my people, I have always felt, these souls are in awful danger; soon I and they, will be in eternity, and I must, by the help of God, do what I can to save them from endless death. A little like Baxter, I feel that urgent exhortation is a chief thing in preaching. I have kept up family visitation, for religious conversation, steadily; visiting about fifteen families weekly; trying to say something to each member of a family. Individual, personal advice, has been my constant aim; thus I have become acquainted with the religious, or irreligious state of each individual, and have by this means gained an influence I could have gotten in no other way. When I meet the congregation in public, I know pretty nearly the individual state of each one, and therefore am prepared to speak to them. The more I try this plan, the more I am convinced of its utility. In fact, I could not get along without it. I have urged prayer very much upon the people, together with reading the Bible, family prayer, private prayer, and believe that many of them are a good deal drawn to this all-important duty. Sabbath-schools have been somewhat hindered in our country places in the winter months; but as the spring now opens, we shall resume these, and shall have upwards of 200 scholars. Sunday-schools are highly prized here; they are accomplishing much good; I give them my special attention. At ——, the ladies are about raising a new library, suitable both for scholars and teachers. I expect good results from it. The observance of the Sabbath is somewhat improving. The Sunday liquor-law of our State certainly has worked well, as a general thing. Taverns are now quiet on Sunday, instead of being crowded as formerly. Religion in this county is much respected, and in fact, in many neighbourhoods, it is now disreputable not to be at meeting. I have been preaching at seven stations, besides ——, where I preach every other Sabbath night. At ——, an attempt will soon be made to build a Presbyterian church, (not Union.) Temperance is decidedly gaining. I am prepared at any time, to raise in this county, a majority of 20 to 1 in favour of a prohibitory law. The prevailing sentiment is, that the law will pass the next Legislature. Recently, I was the means of getting a poor inebriate, who had a large family, into our Temperance Society, (Sons,) he is quite reformed, and doing well. Some whom I had gotten in three or four years ago, still hold out; twelve or fifteen new members have joined lately. We now number upwards of two hundred. Protestantism is decidedly on the advance; five or six years I was almost alone in this county in opposing Romanism. Now, almost the whole county is with me. Even members of Catholic families, of considerable influence, are coming over to Protestantism. May the Lord speedily establish pure Christianity, upon the ruins of the Papacy. Lately I called upon a Romanist with a tract. Said I, "Do you think the priest can pardon your sins?" Readily, said he, "I have sinned against the Almighty, and none but he can forgive." "Go then," said I, "right to him, pray directly to him, and ask him to save you." I gave him a tract which he promised to read. I went to see a Catholic lady dying; but she being pretty strict, I doubted whether she would listen to me; I thought, however, I would venture. The priest had been and given her the sacrament. I instructed her in the truths of salvation, told her of the Saviour. She thanked me for coming; said she felt convinced that none but Christ could save her. The priest here is quite an intemperate man, and his own members do not believe in him. I have been a little in contact with Puseyism. Not long since, a lady, a member of the High church, had a dance at her house. The Puseyite minister was present; it became a subject of public remark. I came out in a sermon against Puseyism, as tending to immorality. I handled them rather closely. I called upon the lady, being well acquainted in the family, and talked with her seriously about the matter. Not long after, a series of balls was projected in ——, at the tavern where the Puseyite minister boards. I visited a number of young persons, whom I thought likely to go to the ball, and warned them. When the time for the first ball arrived, the Puseyite minister, I think from shame, turned about, and told his people not to come to the ball. The ball itself was a failure, and with it ended the series of balls. I have scarcely ever met with the slightest hinderance to religious visits among the people; on the contrary, they seem thankful for them. And although I do not expect that every person with whom I labour will be brought to Christ, I always expect that some good result will follow, for the plain reason, that God has promised it. Some weeks ago, I called on Saturday afternoon upon a lady, wife to a respectable, intelligent physician. Sometime previous they had lost their child. I had been to pray with it, and left with them the tract "Joy in Sorrow." She remarked—"How much she liked the tract; that she was determined to lead a religious life, and earnestly wished that her husband would join her." Recently, I called at a tavern in ——, where I sometimes preach; soon I introduced the subject of religion; asked a man present his views and thoughts on the subject. I entered into serious conversation with him, on his prospects for a future world; presently, a careless young man came in singing, but the bystanders motioned to him to be quiet. I found I had their attention and continued my remarks, directing myself chiefly to the one man, but in such a way as to reach the whole circle. On leaving, I gave each one a tract, and at night they all came to meeting. At a family where I had several times called with tracts, I found the mother gave hopeful evidence of conversion to Christ. I can number five or six within the last three months, whom I believe, I have, by private conversation, been somewhat instrumental in bringing to a determination to serve God. At a family where I called, I found quite an aged man, who expressed a great wish to become a Christian; he said he always attended preaching, and put himself in the way of being converted; that for a good while he had been wishing for religion. It occurred to me, he was making no personal effort. I asked him if he was in the habit of prayer to God. He said he was not. I exhorted him to try this means, and told him of the promises, that God will hear prayer. Some time since, a man of influence was brought to religion, and now takes part in the public prayer-meeting, and is trying to train his family in wisdom's way. I visited him lately, and saw that religion pervaded his household. I might relate many similar incidents. Such things encourage me to labour for Christ. We shall make renewed efforts to circulate the Bible, this spring and summer, and trust the Lord, by this important means, will save many souls. I believe I mentioned, that at one point of my preaching, the people have built a stone building, meant for a church and primary school, (Union.) Two years ago, I begun there with fifteen or twenty hearers; now the meetings are crowded, often they cannot find seats; many stand all the time, with the utmost attention. Next Sabbath week, we shall go into the new building, when I expect an interesting meeting. May some souls be born in that new house. If a Presbyterian church is built in ——, it will have a good influence in this county; ——, being the county town, has considerable influence, and is a growing place.

In conclusion, I still feel cause for encouragement and thankfulness. It is true my labours are sometimes severe, every storm this winter, I believe, I have been out in; sometimes long, tiresome rides, over bad roads; but then I am always sure of a hearty welcome, with the conviction that some good for Christ and perishing souls is accomplished. We shall soon have our sacramental meeting at ——, and hope for a refreshing season. May the Lord be with us. We expect at the same time to have a protracted meeting at ——. Wishing you every blessing from our Lord. Yours truly, in Christ. T. G.

REPORT OF A MISSIONARY IN OREGON.

CORVALLIS, Oregon Territory, Dec. 1st, 1854.

Dear Brother—Again it becomes my duty to submit to you my quarterly report, for the inspection of the Board. Would that I could gladden your hearts with a narrative of a revival of the graces of God's people here, and of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in convincing and converting sinners. But it is our melancholy duty to record the reverse. Professors of religion generally are in a cold and lukewarm state; many, like Peter, are following Christ afar off. Sinners are held in transgression—they are stout hearted and resist the truth.

I have four places of preaching, all of which are in Benton county. Since my last report, I have preached once on each Sabbath-day, and occasionally twice. Probably you are not aware of the difficulties and hinderances which prevent our preaching more than once on the Sabbath. They are as follows: The sparsity of the inhabitants, owing to our large land claims—not more than one fourth of the settlers regularly attend public worship—the scarcity of meeting-houses—and each denomination have their minister claiming a portion of the Lord's day for public worship. Ministers in this country generally have small congregations and very irregular. The average congregation is about fifty, but often as few as ten. Ministers here have much to discourage and perplex them, and but little to encourage; there are but few who strengthen their hands and encourage their hearts by their sympathies and prayers. But this lovely portion of creation must not be abandoned to the powers of darkness.

Oregon is certainly a lovely country. Our most sanguine expectations of the country have been fully realized. In general, or to most constitutions, it is a healthy country. We have enjoyed uninterrupted health and vigour of constitution ever since our arrival. And during my two years residence in this country, it has only been my duty thrice to visit in the chamber of sickness, and twice to accompany the remains of the departed to their narrow home.

The climate is delightful—true the winters are rainy and somewhat dreary; but we have the most delightful summers, they are clear, calm, and pleasant. The scenery is magnificently grand, with one glance of the eye, we may behold vast and fertile prairies teeming with the luxuries of a beneficent Providence; and lofty mountains covered with forests of evergreen, with their majestic peaks capped with perpetual snow.

This has been a remarkably pleasant fall; we have had seasonable showers, and but little frost; we had but one frost in the month of November: even now, in December, we have roses, merrigolds, pinks and flowering peas, in full bloom.

Our country is not only beautiful, but it is productive; the husbandmen have replenished their storehouses with an abundance of grain and vegetables: and yet their herds go unsheltered and unprovided for, feeding upon the most luxuriant grass, which is now as fresh and green as in May.

Ye who love the Saviour, tell us, shall these lovely valleys remain a moral waste? If not, may we not feel assured that we have an interest in your prayers? "Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified." J. A. H.

MINISTERS' SONS AND THE MINISTRY.

An article with the above caption was copied into the last Record from the Presbyterian Magazine. It commenced with a statement from a Southern correspondent, (speaking of ministers who are sons of ministers,) that in Lexington, Va., and adjoining Presbyteries, are four Browns, [it should have been five,] sons of Rev. Mr. Brown. We doubt not, it will interest our readers, to hear more about this family; and accordingly we make some extracts from a thrilling narrative, entitled "The Captives of Abb's Valley," published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication.

The maternal grandparents of these five ministers, and some other members of the family, were murdered by the Indians, and their mother, Mary Moore, (then nine or ten years of age,) was carried from Abb's valley, Va., into the State of Ohio, and thence into Canada, remained a captive for several years, and by the noble and perilous exertions of Thomas Evans, whose sister was also taken captive, was rescued from the Indians, together with her brother and Miss Evans, and restored to their friends in Virginia. At the time of her capture by the Indians, when they "had gathered everything out of her father's house, and had placed in a pile to be burned, all they did not design to carry away; after they had kindled the fire, she stepped to the place, took up two New Testaments, placed them under her arm, and with them started into her captivity. One of these she retained in every vicissitude, till she was free from all who had injured and oppressed her. Whatever else she may have left or lost, she retained her Testament; and whatever else God may have suffered her to be deprived of, he did not permit his word to be taken from her. When brighter days shone upon her, she could say with the Psalmist, 'Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.'" ..... "In October, 1798, Mary Moore was married to the Rev. Samuel Brown, pastor of New Providence church." ..... "A man who was regarded by those who best knew him, as the equal of the most distinguished ministers of his day, in the Synod of Virginia. And no one ever thought that he was wedded to one who was his inferior. In her sphere she lived as much respected as he did in his."

It is now (1854) more than thirty years since Mary Moore closed her eventful life, and left her young family orphans. These years have not passed away without working their changes. The seed that was sown has been springing up, and bringing forth fruit. Without detailing the steps in the progress of events, some of the results will be briefly presented.

Of the seven sons of the little captive girl, five have entered the ministry in the Presbyterian church, and one has been for several years a ruling elder in the congregation of which his father was the pastor. The youngest son studied medicine, and settled at Russelville, in Tennessee, where he resided until his death in 1851. He was eminent in his profession. It was said of him in the brief obituary notice, "The widow, the orphan, and the poor will long remember him with gratitude." He met death sustained by the same faith which had cheered his mother, and none who were acquainted with him doubt that he has gone to join her in the kingdom of heaven. The third daughter died in early youth, after having given satisfactory evidence that she had made her peace with God. She had lived for some years in Rogersville, Tennessee, with her elder sister Lavinia, the wife of Dr. William A. Walker. Her health never had been vigorous, and she was the first of the family that was called to follow the parents to the land where "the weary are at rest." All Mary's grandchildren, who have arrived at the age of mature life, are members of the Presbyterian church; two of her grand-daughters have married Presbyterian ministers, and three of her grandsons are preparing to enter the ministry in the same church.

The question has been asked sometimes, "To what are we to attribute this marked and happy result in this family?" Perhaps it never can be satisfactorily answered. The only answer may be, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." But so far as second causes are concerned, there are some considerations which it may not be amiss to mention, as tending to the solution of this question.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown did not bring up their children for this world. In their whole intercourse with their family, they made it evident to them that their great and ever-present concern was that their children should serve God. They did not neglect to attend to their worldly interests, but they were careful to set before them in their daily walk, and in all their conversation, the infinite importance of serving God, and the comparative unimportance of all the wealth and honours of this world. The father once said to one of the beloved elders of his church, in the hearing of his oldest son, then quite a youth, without knowing that the remark was heard by him, "I have no wish that my children should be wealthy, or rise to places of worldly distinction; but it is the ever anxious desire of my heart that they shall be pious, and consecrate themselves to God's service, and I daily feel that I can trust him to provide for them." Several years after the date of this conversation, he had serious thoughts of removing westward to the region bordering on the Mississippi, and visited that section of the country. After his return, in assigning the reasons that determined his mind not to remove there, he said that he was not willing to bring up his family in the state of morals which existed in that region, and run the risk to which his children would be exposed. These incidents indicate distinctly what his views were. The views of the mother and father perfectly coincided. To the oldest son she once said, when urging on him the claims of God for the affections of his heart, and the service of his life—"Ever since we have had any children, your father and I have often kneeled by your bed when you were asleep, and solemnly dedicated you to God and his service." This feeling thus expressed by both parents, was carried out in their whole course of action toward their children, and for them; and there can be no doubt that much of the future result is to be attributed to this.

From the Independent.

INDEPENDENCE vs. GRATUITIES.

1. Does the indigent student need aid? Can ninety-nine in a hundred support themselves?

Take a case which often occurs. A farmer keeps his son at home until twenty-one years of age, and then sets him adrift without a dollar. The young man has a fair English education, has taught school in his own neighbourhood, is intelligent, and desires to become useful. He turns toward the ministry, and anxiously surveys the preparatory course. Two years in the academy, four in college, and three more in the seminary. With no suspension for sickness or for earning money to defray expense, professional duties may commence at thirty; a period of life at which one feels the vigour of manhood will soon begin to pass away; that what his hand finds to do he must do quickly. Here are nine years of study, each of which will, on an average, demand two hundred and twenty-five dollars of expenditure. If fortunate in obtaining situations, one may earn one hundred of the sum, leaving one hundred and twenty-five of indebtedness, amounting at the close, to some fourteen hundred dollars, at a favourable calculation derived from experience, and an extensive observation at one of our most economical colleges.

Now, who among our financiers is willing to loan this sum to an unknown student from a retired part of the country, whose health is liable to fail before his education is finished, even if, as is often the case, patrons have no suspicion of a shipwreck of moral character? Should it be supposed that the members of the church to which the student belongs will assist to give him credit, experience will tell how futile is such a hope. An instance will illustrate: In a wealthy church in Vermont, a young man went to several of his fellow-members, known to be abundantly able to furnish the needed assistance, and desired, as a loan for a few months, the paltry sum of forty dollars. One "had no money by him just at that time, and made it a fixed principle never to become security;" another "needed all his capital for his extensive and increasing business"—was "sorry that the members of the firm were under obligation not to lend their names," etc., etc.

A gentleman making no profession of Christianity, conferred the favour, and was always afterwards relied on in similar exigencies. The frequency of such occurrences is a reproach to the Christian name. But if, by constant anxiety, multiplied humiliating applications and repeated disappointments, the course is at last completed, what shall, what can one do with such a burden resting upon him? It would require more than ordinary strength not to be crushed by the weight. He desires perhaps to be a missionary either in the foreign or home field. However well he may be fitted for the work, and however ardently he may desire it, the fact is clearly impossible. His debts must be paid. He must have a salary from which something can be saved for that purpose. How many such are paid? And how many clergymen have the exquisite refinement of manners, and the oratorical display requisite to satisfy the fastidious taste of the congregation which pay them? A worse than "Shady Side" must tell the history of any minister whose labours have so unpropitious a commencement. One is disposed to agree that if he would not bring the miseries and disgrace of poverty upon others, which himself must so bitterly suffer, "he ought not to marry." Yet has he any holier vows of consecration to God's service resting upon him, than multitudes who are revelling in all the luxuries of wealth? Who has the right to make demands upon him, which not only interfere with the legitimate enjoyment of life, but also with one's highest usefulness in the world? No; however much Christians may desire young men to go forward in the work of preparation for the ministry, both prudence and wisdom must lead us to advise one under these circumstances, to abandon the idea of going through a nine years' course of study without aid from benevolent sources. We must say to such a one, were it your duty to preach the gospel, God would open the door which now seems firmly closed. But,

2. "It takes away one's manly independence."

In what consists the manly independence of a Christian student, except in the privilege of doing what he deems to be right? Is this taken away in the reception of friendly aid? Does not every one receive some kinds of favours from friends placing him under obligation? Such are the little kindnesses which politeness delights in, all the day long. Is not the feeling of obligation thus incurred, a pleasant feeling? And wherein does the reception of money differ except for considerations founded on a false pride, especially sinful when it detracts from our power of usefulness?

But, in truth, he is less placed under obligation to the donors, than they to him. He offers his services to the Church, which accepts them, and undertakes in part to compensate for them by paying to him a small sum of money, which falls far short of an equivalent for the time, labour, and privation which are offered and endured. True, there are those who think they are doing a great favour to the student, if not to God, when they make a donation for educational purposes; they need only reflect on the great principle of living to Christ in our mutual relations, to see their gross mistake. The years of study are as really devoted to the Church as the years of professional labour, and they are no less deserving a compensation according to the necessities of the labourer, who is, by right and justice, as much entitled to a competent support in the one case as in the other. God has given a certain amount of wealth to his people, and though it is not expedient that any agrarianism should characterize its operations, it is expedient that every cent of it should be so disposed as to secure the utmost of progress to the kingdom of Christ.

If I am in circumstances to devote my time to direct efforts for the conversion of the world, yet having no means of support; if it is my conviction that I ought to preach the gospel, and the judgment of my friend concurs, I am under no greater obligation to enter on the work or its initiatory steps than is my wealthy Christian neighbour to defray my expenses in so doing. We should be co-workers; if there is any obligation from one to another, it is rather from him who furnishes the funds toward him who suffers the greater self-denial in using them, than the reverse. If this thought were sufficiently understood by Christian youth and Christian men of wealth, there would be less of struggle and despair on the one hand, and less complacency in withholding, or of delicacy in giving, on the other. When the former in his threadbare suit, with empty pockets, and face haggard by anxiety on account of approaching quarter-bills, meets the latter in his stately magnificence, surrounded by all the adornments of taste, both from the realm of nature and of art, which wealth can purchase—the one is in duty bound to make known his wants, and the other to supply them; for, though they seem to be merely individual wants, they are really the demands of God upon his children, of Christ upon his disciples, resting with equal authority, according to the several ability. If either refuses to avail himself of the means for good which the other places at his disposal, he is guilty of violating his obligation to the Church, no less than if possessing both classes of means he refuses to make use of either. Besides, on the opposite principle, that large body of Christians who possess property, but not the ability of personal labour, would be entirely excluded from the glorious work of propagating gospel truth by this most honoured means.

Let, then, that student who renders his equivalent by habits of industry, economy, and devotion to his work, never suspect himself of being a beggar, nor allow himself to be chagrined when certain oracles attempt to force upon him such a belief. As to the fact that he is obliged to report his expenditures, let him consider that the good of the whole may require it; that as a Christian man he desires to use money for the best—freely where its equivalent can further a righteous aim, sparingly where no gain comes to the grand object of Christian labour; and thus expending, let him have no delicacy in exposing his accounts; let him walk among his fellows, os sublimis. If his motives in some expenditures are suspected, let him proceed straight-forward with a manly dignity and firmness; then should benevolent societies or individuals become dissatisfied, they can withdraw their support on their own responsibility. As to matrimony, we doubt not, such students will use their own judgment, taste and sense of right, without deferring to those of other men.

A STUDENT.

SELF-SACRIFICE.

2 Sam. xxiv. 24.

My God, I would not coldly offer Thee
The withered hue of feeling's flower,
The fragment of a passing hour—
Gifts which have nothing cost to me.
But looking down into my heart,
Whatever treasure it hath hidden deep,
Whatever talent it would strive to keep,
With these, to Thee, O God, I part.
I should not dare to bring affections blighted
By the rude blasts of worldliness and pride;
Nor lay a worn-out heart the earth had slighted,
Upon the altar of the crucified.
But in Life's dewy hours, when Hope is on the wing,
My love, myself, my all, to Thee I bring.

LEARN OF ME.

How good it is for us we have such a pattern, and are permitted to follow in His blessed steps! We might despair under the best directions of reaching heaven, if we had no one to lead the way. But in following Jesus, we cannot err. He will direct us in the path we should go, and guide us with his eye. Blessed Saviour, let me look continually unto thee. Let me never withdraw from thy company or seek another leader. Keep me, Oh, keep me under the shadow of thy wing, and receive me finally into thine everlasting kingdom.

COLLEGE STATISTICS.

In the last Record we published statistics from fifteen Colleges, as collected by the Students of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, and read on the day of Prayer for Colleges, the last Thursday of February. The Society of Inquiry of Amherst College, have gathered similar statistics from fourteen Colleges, twelve of which we transcribe for the benefit of our readers. The other two are the same as those published in the last Record.

RELIGION IN COLLEGES.

In connection with the above table of statistics it is stated that the number preparing for the ministry in Madison University includes not only undergraduates, but theological students and students in the earlier preparatory studies. This accounts for the unusually large proportion of candidates for the ministry in that Institution compared with the others. The number of theological students at Yale is not given; but the proportion is probably about the same as in most of the other Colleges. The smallest relative number it will be perceived is at Harvard, where there are only 33 professors of religion and only 8 candidates for the ministry out of 340 students. This fact is highly instructive and admonitory, and it demands special consideration. That is the oldest and the best endowed College in the United States. It was founded in prayer, and for the express purpose of giving to the sons of New England a religious as well as a literary education. A Theological Professorship was also established and endowed, with the solemn injunction and stipulation of its pious founder, that its incumbent should always be a man of sound evangelical principles, according to the received formulas of Christian faith as then acknowledged and adopted by Calvinistic churches. But for many years past, the Institution has been in the hands of Unitarians, and evangelical religion has been carefully excluded. The consequence has been, that though the number of students continues to be large, but few pious young men enter the College, and fewer still become pious (in the gospel sense of this term) during their collegiate course. The Institution is not blessed as in its early history, with revivals of religion, and the reason is obvious. Who could expect these merciful visitations where Christ is thus dishonoured?

The past and the present of that Institution are stated by Professor Tyler in his "Premium Essay," entitled "Prayer for Colleges," as follows: "The Pilgrim Fathers of New England deemed an educated magistracy next to, and in connection with, an educated ministry, of indispensable necessity to the well being of the Church and the State; and it was with this two-fold view, that they established Harvard University at the very commencement of their colonial history, building it on the borders of that unbroken wilderness which still covered the new world." ..... A part of their language is as follows: "Dreading to leave an illiterate ministry to the churches, when our ministers shall lie in the dust." ..... "And sixty years later, Cotton Mather says: 'Our fathers saw that without a College to train an able and learned ministry, the church in New England must have been less than a business of an age, must have soon come to nothing.' 'Pro Christo et Ecclesia'—for Christ and the Church—is to this day the motto of Harvard College, though sadly fallen, alas! from the truth as it is in Jesus." ..... "The Unitarian defection in New England originated perhaps with the churches, or rather with their pastors, but it has been perpetuated by Harvard College. The tide rose in the churches till it burst open the gates and inundated the College, but now it has turned, and is flowing back, more gradually, but not less powerfully, and even more effectively, from the College into the churches and the community. Let all our Colleges become like Harvard, and Unitarianism would overflow the country."

The immense influence exerted by our literary institutions in moulding the characters of the rising generation, renders it a matter of primary importance for Christians to remember them in their daily prayers, to send their sons to those only in which true religion forms a pervading element of instruction, as well as sound learning, and to exert themselves to establish and sustain Colleges, wherever needed, of the right character, viz. high in their standard of scientific and literary attainment, and high in their moral and religious position. Without the latter we cannot expect the Divine blessing; and without God's blessing upon these institutions, cultivated intellect becomes a gigantic agency for the diffusion of social evil.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

HOW WE MUST MEET CATHOLICISM.

Christ said to his disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth," Math. v. 13. In this, we are taught our duty to the world, and also to the Catholic portion of our land. Many Christians are watching with fearful anxiety, the workings of this dreadful engine of iniquity. This "mystery of iniquity doth already work" in our midst, (2 Thess. ii. 7,) and the work of undermining the foundations of our Government is progressing rapidly. And "if the foundations be destroyed, what will the righteous do?" Ps. xi. 3. To season this mass of moral being—to meet and counteract the workings of "the mystery of iniquity," and preserve the foundations of our government, is the mission of the kingdom of Christ, involving a fearful responsibility. To fulfil this mission, will require the energetic action of the Church, with the "wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove." Many are anxiously inquiring, what must be done in view of these fearful workings? What can be done? The duty of the Church is plain. Educate the youth in Bible truth first and last. Stamp upon their infant minds the great doctrines of religious liberty.

Begin at the fountain, to do the work of purifying, then the stream will be pure.

Educate—is the watchword of Jesuits.

Let this be the watchword of all Protestants.

Keep our orphans out of Catholic Asylums.

Imitate the Protestant movements of Ireland.

Secure missionaries for our Catholic population, as for any other class of Pagans.

Apostolic energy and self-denial is requisite. Send out colporteurs, who will go from house to house, bearing the lamp of life to those poor misguided men. In short, let our "prayers and our alms go up before God," for the accomplishment of this great work.

T. T. S.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLE IN EDUCATION.

The mother of John Wesley was a sensible woman, and understood well the first principle in Home Education, as will be seen by the following remarks.

She writes:—"In order to form the mind of children, the first thing to be done is to conquer their will. To inform the understanding is the work of time, and must proceed by slow degrees as they are able to bear it: but the subjection of the will is a thing that must be done at once, and the sooner the better; for, by neglecting timely correction, they will contract a stubborness and obstinacy which are hardly ever conquered; and never without using such severity as would be as painful to me as to the child. In the esteem of the world, they pass for kind and indulgent, whom I call cruel parents, who permit their children to get habits which they know must be afterwards broken. When the will of a child is subdued, and it is brought to revere its parents, then a great many childish follies and inadvertencies may be passed by. . . . . I insist upon conquering the will of children betimes, because this is the only strong and rational foundation of a religious education: and without which, both precept and example will be ineffectual. But when this is thoroughly done, then a child is capable of being governed by reason, till its own understanding comes to maturity, and right principles have taken root in the mind."

We cannot too strongly urge every parent, says the S. S. Journal, to lend the whole energy of mind and affection to this great and fundamental point in Home Education—the government and subjection of the will. This done, every future step is comparatively easy and pleasant. This left undone, all else will be next to unavailing. We offer no apology for dwelling so much at length on this one point, because of its paramount importance. Indeed, we cannot dismiss it without another quotation from the same source as the former. "As self-will is the root of all sin and misery, so whatever cherishes this in children, insures their wretchedness and irreligion; whatever checks and mortifies it promotes their future happiness and piety. This is still more evident if we consider that religion is nothing else than doing the will of God, and not our own; that the one grand impediment to our temporal and eternal happiness being this self-will, no indulgence of it can be trivial, no denial unprofitable. The parent who studies to subdue it in his child, works together with God in the renewing and saving a soul. The parent who indulges it, does the devil's work, makes religion impracticable, salvation unattainable:—does all that in him lies to ruin his child, soul and body for ever."

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions, will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 7th, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Annual Sermon will be preached before the General Assembly, by the Rev. J. L. Kirkpatrick, D. D., of Charleston, S. C. The Rev. J. M. McDonald, of Princeton, N. J., is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in this city, in the First Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Dr. Phillips, on Sabbath evening, previous to the aunual meeting, May 7th, by Rev. Stuart Robinson, of Baltimore.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, New York, April 13th, 1855.

India.—The latest dates from India, are Lodiana, January 18th; Mynpurie, January 24th; Agra, January 9th; Allahabad, January 8th; and one letter also from Mr. Newton, dated Calcutta, January 22d, announcing the safe arrival of himself and party at that place, after a somewhat protracted, but not otherwise unpleasant voyage. Our letter from Agra mentions, that the examination of the school had taken place on the 16th1—9th of December, and gave great satisfaction to all who were concerned. It is also mentioned that several individuals had recently come to the missionaries as inquirers after the truth. The letter from Allahabad mentions the good health of the missionaries; and states that the great Mela had commenced, and that the missionaries had pitched their tent there also, with the view of keeping up regular preaching during its continuance.

At Lodiana, the missionaries were well, with the exception of Mrs. Rudolph; and her indisposition, it was hoped, was not serious.

China.—Our latest letters are dated at Ningpo, Dec. 11th; Shanghai, Dec. 30th; Canton, Jan. 13th. Mr. Happer and his family were on their voyage to this country in the ship Comet, which had stopped at Batavia for freight, whence Mr. Happer's letter was despatched, dated Dec. 26th. Mrs. Happer was receiving benefit from the voyage. At Canton before he left, Mr. Happer had the satisfaction of admitting to the church, by baptism, one of the young men formerly in the boarding-school. On the 19th of December, Mr. Preston was united in marriage to Mrs. Brewster, of the American Board's Mission at Ningpo.

Mr. French says, "Things continue as unsettled here as ever. There is a constant fighting in all directions, between the troops and insurgents. The whole province is in a state of anarchy. Mr. Culbertson had left Canton for Shanghai. His health had been much benefited by his visit, but had had a relapse, from which he was recovering. At Shanghai and Ningpo, the mission families were in their usual health."

The letters from Ningpo are largely occupied on the subject of obtaining houses for the missionaries within the walls of the city. When the mission was first formed, owing to the fears and suspicions entertained by the natives of foreigners, it was not practicable to obtain ground in the city for building houses.

The missionaries were also apprehensive that it might not be healthy, as it would certainly not be pleasant to live in confined streets in the midst of native habits. It is now quite practicable to obtain land, and the residence of some of the mission families for several years in the city shows that a residence there is not peculiarly unfavourable to health. Important advantages as to intercourse and influence with the people, recommend this measure. The houses of most of the brethren are on the north bank of a river, which separate them from the city. The ferriage costs one-eighth of a cent, and is uninterrupted in the day, but less convenient at night. The proposed removal is regarded as favourable, and it may be advisable to make the change gradually; though it may be inexpedient to make any immediate change, in view of the expense, and the unsettled state of the country at large. Thus far, it is a matter of thankfulness that Ningpo has been visited with none of the calamities that have befallen Shanghai and Canton.

Indian Missions.—We have letters from the Chippewa Mission as late as the 9th of March; from the Creek Mission, February 19th; from the Chickasaw Mission, Wapanucka, February 27th; and Boggy Depot, 8th March; and from the Choctaw Mission, the 26th of February; and from the Iowa and Sac Mission, of the 30th March.

Letters from the upper stations of the Chippewa Mission, mention that the missionaries were well, and that their schools, as well as their religious instructions, had been well attended during the winter.

Our letter from the Choctaw Mission states that a religious interest had recently manifested itself in a community of Choctaws, residing at a short distance to the north of Spencer Academy. One of the young ladies connected with the female school at Wapanucka, makes the following cheerful remarks about the pupils in that institution:—"The girls are easy to manage; indeed I doubt if in any school of a similar number better material could be found. At times they manifest so much docility and kindness; there is such a unanimous flow of tenderness and good will, that I fancy few mothers feel greater happiness in the wealth of affection bestowed by their own household, than I in that received from my Indian girls. I can see their minds gradually bursting their prison doors, and growing into sympathy with others; then I long for their entire emancipation, long to see them enjoying the liberty of the children of God."

Mr. Burns makes the following interesting statement in relation to the character of the Indian converts among whom he labours:—"It is remarkable that no Christian family among them neglects family worship; and no Christian man will refuse, when called upon to pray. What a reproof is this to those who enjoy greater light."

He also quotes the following address, made by one of the Chickasaw chiefs, at the time of taking up a collection for missionary purposes, which might be made elsewhere with equal propriety; said he, "Every man, woman and child, ought to have something to give. Give the children some work to do, that they may earn a little money, and then teach them how to give; a child should give at least a dime, a woman a quarter, and a man a half dollar. The gospel has been given to us, and we should give it to others. A great many people are in the world without the gospel. Come, then, prepared to give, so that when the hat is passed around, there be no shaking of the head."

Africa.—Corisco Mission.—Miss Georgiana M. Bliss sailed for this mission as a teacher, on board the brig Rodney Ker, from Stonington, Ct., on the 28th of March, in company with Mrs. Walker, of the American Board's Mission at the Gaboon. We trust these missionary friends will have a prosperous voyage, and we ask for them the prayers of our readers.

CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

We devote a large space in the present number of the Record to the state and prospects of the Chinese in California. Their condition at the present time is undoubtedly very trying and critical, and it is difficult to foresee what is to be their future destiny. Accounts of a very varied and contradictory nature, in relation to their number, habits, and general character, have been spread before the public, and it is very difficult to form any thing like a satisfactory conclusion on the subject. In view of this state of the case, we lay before our readers two articles, both taken from the Oriental, a paper published in San Francisco, under the general superintendence of Mr. Speer, our missionary at that place. The first, relates to the number of Chinese who have emigrated to that country and the companies to which they belong. The other is an address of a committee of Chinese merchants to Governor Bigler of the State of California. Both of these articles were written by the Chinese themselves. They shed much light upon the character and prospects of these people, and will be read with interest.

THE CHINESE COMPANIES.

Their members, numbers, and property.

As the reader has walked, upon some balmy morning along the southern side of Telegraph Hill, his attention has been attracted by a large frame structure, evidently of Chinese architecture, yet different in its appearance from the Chinese houses. The front is painted light blue, and projects an airy portico. A pair of lions, carved in wood, guard the wide doorway; above and on either side of which are gilded tablets, with an inscription upon each, of several large Chinese characters. It has often been referred to as "a temple." But its object is not religious. The building is an "Ui-kun" or company's house. The tablet over the door tells, if English sounds be employed for the Chinese characters, the name of the company,

"Yeung-wo Ui-kun."

The two perpendicular inscriptions on either side are poetical lines. They read,

Tseung kwong ham man li,
Sui hi p'o t'ung yan.

"May the prosperous light fill a thousand leagues;
May the auspicious air pervade mankind."

The two smaller lines on either board inform us that they were "Set up on a fortunate day of the 8th month, 2d year of the Emperor Hienfung"—"Carved by Fan I."

Upon entering the house by the side door an uncovered area is seen, in accordance with the Chinese custom, in the middle; from which rooms open toward the front and rear, and stairs ascend on either side to the second story. The smaller apartments below are occupied by the agents and servants of the company. The largest room or hall is pasted over with sheets of red paper covered with writing. These contain a record of the names and residence of every member of the company, and the amount of his subscription to the general fund. The upper story, and the attic, with the out-building on the upper side are, it may be, filled with lodgers; nearly all of whom are staying but temporarily, on a visit from the mines, or on their way to or from China. A few sick persons lie on their pallets around, and a group here and there discuss a bowl of rice, or smoke and chat together. In the rear is the kitchen.

Such is the Yeung-wo company's house. It is a fair specimen of similar edifices. Let us inquire what is their design?

For the information of the American community a series of questions was drawn up, and a copy forwarded to each of the five companies. The answer of the Sze-yap company is translated in full. The replies of the others are given, for the sake of brevity, only upon points where they differed. They are compiled from the records of the several companies by their agents, and I have reason to think are to be relied upon. The most trustworthy Chinese in the city vouch for their correctness. The numbers are not given to units by any company except the Ning-yeung, as the additional labour to the clerks would have been considerable. They are near enough for our object.

Sze-yap Company.

"Our house is built throughout of brick. It is surrounded also by a brick wall. It is situated in San Francisco, Pine Street, No. —. We have also a frame house in Sacramento. The company was originally composed of people from the four districts of Sanning, San-ui, Hoi-ping, Yan-ping; hence our name, Sze-yap, [which means "Four districts."] Afterwards, men from the two districts of Hok-shan and Sze-ui also entered. We did not, however, change our name on this account.

In China it is common to have councils, and in foreign countries Ui-kuns (or assembly halls.) Their object is to improve the practices of their members, and to instruct them in principles of benevolence. They are somewhat like American churches. The buildings furnish beds, fuel, and water to guests who remain for but a short period; also a lodging-place and medicines for the infirm, aged or sick. Means are bestowed upon such to enable them to return to China.

There are three agents employed by the company; also a servant who sweeps the house.

The number of our members that have arrived in this port, according to the record made at their landing, from the first until Dec. 31, 1854, has been about 16,500. Of these have returned, perhaps, 3,700. In April of last year above 3,400 separated, and formed the Ning-yeung Company. More than 300 have died. There are at present in California altogether about 9,200. We do not know the number who have left this for other countries.

Except the buildings used by the company, we have no other property. This has been purchased by the members; who have subscribed of their free will, some twenty, some fifteen, some ten dollars. A portion has been paid in; some will be paid when they are ready to return home. This is a perfectly voluntary matter; there has been no coercion used. Nor is any money required from the disabled, the sick, the aged, or from those making a second voyage to this country.

The objects to which the subscriptions to the company have been devoted are as follows: 1. The purchase of ground and erection of the buildings used by us; 2. The salaries of agents and servants; 3. For fuel, water, candles and oil; 4. To assist the sick to return; 5. For the bestowment of medicines; 6. For coffins and funeral expenses for the poor; 7. For the repairs of tombs; 8. Expenses of lawsuits; 9. Taxes upon our frame house at Sacramento; 10. Drayage, and other outlay, for passengers landing or departing, by ships. The unpaid subscriptions amount to $35,000; the names of others who have not yet stated the amount they intend giving will be good for perhaps $6,700 more.

The agents of the company are elected. At the election all the districts must have a voice. If no members from any one are present, they must be heard from. The agents must be men of tried honesty; and are required to furnish security before they enter upon their office. Their election is for the term of six months; of the expiration of which they must give notice, and call a new election. But if they be found faithful to their duties they are eligible to reëlection.

Our company has never employed men to work in the mines for their own profit; nor have they ever purchased any slaves or used them here.

The present agents of the company are Chu Wingtin, Yu Fuseung, and Cheung Akong."

Yeung-wo Company.

"The three districts of Heung-shan, Tung-kun, and Tsang-shing, are embraced in this company. The house built here is for their accommodation in coming and going.

The total number of men from these districts since the commencement of the emigration is about 16,900, there have died about 400, and returned 2,500. The number of those now in the country is in the neighbourhood of 14,000.

Three agents are employed by the company: Tong K. Achick, Chu Yat, and Li Tszkun. There is a branch at Sacramento, and the Heung-shan people have a house in Stockton; but there is no regular agent employed in either city. The houses are mere lodging-places. The entire property of the company may be valued at above $20,000. There is perhaps $100,000 of subscriptions which they have not received."

Canton Company.

"We have a frame house in San Francisco, on Clay Street; and two frame houses, one in Sacramento, and one in Stockton. Its Chinese name "Sam Yap," [that is, "three districts"] is obtained from its originally including people from the districts of Nam-hoi, Pun-yu, and Shun-tak, in Canton province. Men from two others, Sam-shui and Tsing-yuen, have joined, however, since our organization.

Two agents are employed at present, Tam Yik-pui, and Chan Pat-cheung; also a porter to take charge of the house.

The entire number of Chinese who have come to San Francisco in connection with this company, according to the record of the ship-agent, is over 8,400. Returned to China, above 1,300. Dead, so far as record has been made of burials, over 300. Remaining in California, about 6,800. Some have gone to other countries and been otherwise lost sight of.

The term for which agents hold office is one year, at the close of which the agent gives notice, and a new election is called. If he has been found to be a trustworthy man, his security is renewed, and a new election is not entered into.

The amount of entrace fees and subscriptions not paid is about $22,000. That expected from individuals who have not yet put down their names is perhaps $4,700."

Ning-yeung Company.

"This company's house is situated in San Francisco, No. 47 Broadway, near Kearney street. Its front is, however, toward the South. The house is of wood; it has an enclosed yard; and a brick kitchen attached. The company consists of the people of San-ning, who separated from the Sze-yap company.

It has two agents, Li Leung-nam, and Mui Tsin-sui; and a person who is cook and porter. They are elected for the term of six months.

When the company separated from the Sze-yap it contained about 3,450 men; this was in April, 1853. Since then till Dec. 31, 1854, there have arrived 4,899. Returned to China, 1,269. There have died 173. There are now connected with us 6,907 persons. There may be individuals dead, or departed to other regions, of whom we have no record.

Of money subscribed, but not paid in, there is due over $20,000. Of what will be paid by others there is about $4,000."

Yan-wo Company.

"The only house we own is in Happy Valley, San Francisco. The entire value of our property is $6,000. Not paid in, $15,000. Our entrance fee is $16.

There have come to California, in connection with this company, 2,100 persons. About 160 have gone back and about the same number have died in various parts of the State. The number now in connection with us is 1,780. They are from the two districts of San-on and Kwai-shin. A few are from Ka-ying Chau.

"Our agents are elected for the term of one year. There are at present two: Kong Kwok-yeung, and Fan Ut."

In our next number we propose to make further explanations respecting the general design and operations of the companies; and shall furnish a translation of some of their rules. We close for the present with presenting in a tabular form their computations of the total number of Chinese that have arrived in California; that have returned hence to their native land; that have died here; and finally, their estimate of the number at present in the State. We can from this table ascertain more nearly than by any other method the Chinese population of California. There are probably not a thousand men who have not connected themselves with one or the other of these five companies.

Resolutions of the Shasta Miners.

At a late meeting in the town of Shasta the following were passed:

"Resolved, That we, the miners of Shasta County, forbid Chinamen from working in the mines of this county after the 25th of February 1855.

Resolved, That we earnestly request the co-operation of the miners of Trinity, Siskiyon, and all other mining counties throughout the State."

We were informed, when in the Southern mining region, a few weeks since, that much of the general opposition to the Chinese arose from notions in regard to them which we know to be unfounded; that they are slaves, or a kind of serfs called "coolies;" that they are brought here by wealthy capitalists; &c. In an article in our last we showed that there are no such coolies in California, or even in China. In this issue the subject of their "companies" is taken up, and will be further noticed in that of next week. We most earnestly ask the notice of our brethren of the press to the facts contained in them. For justice's sake, and humanity's sake, let us know what we are doing in regard to a race, the questions regarding whom are of themselves sufficiently difficult and troublesome, without adding to them uncalled-for injustice and oppression.

REPLY TO GOV. BIGLER'S MESSAGE, BY THE CHINESE MERCHANTS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

To His Excellency Gov. Bigler, and to the Legislature, and the People of the State of California.

The committee of the Chinese Merchants of San Francisco desire to present, for your consideration, the following respectful representation:—

We have read the message of the Governor.

Firstly—It is stated that "too large a number of the men of the Flowery Kingdom have emigrated to this country, and that they have come alone, without their families." We may state among the reasons for this, that the wives and families of the better families of China have generally compressed feet; they live in the utmost privacy; they are unused to winds and waves; and it is exceedingly difficult to bring families upon distant journies over great oceans. Yet a few have come; nor are they all. And further, there have been several injunctions warning the people of the Flowery land not to come here; which have fostered doubts; nor have our hearts found peace in regard to bringing families. Suppose you say, "we will restrain only those who work in the mines. We would not forbid merchants," it is replied, that the merchandize imported by Chinese merchants chiefly depends upon Chinese consumption. If there be no Chinese miners allowed, what business can we have to do? The occupations are mutually dependent, like tooth and lip; neither can spare the other.

It is, we are assured, the principle of your honourable country to protect the people; and it has benevolence to mankind at heart. Now, the natives of China, or of any strange country, have one nature. All consider that good and evil cannot be in unison. All nations are really the same. Confucius says: "Though a city had but ten houses, there must be some in it honest and true." Suppose then we see it declared that "the people of the Flowery land are altogether without good," we cannot but fear that the rulers do not exercise a liberal public spirit, and that they defer their own knowledge of right to an undue desire to please men.

It is said, that "of the Chinese who understand your language and laws, the number is very small; and that we have no community of feeling with you." Now those who trade in our native cities with your honourable merchants did understand your language, and were acquainted with your customs. But suppose villagers, from everywhere, emigrate, most of whom do not know your speech; and that pleasant intercourse should be thus as it were intercepted; that though the heart desires, the expressions will not flow; that though the teeth be unclosed, still the proper words are not released; ought either the one or the other nation to take offence?

If it be observed that the "number of our merchants in your honourable State is not great," we reply, that nevertheless the amount of merchandize arriving here is not small, embracing imports by men of all other nations, as well as the business of our own traders. And this mutual general traffic fills the coffers of thousands, and involves the interests of myriads of people. But the miner in the mountain, and the workman in the shop, do no less than the merchant, pay respect to your customs.

It is objected against us that vagabonds "gather in places and live by gambling." But these collection of gamblers, as well as the dens of infamous women, are forbidden by the laws of China. These are offences that admit of a clear definition. Our mercantile class have a universal contempt for such. But obnoxious as they are, we have no power to drive them away; and we have often wished these things were prevented, but we have no influence that can reach them. We hope and pray that your honourable country would enact vigorous laws, by which these brothels and gambling places may be broken up; and thus worthless fellows will be compelled to follow some honest employment; gamblers to change their calling; and your policemen and petty officials also be deprived of opportunities of trickery and extortion. Harmony and prosperity would then prevail; and the days would await us when each man could find peace in his own sphere of duty. Such is the earnest desire of the merchants who present this.

It is said "that the Chinese go at once to the mines; that they have no other employment; that they come to this State only with the desire of obtaining wealth; and that having attained this object, they return home." We remember the times when the reports went abroad of the great excellence of your honourable State and its inhabitants. The people of the Flowery land were received like guests. An article left upon the road was not taken. Each was at liberty to traffic or to mine. In consequence, with the hope and desire of enjoying a residence where the customs were so admirable and just, we came. In those early times we were greeted with favour. Each treated the other with politeness. From far and near we came and were pleased. Days and months but added to our satisfaction. The ships gathered like clouds. Merchants paid freely their customs and taxes; and miners their licenses. But from the commencement to the present time, the profits upon the imports to this State have not paid the shipping and other expenses; and many of us have brought various commodities, the whole sum of which we have lost. Must there be added to this the insults and ridicule of the little and the mean? Look at the mines. There openly have they planned, and in secret they have wrought us injury. They have destroyed life, and plundered property. Wagoners have extorted from us; boatmen vexed and done us violence. To these barbarities we dared not reply; we must submit to the degradation.

We are told we "are no profit to your honourable State." Truly, it has been of none to the people of China. We had secretly thought, as your honourable State is a newly opened country, as it is a broad land, as merchants from the four quarters of the world are gathered here, and in order early to obtain a virtuous and intelligent population, that men would be treated with politeness; and thus your population would become one worthy of honour and admiration, and hence should proceed a race exhibiting extraordinary virtues. Surely a fountain so opened would not cease to flow. But suppose one to stare rudely in the face of a visitor, and insult him at the door, the man who respected himself must be fettered from advancing further. And upon this subject it must be remarked again, that though the land we live in is certainly the same, yet the employments of the Chinese and Americans differ, and our places of habitation are not everywhere together.

Some have remarked that "emigrants from other countries bring their families; that their homes are distributed over the State; that some engage in manual employments, and amass wealth; that thus mutual interests are courted, mutual civilities extended, and common sympathies excited; that while in every respect they adopt your customs, on the contrary the Chinese do not." To this we rejoin, that the manners and customs of China and of foreign countries are not alike. This is an ancient principle, and is prevalent now. What if other countries do differ somewhat from your honourable nation in hats, and clothes, and letters, and other things, while there is much that is common! In China itself, the people differ. In China, there are some dissimilarities in the inhabitants of various provinces, or departments, or counties, or townships, or even villages. Their dialects, their manners, their sentiments, do not wholly accord. Their articles of use are not all made by one rule. Their common customs all differ. One line cannot be drawn for all. And just so it must be in all parts of the world. It would certainly appear unreasonable, when the officers and the merchants of your honourable country come to our Middle Kingdom, were they rebuked for not knowing our language, or for not being acquainted with our affairs.

But there are things of greater consequence to be considered in connection with this matter. We Chinese and your honourable nation are possessed of a common nature. All must thank High Heaven for natures disposed to love the right and hate the wrong; and it has ordered also the matter of hats, and clothes, and forms of ceremony. Therefore our Most Gracious Emperors have cherished and showed kindness to those from afar. No distinction has been made between subject and foreigner. They have set their minds and hearts to this subject, for the reason that in former times there has been much discord with other people. Our Emperors of the present Ta-tsing Dynasty have issued commands to officers, both civil and military, and to the people, to exercise perfect faithfulness in their duties to the officers, and the merchants, of your honourable country, declaring that they would not suffer one hair's violation of them. Kindness and politeness, therefore, were reciprocated; and high and low felt that they were one. All under heaven know this.

But of late days your honourable people have established a new practice. They have come to the conclusion that we Chinese are the same as Indians and Negroes, and your courts will not allow us to bear witness. And yet these Indians know nothing about the relations of society; they know no mutual respect; they wear neither clothes nor shoes; they live in wild places and in caves. When we reflect upon the honourable position that China has maintained for many thousands of years; upon the wisdom transmitted by her philosophers; upon her array of civil and of military powers; upon the fame of her civilization; upon the wealth and the populousness of her possessions; upon the cordial tenderness with which successive dynasties of Emperors have treated strangers; deeming native or foreigner all as one; and then behold the people of other nations heap ridicule upon us as if we were the same as Indians —we ask, is it possible that this is in accordance with the will of Heaven! is it possible that this is the mind of the officers, and the people, of your honourable country? can it be possible that we are classed as equals with this uncivilized race of men? We think you must be wholly unacquainted with the amicable feelings which have hitherto existed between our two nations. We doubt whether such be the decision of enlightened intelligence, and enlarged liberality.

Finally. It is said that "henceforth you would prevent the emigration of people of the Flowery land." Hitherto our people have been imbued with your sacred doctrines; we have tried to exercise modesty and reason. If we can henceforth be treated with mutual courtesy, then we shall be glad to dwell within your honourable boundaries. But if the rabble are to harass us, we wish to return to our former homes. We will speedily send and arrest the embarkation of any that have not yet come. And now we, who are here, do earnestly request that a definite time may be fixed, by which we may be governed, within which we can return our merchandize, and make any necessary arrangements. We trust that in that case the friendly intercourse of previous days will not be interrupted; and that your honourable nation may maintain its principles in tenderly cherishing the strangers from afar. If there be no definite regulation upon this subject, but only these incessant rumours about forbidding the Chinese emigration, we fear the result will be that the class who know nothing, of every nation, will be ever seeking occasions to make trouble; that our Chinese people in the mines will be subjected to much concealed violence, to robbery of their property, and quarrels about their claims. Thus there will be unlimited trouble; and where will be the end of it? Further, if there be no definite date and regular method fixed for our return to Canton, where can we make preparations in San Francisco for the accommodation of several tens of thousands of the Chinese? We most earnestly request the officers of the government early to issue a definite enactment. Such a course will be the best for the interests of our nation. It will be the best for the Chinese here.

BELGIUM.

The following communication, from one of our respected correspondents in Belgium, gives some interesting facts in connection with the prospects of evangelical religion in that part of the world, and cannot fail to interest our readers.

I ought to have sent you, long ago, news from our field of labour; but alas, my occupations are more than I am quite equal to. Some things which are necessary are unavoidably postponed, and therefore you will kindly excuse me, although our last annual report is published, yet as I fear it has not reached you, and as it is written in French, I will speak at this time more particularly of our last year's proceedings. Our Lord, as he is wont, has seen fit to visit us with various trials. Our honorary President, the venerable Marquis d'Aouss, has been removed from this world; by his departure we have not only lost his generous co-operation, but we find ourselves at issue with his heirs, ardent persecutors of the Gospel, who come with the utmost bad faith to the fulfilment of the engagements entered into by the late M. d'Aouss. The congregation formed at the station which the late Marquis supported, has been subjected to all sorts of vexations, and a part of the same has already been obliged to quit the place, because all the land belongs to the heir of the chateau. Nevertheless we have been, and are consoled by the noble testimony borne by the Marquis and by the persecuted and faithful brethren. God has again been pleased to gather into his rest, one of our best patrons. Although his health had been very feeble for several years, his departure has left a great void.

I may point out also as trials, but of another kind, that for the last two years we have had no general movements of revival in any part of our field of labour; still, there have been continually souls awakened and turned to the Lord. I do not know that there is one of the churches that has not made some progress in this respect, but we glean rather than gather up into sheaves. The work is humble, but it is precious to us nevertheless, and we know that it is so in the eyes of God likewise. We have reason also to rejoice and give thanks, that amidst much distress and great temptations, our dear young churches are growing in faith, hope and love; not so much certainly as we could desire, but sufficiently to prove to us that we do not labour in vain. We consider it also a great favour from God, that the Evangelical Society comprises at this moment, in its ecclesiastical body, all the independent or free churches of Belgium. The number is small, it is true, but their unity is not the less interesting, and we pray the Lord to preserve it to us. Our work of colportage, though restricted, is going on well and extending itself, especially in Flanders. In many places the colporteurs have the opportunity of being true missionaries. The dissemination of tracts and religious books has been greater than in preceding years, and we have reason to hope that it will become much more abundant. An association has been formed in our churches in Brussels, which has for its object to unite all Christians to take a part in the distribution of tracts, and it has already obtained a degree of success which seems to be a pledge of the divine benediction. Our book-shop continues to render great service to the cause of evangelization in this country. In a commercial point of view the result is of little import; but it is its religious and moral influence which is the essential point with us. Our week day schools and Sunday schools go on very well, blessed be God, they are improving. The number of schools increases every year and they bear good fruits. I wish I could give you a good number of facts characteristic of the work, but my letter would be too long, and I will confine myself to two or three extracts from the correspondence of our missionaries contained in our annual report.

An explosion of gas, or fire damp in a coal mine, had made twenty-five victims, and had grievously smitten one of our stations, in taking away brother A——, who had won the affection and esteem of the whole flock. The priests in this, as in other cases, tried to prevent the religious rite of interment. The firmness of our brethren, however, in the end enabled them to carry their point. The pastor of the station has transmitted us the following details of this very interesting occurrence. "I found several of my friends assembled as the house of Mr. L——, all a prey to the deepest grief, whilst waiting my arrival; the father of A and the deacons had been several times to the administration to claim the body of our friend. On seeing them come, the first time, some persons said, 'Here are the Protestants coming to claim the body of A——. As for him he was an excellent man, the best of all the work people.' The curé of , who was amongst the spectators, enraged at so honourable a testimonial borne to heretics, protested by repeatedly uttering a loud Hush! hush! The guardians behaved with great civility and propriety. The curé repeatedly laid claim to the corpse. He would fain have had it interred by night, like the rest. The guardians, wishing to please every body, scarcely knew what to say or to do; they proposed to us to inter the body in our cemetery at T. They undertook to pay the expenses attending this step, but our friends resolutely maintained their right, and one of them, replied, that if there were no Protestants at M, that was precisely the reason why it was necessary that the gospel should be preached there on such an occasion. Our dear A—— was found alone at some distance from the rest, lying on his face, his head in his two hands as if he had been in prayer; he had in his pocket a religious tract wrapped in a piece of paper, and thus he fell—like a good soldier of Jesus Christ on the field of battle, and his works have followed him. I never could have supposed that the death of a working-man could have produced so deep and general an impression. Standing at the door of the house where the body was deposited, I delivered a discourse in these words, 'For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.' On passing by the office of the company, the clerks came and took their place behind the coffin. One fact may give you an idea of the number of persons who acted as bearers; it is, that although the distance from the house to the cemetery is more than two miles and a quarter, it was never necessary to stop, or to place the bier on the ground. On beholding this immense procession, some devotees exclaimed, 'What a sad thing it is that there are so many Protestants! they will bring down a curse upon the city.' I am told that the curate was at the window, he would have been pained to see his prediction verified. Hundreds of tracts were distributed at the cemetery. All the numerous accounts I have received led me to hope that a good testimony was on that day borne to the power of the gospel of Christ in the idolatrous city of M."

Happy results of teaching Catholics to read the Bible.

Two months ago at a meeting of the brethren, I proposed as a powerful means of evangelizing, within the reach of very many persons, the teaching of the illiterate Catholics to read; this exhortation has borne its fruits. A sister, whose example I should like to see followed by a great many others, immediately set herself to work. She proposed to some Romanists who lived in houses belonging to her, to teach them to read; many consented to it on condition that they should not become Protestants by so doing. The husband of our sister ranged himself in the number of her scholars. They began with the letters of the alphabet. Our sister, with the blessing of God, was enabled to make it attractive, and now after only two months, her pupils begin to read the New Testament. This is certainly a fair result, but a much more important one is, that the resolution not to become Protestants very soon vanished, and that three persons, at all events, have been brought to the knowledge of the gospel. Almost immediately after having begun, and in consequence of the conversations our sister has had with them, they came to hear the preaching of the gospel, and since then they have steadily continued it. Two of them —husband and wife—appear serious, and devotedly attached to the truth. Another married man, whose wife has given up the lessons, is much more decided; he is of a vivacious temperament, and speaks with great fluency. He was passionately fond of the pleasures of the world, always foremost at the dance at the kermesses (village fairs); at games and at the tavern, he was a match in every respect for all his companions at folly. He accepted our sister's offer to teach him to read, and by her advice came once to hear the preaching of the gospel. He had no idea of our worship, nor of the truths of religion, and was therefore all the more deeply struck by all he saw and heard. The serious impressions he received, fostered and developed by our sister, have borne good fruits in his heart. His life is entirely changed. He told me a few days since, "It is surprising I know no one who was once more entirely carried away by foolish passions for worldly pleasures than I have been; and now, not only have I abandoned them, but they no more tempt me, and I can even no longer imagine how rational beings can give themselves up to such frivolities, or to amusements of so low an order. I am ashamed of myself, when I think of my past life. Oh, how good the Lord is to have made me to feel the value of the gospel, and to have lifted my heart up to himself!"

Conversion of a young officer, his persecutions and death.

Some time ago I made the acquaintance of a young man, an ex-subaltern officer, who had been ill for many years, but the state of his soul inspired me with much more compassion than that of his body. He had fallen in a deism bordering on atheism; the existence of Jesus Christ was in his view a mere fable, which served for a basis to so many other fables published by men interested in inventing them. At the very first conversation I had with him, he inspired me with great confidence by the frankness with which he opened his heart to me, and by his avowal that he was quite ready to retrace his steps, if it could be proved to him that he was in a false way. Blessed be God! the intercourse he had with the brethren who visited him in my absence, and especially the serious conversation he had with Mr. D——, have removed his doubts to such a degree, as is astonishing to himself; and lately he said to me, that if any one had told him three months ago, that he should one day believe what he now believed, he would have laughed in his face. Now, he no longer considers the revelations from God as mere fables, but as realities; facts which God has accomplished in his love for us. Jesus Christ is become his Saviour—hence he finds that he now enjoys consolation which the religious systems he had fabricated for himself never afforded him. And he leans on the merits of Christ Jesus, in approaching by prayer the throne of Him who he formerly termed "the Supreme Being," but who he now calls his Heavenly Father, because he now feels that he is become his child by adoption. The priests have not failed at various times to use every method to seduce him; but all their efforts have been broken against that rock, "It is written."

It must be added, that a priest and his vicar had already visited this young man when he was an unbeliever, to induce him to follow the Romish ritual, when he told them that he was willing to follow them as soon as they would have proved to him the falsity of his system, and the truth of their own. But they told him as their only answer, that whereas the Church is infallible, his duty was to believe what it teaches, and not to dispute; that in any case he ought to begin by confessing himself. The young man told them that they ought first to prove their right and authority to receive confession, before they required him to confess himself to them. At another time, their replies were hardly more satisfactory. They treated him as a libertine and debauchee. "For," added they, "if you had lived a decent life, you would have no scruple in confessing yourself to us." One may suppose that this reply was very irritating to one, whom our two priests were endeavouring to convert; and that he begged them to retire, and not to return until they had found better arguments than abuse; from what we shall read presently, we shall find that their second argument was money. Honourable clerical proselytism!

Another report, a few months later, acquaints us with his last moments:—"The young man, the ex-subaltern, whom I have often mentioned to you, has entered lately into his rest. The priests of the place did not cease to harass him in all possible ways to the last day of his life; and to try to profit by his poverty, in trying to buy him at any price. But God did not fail to keep him from their seductions, and to strengthen him by a living faith in the expiatory sacrifice of Jesus Christ. On the evening previous to his death, talking with him on his approaching entrance into eternity, and questioning him on his spiritual state, he said to me, 'Oh, sir, my sufferings are too great to allow me entering into details of what I now experience. But I can tell you to the glory of God, that I feel like a child to whom precious promises have been given, and who waits impatiently for the moment when they shall be realized.'"

Extension of the work of evangelization.

Since the publication of our annual report, some facts not unimportant have occurred in our sphere of activity. As an instance of trial, I am sorry to tell you that a set of mischief-makers have caused serious difficulties at one of our stations, fortunately one of the least in importance—may the Lord intervene. On the other hand, we have been enabled to engage a new evangelist for the Flemish part of this country, who seems to be well qualified for his work. We have placed him in the important city of Ghent, and there, aided by a colporteur, he has been enabled to excite a great emotion, which we have every reason to hope will, under the operation of the Holy Spirit, bring on an important revival. This work is naturally a subject of special prayer amongst us. We have also been enabled to engage a second Dutch evangelist, who, added to deep and solid piety, seems to be possessed of very valuable gifts for the ministry; and we expect to place him very shortly in one of our most important cities. We have also just agreed on the founding of a station in the city of Mons, the capital of the province of Hainault; and it is entrusted to an ex-priest of Rome, who has already laboured about eight years for the evangelization of France, his native country. He is a solid and able man.

An appeal for aid in this work.

Pray for the work which the Lord has entrusted to us, dear brethren of America! Beseech him, with us, to make steadfast and sanctify what has been already built up; to mark with the blessed seal of his approbation what we are undertaking anew; and to grant us faith and the various means of action to supply the wants of our country, which hitherto have been but very ill provided for. If we had men and money, our operations might be considerably extended. Be mindful, we beseech you, of our necessities; give us in the first place the aid of your prayers, which is what we prize before all. Help us then with your temporal wealth. The supplies you have already sent us have been very valuable, and at this moment, when we are on the eve of our quarterly payments, without any money in hand, we commend ourselves especially and urgently to your Christian liberality, praying that it may please the Author of all grace to return to you an hundred fold, what you are disposed to do for poor Belgium.

MISCELLANIES.

EASTERN AFRICA.

Sept. 2.—I delivered my present to the king. As to the person of Kmeri, he is a man full of years, but of a green old age. He is a tall man, and very black, with very expressed features, and a high nose, quite a different figure from the short-sized Wasamba, with their diminutive noses. In his habits he is rather dirty. He is not known ever to have washed himself. However greasy his hands are, I invariably saw him rubbing them against the old Arab coat he usually wears, which shines like a mirror from former uses made of it.

Sept. 3.—According to country-fashion, I went to greet the king. As on every clear day, so also on this, he was sitting in some sequestered spot of his banana plantation, surrounded by the Wafumo wa Fuga. Passing by his bedstead, I saluted him, "Simba muene," (amounting in this formula to "Thou art the Lion!") which he answered with a low, groaning "Hem, Hadani," (as he called me); to which I answered, "Ha Sumbe," ("O king!") When I had already passed, he called me back, desiring to be shown European medicine. Having seen my little stock, he asked me to taste of every thing a little, which I did not refuse, as I knew that the old man always labours under the impression of getting poisoned some day. He never tastes any food that has not been prepared before his own eyes.

Sept. 8.—Very early this morning Kmeri went to a high rock behind his plantation, to make uganga for his country. All the ways and paths leading in that direction were interdicted; indeed, not a single person was to be seen the whole day. In Usambára it is thought necessary for the king to be versed in all the branches of sorcery—to be, in fact, the chief sorcerer. Even the young Kmeri, although still a little boy, is already surrounded with all sorts of waganga, to instruct him in all their arts and tricks, so that the future king of Usambára will not ascend the throne of his fathers untaught; but what a soul-destroying training this may be, is easily to be conceived. Not unfrequently it happens that certain roads are interdicted on pain of death, or other heavy penalties; and the lawless soldiery of Kmeri, availing themselves of the thing, have made this to serve their own purposes for extorting goods from passing strangers, on the plea of their having passed prohibited roads. Before they will be brought before Kmeri they will pay anything, considering themselves even fortunate for having got off so easily. Such extortions are, of course, not known to Kmeri; but if they were, he would give a coarse shout of laughter, and perhaps even praise their cleverness.

Sept. 10.—In the course of gathering a vocabulary, I came to-day to the word "heaven." I was glad to find that in Kisamba there was not the word Mulungu, "God," because it confounds the Creator with heaven and firmament. They called heaven "ulanga," which also means "above." Thinking that they had misunderstood me—supposing I had asked what "above" meant—they replied, "No, no you mean "ulanga wa Sumbe" ("heaven of the king.") "But ulanga of what king?" I asked, astonished. "Of Mulungu?" when they laughed immoderately, saying, "No, of Kmeri." Poor people, to fancy that Kmeri would even in heaven play the Simba muene! The king absorbs every idea in Usambára: he is God, and heaven, and everything. Among the Suáhelis and Wanika, God does everything for which people cannot account. Among the Wasamba he does nothing at all, neither heard I mention of his name, except when I asked about him, when they used to say, "O, Mulungu is nothing with us."

Sept. 16.—Mbereko introduced two Wabugu. Before this I had seen many of this fine people, the finest of East Africa I had seen, but had never spoken to them. They are very slender and tall. Their colour is a brown yellow, not unlike the Banians. Their noses are very fine, and their features pleasing, kind, and prepossessingly innocent. The use of cloth they have not adopted yet; they still prefer cowhides, rendered smooth by rubbing—tanning is unknown—and which they hem very tastefully with brass wire. The only ornament they carry on their slender persons is a circular piece of wood, two inches in diameter, sticking in their very largely perforated ear-lap. Amulets I have never seen on them. The original country of the Wabugu is situated west of Ngu, which many have left on account of wars. Their first settlements were in the valleys of Páre. Being hunted there by the savage Wasegua, on account of the high price of Wabugu females in the slave-market at Zanzibar, they resorted under the shadow of the famous Simba muene. Kmeri made them his herdsmen, their original and only occupation having been tending cows. They are exceedingly timid, and do never fight, wherefore Kmeri calls them his Banians. Their language is different from Kisamba; but, as we could not understand each other, I could gather but a few words of their idiom.

Sept. 21.—In the early morn, Kmeri had come to a small hut under a large rock of the mountain of Moheso. When I called on him, I found him in a very good mood, and very talkative. But the poor old man, whenever I turn his thoughts on religion has something else to ask or to do. I cannot get his ear longer than a few minutes. I do not know whether it is perfect indifference, or whether he is afraid of being disquieted. But, in a great measure, it may also be owing to the language, which I speak but very imperfectly. He is very kind towards me, and very open—this is true; but what is all this, if he may or will not hear my message? But if he will not hear himself, may he be spared to become the protector of an infant church of Christ in his dominions! The vain king asked me several times whether his capital, Fuga, was not as large as Zanzibar; but being still full four miles off, and only seeing part of the town, I could not judge.

Sept. 24.—Kmeri's Mshika Ufunguo came, begging a marriage present. He was going to Msoasara, to conclude the bargain with the father of his bride. The usual price is a goat, which is killed and eaten on the day when the people agree to live together. There is no solemnity of any kind connected with this event; but without the permission of the king it cannot be undertaken. All the children, male and female, are considered as belonging to the king—as, in fact, everything. The males, as soon as they are about nine years of age, leave their fathers' huts, and sleep altogether at the Kidara dsha Wabuene (king's house of the youths). From this time they are constantly about the king, doing little jobs, until they are fit for firing a gun. Twenty of these boys have a sumbe wa ubuene (king of youth) over them, who sleeps with them. About their fourteenth or fifteenth year they enter the war service. When they are fortunate enough to get a musket, they come under the Wangeresa (Englishmen), that formidable body of fellows who fight all the wars of Usambáni, carry all messages, and kill all offenders. Out of their number the king chooses all his officers, as washika ufunguo (keybearers), whose chief business it is to prepare the king's food, count his goats and fowls, and when the king gives orders, look that they are duly executed. Besides, they are the spokesmen between the women and the king, bringing all their little wishes about a piece of meat, a hoe, a bill-hook, a hatchet—to which the king makes the handles himself—before the ears of his majesty. Besides these, there are the sumbe wa ubuene and akida wa kondo (war commanders). If one of their number wishes to marry, he brings the matter before the king, from whom he receives a goat for the father of the bride, and the bride herself a piece of Americano, a billhook, a hoe, and a knife. After marriage, all the titles the husband may have had are lost. A member of the Wangeresa he may remain, but he returns to his village or town, tilling the ground.

Oct. 15.—The day for the review having arrived, the king's forces gathered at a small hill two miles off, Msoasara. After seven o'clock they came marching down until they reached the river opposite to my hut, where they all sat down. After a sheep had been killed, as an offering, and roasted, together with a bunch of green bananas, and eaten by the soldiers, they crossed the river in one long row. First, 300 spearmen, each one with a large iron bill at his side; second, about 100 with bows and arrows; lastly, the wild Wangeresa, with their muskets and the flag of Fuga—red and white, and written over with sentences of the Koran. They were about 300. After them Kmeri came, with the Wafumo wa Fuga. The king, in his usual state dress, had girded a large Kikuafi sabre at his side, and in his hand a long spear. Instead of a cap he had a strip of cow's skin round his head, in which three huge ostrich feathers had been stuck. In passing before my hut, he nodded to me very significantly, just as if he wanted to say, Do you see that I am a big king? Mbereko was commanded to bring me to the parade-ground, a small, considerably level spot, half a mile north-west of Msoasara. All the exercise consisted in walking about in single files, whilst the commanders ran up and down the lines brandishing their spears, and shouting, "Kmeri! Kmeri!" Muskets seem to be very inoffensive weapons for the king's enemies, as they won't go off. Not so for the soldiers; for when they are lucky enough to fire one off, the soldier is completely turned round from so greatly overcharging his old Tower musket. Of aiming at something they have no idea, neither is it necessary, for Kmeri is in possession of a uganga, contained in a calabash, which makes every ball kill its man. Every division has a calabash with the wonderful medicine carried in front; and whenever soldiers have to pass a dangerous region, where fire arms might be wanted, one of those calabashes attends them. At last Kmeri gave orders for assembling before him. He was sitting under a large tree, surrounded by the Wafumo. The sonorous sound of horns brought all the men up, forming a square before the king. The headman of Fuga, entering the square, commenced running up and down, brandishing his spear, and informing at the same time that they had come together for planning a war against the Wasegula. Now Kmeri himself got up, under the most frantic acclamations, "Mbago! Mbago!" Here he did not figure as the majestic Simba muene (Lion himself). In a measured pace, with drawn sabre, he walked up and down the fronts, attended by two great men of Fuga, who walked before and behind, picking up every stone, every grass, every leaf that was in his way, that he might not injure his feet, whilst he was discussing the reasons for making war. When he had done, he put the question, "Will you go and fight, or not?" A tremendous shout of "Mbago! Mbago!" was the answer. "If not," he added, "I myself and my children will go: we are sufficient for annihilating all the Wasegula." Another shout of "Mbago!" and he sat down. The Wangeresa, who performed afterwards a warlike dance, kept singing, "Kmeri, if you have no powder, sell us and buy: others will fight in our stead." Toward the conclusion, a large bull was brought up to the king, for the commanders of divisions. Being let loose, he ran off at the top of his speed; but nevertheless the Wangeresa were soon up with him, cutting his hamstrings with their sabres. On the evening, when the king returned, he came into my hut, inquiring whether our king could get as many soldiers together within the space of one day's notice? "Within a quarter of an hour, twice and three times that number," I said, "as all soldiers lived together with us in large houses." "What is the name of your king?" "We have a queen," I replied. This set all the Wafumo wa Fuga into a fit of laughter; but Kmeri, after I had explained the reasons, greatly approved of the thing, remarking, "The Wasungu have indeed misungu." ("The wise men have wisdom or artifice.") Msungu does not mean "white" but "wise" man.

IMPORTANCE OF THE COLPORTEUR ENTERPRISE.

A colporteur in Canada, writes:

"My Dear Sir—You will kindly excuse the delay of two or three days in sending you my report of labours, &c., for the quarter, ending with the 31st March. I may say that during that quarter 'I have done what I could.' It has been an exceedingly severe and stormy winter with us—the most so I have seen in western Canada; nor is it yet away, as we have still keen frost, and a good deal of snow in the fields. But while the weather has been trying, and has sometimes given me a little interruption, it has been quite favourable for sleighing, and I have availed myself of it, to travel almost the whole quarter, going over a good deal of ground, and spreading our estimable books pretty widely. Everywhere the books of the Board continue to meet with a favourable reception, and I hope and earnestly pray, that they may be as good seed, which shall yield the fruits of righteousness many days hence. I often think that the seed is of such a kind, and is scattered by me, merely as a transient sower, that the products are not to be looked for speedily, and that but little of them may ever come to my knowledge. The Lord however will make use of his own truth, to fufill, in his time, his gracious designs to the souls of men, not in the present day only, but through generations to come; and it is comfortable and cheering to keep this in mind. "In the morning we are to sow our seed, and in the evening not withhold our hand; for we know not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.' I am more and more convinced, that the system of colportage is by far the best and most efficient one, for diffusing good reading among the people generally; we go into their houses, addressing them as a true friend; set the books before them, and speak of them commendingly, which we can do with a good conscience; and the visits and conversations call forth in not a few, a prompt desire to become possessed of these treasures; while in almost every instance, the well-pleasedness which is felt from receiving such a visit, leads to the purchase of one or more books, as the least thing they can do. And thus it is, that volumes rich in gospel truth are introduced, where otherwise they would never have found their way. How much is it to be wished for, that labourers in this vast sphere of usefulness, over extensive lands, were multiplied by thousands!"

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

A minister of the Free Church of Scotland, writing to the Corresponding Secretary, says:—

"It may be interesting to you to receive the following extract from the report of a deputation, which about eighteen months ago, was sent out by us to visit our churches in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

"Speaking of some of the districts in the southern part of Nova Scotia, one of the deputation says, 'Colporteurs from the United States have been the means of introducing a large number of standard religious works. In visiting the families, I found the works of Boston, and others of our Scottish divines, in almost every house. The Presbyterian Publication Board at Philadelphia has conferred great benefits on all our churches in the American colonies.'

"God be thanked for all that your Church is able to do in the way of spreading sound Calvinistic and Presbyterian doctrine, amongst the rapidly increasing masses of the western world."

FROM A COLPORTEUR IN OHIO.

My Dear Sir—I enclose you some statements of my labours, together with some thoughts suggested by them.

In M—— church, they had raised a contribution recently, for the purpose of replenishing their Sunday-school library, and their pastor proposed to a few influential members, to double the sum and obtain a complete set of the Board's publications. This proposal was favourably received, and will probably be attended to during the winter. The books were cordially approved of, and received higher encomiums than usual as to style, cheapness, &c., &c. There, as well as in two other churches since visited, the Confession of Faith was spoken of as a cheap book.

On my way northward, I spent the Sabbath in B——, enjoying a delightful communion season in Brother ——'s church, and commemorating the Saviour's love with his people, who received me with truly Christian love and regard. The labours of their devoted pastor are richly blessed to the ingathering of souls. On this occasion, an intelligent youth of eighteen, with whom I spent a night at a former communion season, and whom I found deeply anxious, and afterwards indulging hope, was admitted with others. I hope he may yet be a chosen vessel to bear the gospel tidings. He procured from me the "Memoir of McCheyne" at my former visit, and more recently I placed in his hands, "Letters to a Recent Convert." Viewing the destitute churches, I cannot but feel deeply the want of labourers, for "the harvest is plenteous, but the labourers are few."

At T——, I sold "The Grace of Christ" and Dr. Alexander's "Religious Experience," to a lady who I learned had her children baptized by a Romish priest, but who is an occasional attendant at the Presbyterian church. Many of the members of this church were connected with another body until recently, and do not realize the value of doctrinal truth as I could desire; but the tracts supplied in part the place of volumes, so that I hope good may result from my visit. In the adjacent country I sold many valuable works.

In M—— church, organized recently with a few staunch Presbyterian families, I met a very cordial reception, and disposed of the very works I wished to place in their hands, as exponents of Presbyterian doctrines, such as "The Great Supper," "Religious Experience," "Fourfold State," and kindred works. I sold "Edwards on Baptism," to a lady whose husband was not in favour of infant baptism, and therefore had not had his household baptized.

I have closed a period of deep interest to me; a period of solemn responsibility, and of great spiritual privileges. I have enjoyed private interviews with those who were in some degree interested in the momentous question, "What must I do to be saved?" and of whom some, I trust, have chosen the good part. Godly fathers and mothers have stated the circumstances of children, on whose account they were anxious, and pious wives have sought from me appropriate books for their husbands. But I cannot dwell on these things.

"I do feel convinced that the welfare of the Church, the confirming of her members in sound doctrine, and especially her increase by the ingathering of those consecrated to God in infancy, and who are exposed to countless temptations and snares, must largely depend under God, on the circulation of such volumes. The works of the Board afford a clear view of the doctrines of their own Church; they pro-occupy the mind with truth wherever read, and they expose erroneous views. They comprehend interesting memoirs, where exalted experience in religion and eminent piety are mingled with doctrinal truth. Thus the truth awakens an interest, and tends to confirm the mind, until it is grounded and settled in those great facts and doctrines, by an experience of their efficacy on the heart, through the power of the Holy Spirit.

INFLUENCE OF GOOD BOOKS.

A lady who has for several years devoted herself to the self-denying task of teaching a school of poor coloured children in Pennsylvania, writes as follows:

"My pupils have been so much interested in those books they received from the Presbyterian Board of Publication, that they have voluntarily raised a dollar for the purpose of procuring a few more—and this with the dollar they contributed for the Sabbath School Visitor I think is a very good collection, for they are (as you know) emphatically the poor among us. The salutary influence of this good reading is very apparent on my scholars, not only in refining and giving them a taste for such literature, but also in giving them habits of reading and reflection, which are all-important in the formation of character. If a man may be known by the company he keeps, much more so, by the books he reads. I hope the day is not far distant when every school and family in our land shall be furnished with a library of good books and some religious paper. Then we will have fewer juvenile crimes to complain of, and a brighter prospect for the future. I made a certain standard of conduct, attendance and improvement, a test of admission to our little library; and it is very gratifying to see how the children vie with each other as to who shall obtain a book or Visitor, and it is very seldom that any one forfeits the privilege. Thus this simple means has become not only an auxiliary to assist in the mental culture, but also in the government of my school."

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

A PASTORAL LETTER from the Synod of Virginia, to the Young Men of the Presbyterian Church. By the Rev. Peyton Harrison. Presbyterian Board of Publication, 265 Chestnut st., pp. 18. Price 1 cent.

This is an earnest, affectionate, and judicious expostulation and appeal to the young men of the Presbyterian Church on the subject of their individual duty in reference to engaging in the work of the holy ministry. Its instructions and entreaties will be peculiarly seasonable, and we trust may be highly useful at this time when Zion is mourning because so few of her beloved sons are devoting themselves to the work of proclaiming salvation to a dying world.

MONITORY LETTERS TO CHURCH MEMBERS. Presbyterian Board of Publication. 12mo. pp. 161. Price 40 cents.

We cannot doubt the future popularity and usefulness of this excellent work. It is from the pen of an able, accomplished, and experienced author and pastor. Every page bears the marks of a warm heart, a cultivated taste, and an elevated piety. It is composed of twenty-two letters, each of which forms a complete chapter, and is addressed to some one class of defective Christians. Although "monitory" these letters breathe only the spirit of true Christian affection, and fidelity to the souls of those whom they aim to bless. And so comprehensive is their range, that he must be well-nigh a perfect man who cannot find some among them addressed to himself and well adapted to do him good. To pastors and ruling elders in their efforts to correct the errors and shortcomings prevailing in these days among the professing people of God, this book may be made, if they will use it rightly, a most valuable auxiliary.

SKETCHES OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, containing a brief summary of arguments in favour of its primitive and apostolic character, and a view of its principles, order and history, designed especially for the Youth of the Church. By the Rev. J. E. Rockwell. 282 pp. 18mo. with four engravings. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This work originally appeared in the form of letters in the Sabbath-school Visitor, and its publication in book form was loudly urged by many parents and Sabbath-school teachers. It promises to be a work of permanent value and interest to the youth of our church.

THE PERSEVERANCE OF THE SAINTS. 78 pp. 18mo. Price 15 and 20 cents.

An earnest scriptural and logical argument in defence of a precious doctrine, which it is strange that any believer in the divine faithfulness should ever be disposed to deny. In clearness and force of reasoning, kindness of spirit, and conciseness of style, it is a model for doctrinal writers. The author is unknown.

THE BOHEMIAN MARTYRS, or sketches of the lives of John Huss, and Jerome of Prague. 96 pp. 18mo. with an engraving. Price 15 and 20 cents.

This is a valuable accession to the Sabbath-school library, worth a score of fictitious tales. It exhibits examples of heroic devotion to the truth, worthy of the imitation of youth. It is the opinion of many sober students of the signs of the times, that the time is coming, when children already born will be called upon, like Huss and Jerome, to "turn or burn." How important that they should be prepared for the coming struggle!

ADAM AND CHRIST, or the doctrine of representation stated and explained. By E. C. Wines, D. D. 71 pp. 18mo. Price 8 and 15 cents.

This admirable little work, on a highly important but much misunderstood doctrine, is the substance of a sermon preached before the Synod of New York at their last meeting, and published at their request. It explains and defends in the most lucid and convincing manner the doctrine of vicarious obedience and suffering, which lies at the foundation of the Scripture plan of salvation. The demand for the work is so great that three editions have been ordered within a month of its publication. One clergyman in New England has ordered 200 copies for his congregation.

MINUTES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH in the United States, from A. D. 1821, to A. D. 1835, inclusive. Prepared by the Editor of the Board. 498 pp. 8vo. Price $1.65.

The original edition of these Minutes being exhausted and no second edition published, they have for many years been quite inaccessible to the great body of ministers and people. Hence the call for this new edition, which contains the Minutes in full, with a condensed summary of the voluminous statistical tables of the original Minutes. This volume will be valuable as a work of reference, and as exhibiting a consecutive history of the proceedings of our highest judicatory.

HISTORICAL NOTICES OF SYNODS AND PRESBYTERIES.

The Presbytery of Northumberland was constituted by the Synod of Philadelphia, A. D. 1811.

"By a resolution of the Synod of Philadelphia at their sessions in Philadelphia, May 16th, 1811, the request of the Presbytery of Huntingdon to be divided by the following line was granted, viz. Beginning at the mouth of Mahantango Creek, proceeding a northwesterly course, so as to strike the West Branch of the Susquehanna at the line which divides Lycoming and Centre counties, so as to leave to the eastward the following members, viz. Rev. Messrs. Asa Dunham, John Bryson, Isaac Grier, John B. Patterson, and Thomas Hood, with their respective charges, together with the vacant congregations of Great Island, Pine Creek, and Lycoming. And it was further resolved that the above named ministers and congregations be named the Presbytery of Northumberland and meet at the Presbyterian church in the town of Northumberland, on the First Tuesday of October next ensuing the date of this resolution, at 11 o'clock, A. M." Presbytery met in accordance with the above resolution and was opened by the Rev. Asa Dunham, with a sermon from Eph. ii. 14—"For he is our peace." The members present at the meeting were Rev. Messrs. Dunham, Bryson, Grier, Patterson and Hood, and the Elders, James Sheddan, James Hepburn, Esq., William Montgomery, Esq., and Thomas Howard.

The Presbytery of Baltimore held its first meeting by order of the Synod of Philadelphia, in Baltimore town, November, 1786.

At the second meeting, April 18th, 1787, "it is also proposed that the Synod consisting of the Presbyteries of Philadelphia, Lewistown, New Castle, Baltimore and Carlisle, shall be called the Synod of Philadelphia and Baltimore."

Ministers present at the first meeting—"The Rev. Dr. Patrick Alison, Rev. James Hunt, and Stephen B. Balch. Absent Rev. John Slemmons, George Luckey and Isaac S. Keith.

"The Synod of Philadelphia at its sessions in Washington City, October 1842, divided the Presbytery of New Castle," and erected the Presbytery of Donegal out of that portion lying West of "the line that separates the counties of Chester and Lancaster, in Pennsylvania, and extends from the point at which these counties meet the State of Maryland down the Octorara Creek, the Susquehanna river and the Chesapeake bay, until it meets the boundary of the Presbytery of Baltimore."

The new Presbytery embraced the following

"Ministers—Samuel Martin, D. D., Stephen Boyer, William Finney, Joseph Barr, Samuel Parke, John Wallace, Lindley C. Rutter, David McCarter, T. M. Boggs, P. J. Timlow, Robert B. Belleville, Alfred Nevin, Robert W. Dunlap and John McNair.

Churches—Chanceford, Churchville, Leacock, Middle Octorara, Slate Ridge Centre, Pequea, Cedar Grove, Columbia, Lancaster, Chestnut Level, Little Britain, Union, Strasburg, Donegal, Marietta, Wrightsville, Bellevue, and in addition, York, Hopewell and Mechanicsburg, formerly of the Presbytery of Carlisle.

Licentiates—Samuel M. Bayless.

Candidates—Messrs. Lindsay, Boggs and Parke.

"Agreeably to this arrangement the Presbytery of Donegal assembled to hold its first stated meeting in the Presbyterian Church of Columbia, at 7 o'clock, P. M., on the second Tuesday of April, 1843, the time and place appointed by the Synod for this purpose, and was opened by request of Mr. Boyer, who had been appointed to preach and preside on the occasion, with a sermon by Mr. Barr, on the 4th verse of the 5th Chapter of Isaiah.

"The opening prayer was offered by Mr. Boyer. On the calling of the roll, the following Ministers and Elders answered to their names, viz.

Ministers—Boyer, Barr, Parke, Wallace, Rutter, McCarter, Boggs, Timlow, Nevin, Dunlap, McNair. Elders—Scott, Clarkson, Donnaldson, Kerr, Anderson, Wilson, Beatty and Miller.

"Mr. Boyer was elected Moderator and Alfred Nevin, Clerk."

At a subsequent meeting of the Synod, the Rev. W. W. Latta, and the church of Waynesburg were set over from the Presbytery of New Castle to the Presbytery of Donegal.

A DAUGHTER OF ABRAHAM.

Leila Ada T—— was a young English Jewess who died a few years ago, at the age of twenty, in the triumph of Christian faith. She was highly accomplished, having received such an education as a wealthy and doting father would wish to give to a lovely and talented daughter. Called by divine grace to the knowledge of salvation by Jesus Christ, whose day her father Abraham rejoiced to see, she suffered shame and spitting (literally) for his name's sake. The following account of her last moments, extracted from her Memoir, published by the Board of Publication, cannot fail to be interesting to the readers of the Record. It was written by a Christian female friend.

"The closing scene drew on apace; for it was evident to all that she must soon die; indeed, she knew it herself; and, therefore, she began to give final directions respecting the disposal of certain matters. This was three days before her death. After sending some substantial mementos of her love and regard to those families on her visiting list, she turned her attention to her family and personal friends. Having expressed most of her desires concerning these, she requested that her writing-desk might be placed near her. It was done. Unlocking it, she took out of it a number of elegant Bibles. 'Precious books!' she exclaimed, as she clasped them to her throbbing bosom. 'O, precious books! would I had read you more!' Presenting one to her maternal aunt, who was present, she said, 'Do accept this token of my love for you, and this letter, which some time ago I wrote for you; and, as you read it, may the Spirit of God lead your heart to those blissful fountains of repose which have made me so happy. You believe, my dear aunt, that I am quite happy—that I have no fear of death—that I am going to heaven?" 'I cannot doubt it.'

"'Well, then, it is all through the merits of my Lord Jesus Christ. His death atoned for my sins. I shall soon be with him for ever. Then, my dear aunt, will you promise me that my dying request, that you will read these Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, shall be granted?' Her aunt assented. 'Thank you, you make me very happy; and I pray that the God whom I serve, will, of his mercy, enlighten your understanding, so that you may perceive the truth. I am tired now; I must rest a little.'

"Reviving, she said, 'I can say but little more.' Then putting aside several Bibles for as many of her relatives, and a letter with each; 'Let these be given, with my dying love, to those to whom they are directed. Say, too, I most earnestly beg of each to read them, and pray over them, and to obtain all possible help to a knowledge of the Christian religion. And tell them, that with my latest breath, I testified, Christ is precious; that he was with me—pre-eminently with me—while passing through the valley of the shadow of death, and that through faith in Christ, I was victorious over death and the grave, and died in full, perfect assurance of eternal bliss. But be sure of this, tell them plainly, that it was all through the death of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ! Now I must repose. 'Tis almost finished!' Her articulation of these precious sentences was painfully interrupted, so that, to say them all, occupied her some minutes.

"The following day she requested that pen and ink might be brought to her. Affectionately clasping her Bible, she looked once more upon those parts which she had marked as having given her special encouragement and enjoyment; then, being supported, she took the pen in her dying hand, and tremulously and disjointedly traced upon the fly-leaf the last words she ever wrote—'Christ is heaven!'"

"On the morning of the day on which Leila died, she said, 'It will soon be finished. Tell my dear father to come here.' He was called, but was so painfully affected, that for some moments he could not speak to her! What a scene! Friends weeping—the youthful Christian, in heavenly composure, awaiting the solemn moment of separation from the body. Surely it was the spontaneous outburst of every heart, 'Is this death? Can all this holy joy and peace be death? Oh! then, let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like hers!' As I looked upon her placid countenance, I exclaimed exultingly, 'O death where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?' Gushing sobs broke upon the awful stillness.

"Her father was weeping. 'Do not grieve for me, my dear papa,' she said, soothingly. 'If you are faithful to God, you will soon be happy again with me in heaven.'

"'Then, my precious treasure, you are not deceived! You feel that your religion fully supports you in death?'

"'O yes! O yes! Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil—his rod—and—his—' she could proceed no further. Her father, bending with grief, retained her hand in his.

"In a little time she gathered strength: 'Father,' she continued, 'you love me dearly, do you not?' My child do not speak so to me; you know you are the very soul of my existence.'

"'Will you grant me one request—a dying request?'

"'What is it? You know I will not deny you?'

"'It is this—that you will never again doubt Jesus my Saviour; but that you will begin to love and serve him. O, think, my dear father, what he has done for me! Read the New Testament,' and she looked inquiringly.

"'My dear, I have begun to read it. I have seen that your religion must be true. I never expected to witness a death like yours, my daughter. I have begun to pray; you pray too, that God will help me to follow you to heaven. I believe, my dear—I confess to you and all present that I believe—in Jesus.'

"The sudden revolution of feeling was too great for her weak frame. She was just able to articulate, 'Blessing—praise—' and then lay exhausted.

"On recovering, she slowly reached her Bible, and in faltering accents said, 'My dear papa, I am dying—you have—. We shall soon meet again. Here is the Bible which has been—so truly blessed to my soul. Let it now be yours. You have all my books of a religious character. They are choice—learn them well. Praise the Lord—I am dying; but I am rejoicing.'

"She lay for some minutes with her eyes closed. Occasionally her lips moved as though in prayer.

"Again she unclosed her eyes, and looking upon her father with a smile of indescribable pleasure—'Blessing, honour, praise, and glory to Jesus. Kiss me, dear papa.'

"In a little while—'Glorious hope! immortality! eternal life! What an eternity! an eternity of perfect love.'

"She then, with considerable intervals, gave directions for her funeral. 'You have said, papa, that you will have my mother removed, and that we shall all three lie together in one tomb. I am glad of that. At my funeral make no show. Do not have me embalmed. I wish my body to be clothed in linen and white muslin only. . . . . When you have my name put upon our tomb, be sure you put this, 'Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."'

"'I hear the voice, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." My whole soul responds, "even so, come, Lord Jesus." I am full of glory.'

"Although perfectly sensible, she said but very little after this. She appeared to be looking into eternity. Its glorious realities were unfolding to her vision, and feasting her soul with ravishing contemplations.

"About two hours before she died, she suddenly awoke from a gentle slumber, and exclaimed, 'Dear Emily! are you here?' I took her hand. 'Give me a farewell kiss, my love. Thank you;' and then pressing my hand with all her remaining strength, 'We shall be united again soon, Emily, and then you will never have to separate from me. Love Jesus: it will not be long.'

"A little after, she ejaculated, 'Victory! victory!' and raised her dying arm. After a few moments—'Heaven is—heaven is—' the rest was lost.

"She lay quietly for about an hour; then gently putting out her hand, she said, 'Farewell, my dear papa. I am going to glory. Serve Jesus—you will soon be there.'

"These were the last words she uttered. Her eyelids closed. For a few minutes she breathed softly and slowly, and then—the solemn stillness of death! My friend was a disembodied saint in glory! Her spirit had taken its rapturous flight to that blissful rest which she had so long anticipated; and in preparation for which, she had kept her soul with all diligence. Again, through gushing tears, I prayed, 'Let me die the death of the righteous.'

"She died November 27th, 18—, at a quarter past eight o'clock in the evening, aged twenty years and eighteen days."

MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The stated monthly meeting of the Board of Missions was held in the Mission Rooms on Monday the 14th of May, 1855. The Rev. J. J. Janeway, D. D., President, in the chair. The usual business of the Board was transacted with interest and great unanimity. The number of missionary appointments during the past month was unusually large, and the amount of appropriations of course correspondingly great. Among these appointments are four for California. This re-inforcement of good, active men, in this wide and promising field, will everywhere be hailed with delight. Several of the members of the graduating classes in our different Theological Seminaries have been commissioned to new and important fields, and are already on their way to enter upon the active duties of the ministry. They need the prayers, and we trust will receive the sympathy and fostering care of God's people. Altogether the affairs of the Board are in a very prosperous condition.

In our next number we will probably give an abstract of the Annual Report of the Board to the General Assembly.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.

The following communication shows what can be done by any one who has a mind and heart for the work. As intimated below, the church gave but little, and supposed that that little was all they could give. Probably they never had this cause brought before them with that earnestness which its importance demands. We have very many such churches all over our country; and sure we are, if all our pastors will only do as this excellent brother has done, this Board will soon have no lack of means to carry on efficiently this great work.

April 20th, 1855.

Dear Sir—I send inclosed thirty-seven dollars for the use of the Board of Domestic Missions.

I collected this amount from the people of my charge, as I visited from house to house in the capacity of pastoral visits. I preached a sermon on the subject the Sabbath previous, and then followed it up, and succeeded in collecting this amount. The church of M—— O—— has not heretofore given more than five or six dollars a year, and this I considered too small for the amount of wealth we have among us.

I adopted this plan and it worked well, and seemed to please the people. We have, by this means, been able to make a larger contribution to the Board than this church has ever done before.

I mention this fact to show that much more money might be raised for the cause of Christ, if our pastors would adopt a plan suited to their different charges, and then be willing to labour a little in order to carry it out.

The sum I send is small, it is true, but it is more than six times as large as this church has ever done before, and I make no doubt but that the same results would follow a similar plan in hundreds of our country churches. The people want to be informed; they want pressing a little. Let the pastor take a little book, as I did, and go to the most benevolent, get it started; then go from house to house, talk with the people, pray with them, and he will be abundantly paid, both in the collection and in the improvement of his own heart.

I think this plan involves a principle, which, if carried out, would greatly benefit the church. I am acquainted with many neighbouring congregations, which give only $50 or $60 a year, while they are able to give three times the sum, and more; and I am confident that if they were carefully and properly managed they would do much better for the cause, and our Board would not have to make such urgent demands on the churches. The pastor can do much in this work, if he takes the matter in hand earnestly.

D. M. J.

KANSAS.

We publish below a part of a letter recently received from an excellent brother whom the Board were anxious to send as a missionary to Kansas. We regret that the way was not clear to one so well adapted for this work, to enter that new and important field. His remarks in reference to that territory will be read with interest.

May 3, 1855.

Rev. and Dear Brother—Your favour came to hand in due time, but circumstances have forbidden an answer until now. I have always had a peculiar pleasure in a missionary life, and had I been free from my present charge, and the way been otherwise opened, I would have gladly responded to your call, "Here am I, send me." But the leadings of Providence seem to indicate otherwise, and I feel myself bound to acquiesce.

A call for my pastoral services in the Presbyterian church of S——, Mo., came before our Presbytery last month. This church is only six miles from the territory, and consequently afforded a fair test of the mind of Presbytery with regard to my going west. In their wisdom they decided that there existed no sufficient reasons for my leaving my present charge, but, on the contrary, "there seem to be weighty reasons in favour of my continuance." And though it is with a good deal of reluctance that I abandon the idea of going west for the present, yet upon due reflection, I am disposed to think Presbytery were probably right.

If you will pardon a small digression, I would express my gratification that the Board are disposed to view this field with such interest. I travelled nearly 300 miles in the territory (Kansas) last fall, and am fully convinced that it presents a fine opening for Presbyterianism, could the field only be immediately occupied. Most of the city companies and of the leading and influential citizens of the territory, from secular motives, if from no other, are favourable to the settlement of ministers among them; and so far as our observation extended, the residents generally seemed to be of a church going disposition, had they only an opportunity.

These remarks extend to the traders and their men, as well as the recent settlers. In one instance Sabbath overtook us at the house of an old resident, who, besides a large farm and trading establishment among the Indians, carried on an extensive Santa Fe trade, and had some forty or fifty young men in his employ. We were treated with courtesy and deference, and quite a number seemed willing to talk on the subject of religion. Some of them said they had not heard a sermon in ten years, and at their request I consented to preach. Soon the house was filled with traders and the few surrounding settlers, and though our services were protracted, an unabated attention was manifested to the close. We were pressed upon to settle among them. "We need your influence," said they, "and though we are not Christians, we ought to be; and we know, too, that our settlement can't flourish without preaching, and that of the right stamp." Some of the young men frankly lamented the want of religious restraint to curb their wickedness.

It is certainly a fine field for the colporteur. A large portion of the settlers are enterprising young men, with minds ardent and social, just commencing life for themselves, and have but few books and few associates. And hence they read with avidity any publications that come within their reach; and treat a visitor with a frankness almost unknown in older settled countries. In that confused mass of society, too, composed of such heterogenous elements, all, as it were, severed from their native associations, and where society is just forming, they are much more open to religious impressions than in old countries where habits and associations are of a stereotype cast.

Yours, fraternally, J. G.

REPORT OF AN ITINERANT MISSIONARY AND AGENT.

April 3, 1855.

Rev. and Dear Sir:—For ten months has the experiment been tried of employing an Evangelist and Missionary Agent to labour throughout the extensive territory of the Presbyteries of West Jersey and Burlington. The time has not been sufficient to make more than a beginning in the great work, yet it is enough to enable you to decide whether it is expedient to continue the plan for another year.

As in all works of magnitude, much of the first labour was preparatory. This now serves as a vantage ground, and affords a broader base for future operations. In an inquiry respecting the results of the experiment, we must be allowed to enter a caveat against an estimation of them solely by the pecuniary standard, however encouraging this may be, for we are ignorant of any arithmetical rule by which we may calculate how much the organization of two congregations is worth? or how much the organization of a church, or how much the administration of the Lord's Supper to three vacant churches, added to the preaching of the gospel in destitute places. Owing to the fewness of labourers and the widespread wants of the field, more time has been given to the work of the evangelist than to the work of the agent. Of forty-three Sabbaths, from the first of June to the last of March, thirty-one have been spent without reference to the raising of funds for any purpose; but in the performance of ministerial service at such places as Tuckerton, Bass River, Batsto, Colville, Swedesboro, Woodstown, Tuckahoe, Mays' Landing, Somer's Point, Absecom, Leeds' Point and Atlantic City. All of these places would have been otherwise destitute of preaching by Presbyterians, and several of them had no other preaching whatever, on the above-mentioned Sabbaths.

The first church of Bridgeton and the church of Pittsgrove have been called upon to contribute to the erection of the church at Woodstown, and have nobly responded. The liberality of Pittsgrove exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine. Cedarville and Greenwich have subscribed to the edifice at Swedesboro. With the opening spring some progress has been made towards the erection of both these edifices.

You and the committee will learn, and doubtless with pleasure, that during the past year, every church in the Presbytery of West Jersey has contributed something to the Board of Missions. For eleven years, and probably for a longer period, there has not been a contribution so general. The aggregate collections, too, considerably exceed those of any previous year. The amount from the whole Presbytery in 1853—54 was $574 18. The annual average for the preceding ten years, from 1843—44 to 1852—53, was $501 51. The total for the year just closed is $880 77. The amount paid during the year from your treasury to missionaries having the care of particular churches, is $539 28. A closer examination of the statistics would prove that this statement is very favourable to the Presbytery of West Jersey, compared with former years. Yet the Presbytery has, by no means, reached the standard of its ability, for there is great disproportion between the gifts of the churches. Some of the infant missionary churches have given, not only more in proportion to their number of members, but actually more than some of the oldest churches. Again, one of the older congregations has given this year, more than one-fourth of the amount raised by the entire Presbytery. It is to be hoped that in the ensuing year there will be more of equality and systematic liberality.

In two congregations the Home and Foreign Record has been introduced more extensively.

Those who are awake to the extension of Zion, will watch with interest the progress and influence of internal improvements, especially of the railroads which open and develope the resources of the country. Even now the new settlements known as Atlantic City and Colville present inviting openings. Already their inhabitants, feeling the imperative need of a house of worship and the preaching of the gospel, solicit and encourage us to go forward in efforts to supply their spiritual wants. It remains for us to decide, whether we will obey the providential call, and go up and possess the land for our Redeemer.

During these ten months, I have travelled in this service 3,931 miles, and though exposed to the ordinary perils of the road and the seasons, by the help of God I have arrived thus far in safety, and am

Very truly, yours in the Gospel,

Allen H. Brown.

P. S.—In the Presbytery of Burlington, every church but that of Burlington (and Beverly, which is almost extinct,) has contributed to the Board.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN OHIO.

Work of Grace.

Ohio, March 29, 1855.

Dear Brother—Another quarter of missionary work closes with the present month; and as I expect to be very busy during the first part of the coming month, embrace the present opportunity of preparing my report for the Board.

I have enjoyed during the past quarter an unusual degree of good health, and I find in summing up the work done, that it has been double that of the quarter preceding. My field is one, from its very location, that requires long and fatiguing rides, and consequently during most of the year exposure to all kinds of weather; yet withal, I have been sustained by the hands of a kind Providence, and have reason to be grateful for the many blessings conferred upon me.

At the time of writing my last report, I was much depressed in spirits, owing to the seeming wants of success attending my ministrations in this field, and would have fain fled, like Jonah, were it not, for the thought that, like him, I might feel the hand of the Lord laid upon me. It seemed as if I laboured to no effect. I could not see that religion was progressing; and certainly I had no evidence that sinners were converted, for there were none making application for church membership. And yet I felt that I endeavoured to perform my ministerial duties with fidelity, and to preach Jesus and him crucified, as the only medium of acceptance with the Father, and the only hope for the salvation of the soul. Surely then I had reason to expect that God would give me some evidence of his gracious acceptance, and as a result of my toil and labour, grant me some precious fruit. But nothing of the kind was perceptible. I felt under a cloud, and mourned in my own spirit, and in secret communed with my Heavenly Father. Thus things progressed until the last of January, when God withdrew the cloud, and shined forth upon us in love. I commenced a meeting at a little church, numbering only seven members, and those in moderate circumstances, and yet they gave liberally of their substance to sustain the gospel in their midst. My meeting commenced upon Friday evening; the attendance was good, and I noticed a more than common attention, upon the part of my labours. The careless were evidently interested, and the church seemed to be aroused, and to enjoy a refreshing from the hands of the Lord. I continued my meeting for ten days, preaching morning and evening; and held a conference meeting of the members for prayer, and a meeting for the anxious every afternoon. The meetings grew in interest and would have been continued longer, but failing to obtain assistance, was compelled from physical prostration to desist, and seek some repose. At the next approaching communion we admitted eleven on examination, and two on certificate. Some six or eight more thought they experienced a change, but had predilections for sister churches, and have found a home under their branches. The little church now numbers twenty-one members, and the prospect before it is very flattering.

At Eden the members were revived during a series of meetings held during the winter, and we entertain the pleasing hope that many serious impressions were made, but the harvest time is not come yet. I pray God to hasten it on. The attendance upon the means of grace in this part of my field is growing large; and from this I draw the conclusion, that under the blessing of our Heavenly Father, a work of grace is to be wrought there.

I have given a great deal of attention to pastoral visitation, and have visited during the past quarter every family in my charge. In these family visits, I not only address myself to parents, but to the children, upon personal piety. I have also taken occasion to catechize the younger portion of the family, and to instruct them in religious things.

Prayer meetings are observed, and some interest felt in them.

In contributions to the Boards, this field has done more than it has ever done before.

I have also recommended a religious newspaper, and have been so far successful as to see it introduced into a large majority of the families.

In reviewing the past, I have now much reason for rejoicing. I feel that God has been with me, and given me some fruit in return for my labour. I still trust him for more, and will give him all the glory. May he in infinite mercy begin a deeper work of grace in the bounds of my missionary field. For this I pray. Yours &c., L. A. B.

N. B.—We have admitted during the year in this field, upon examination eighteen, certificate six.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Large additions to the Churches.

Rev. and Dear Sir—In my fourth and last quarterly report for the present ecclesiastical year to the Board of Domestic Missions, I would report that during the last quarter our congregations have been, upon the whole, good and attentive.

We have not had our spring sacraments yet, but think it probable that we will receive some additions to our churches at the time of those communions.

During the past twelve months we have received ten members in full communion in L—— M—— church, and three in V——, which makes in all thirteen.

The churches have contributed more for ministerial support and benevolent objects than in any former year.

We have recently organized a Sabbath-school and Bible class, and will give instruction to the coloured persons.

During the past twelve months we have obtained congregational libraries for both churches. Those books have been read by scores of persons, and we think several have been benefited already. During the past year more persons in these churches have taken religious periodicals than formerly.

I have endeavoured in and out of the pulpit, to urge upon them the necessity and importance of informing themselves in relation to the operations of our Zion in her home and foreign missionary work, and also in her publication and educational enterprises.

I think the cause why scores of our churches contribute so little to the schemes of our Church, arises from their ignorance of what she is, and what she is doing.

In conclusion, I would remark that we have great cause for thankfulness to the Head of the Church for what he has done for us in this portion of his vineyard. It was in this region that the labours of Dr. Baker, of Texas, were so much blessed the last summer and fall. In one church in Abbeville District, (Upper Long Cane,) one hundred and four persons have been received into communion since Dr. B. commenced his protracted meeting there, and in all of our churches in this district about two hundred and fifty persons have been received during the last twelve months—including those that have been added to the Associate Reformed Church, there would be three hundred; and including all that have been received into the churches of South Carolina Presbytery the last twelve months, there are about five hundred and thirty, and if we add to this number those that have been received in the Associate Reformed Churches, we will have six hundred or about that number.

Perhaps there is no Presbytery in the length and breadth of our widely extended Church which has been so much favoured as ours. W. H. S.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN OREGON TERRITORY.

Oregon, March 8th, 1855.

Rev. and Dear Brother—The time is already past when we should have sent our quarterly report. There are, as yet, no very favourable indications in our midst. A gleam of hope, however, has dawned on our mind, from a consideration of God's providence toward us. Since our existence as a church, two of its children have been removed by death. And what seemed to us a mark of God's favour, was that the ripe sheaves only were gathered and taken home. Although we have pretty comfortable evidence that these two died in the triumphs of faith, yet we have no reason to believe that any of those left have experienced the great change.

In the death of the last one, which occurred about ten days since, there was something truly remarkable. This little boy, who was only about eight years old when he died, had been for several years a child of affliction. As the family were returning from church on Sabbath evening, the horses ran down a hill, overturning the wagon. This little boy received an injury in his spine, from which he never recovered. His pious mother often spoke to him on the subject of death, reminding him of the disease which was preying on his system, and telling him of the probability that he would not live long. The word of God, the good seed, was cast into a fruitful soil. But when and where we cannot tell. It might have been while sitting under the dropping of the sanctuary, in the Sabbath-school, at the morning or evening sacrifice, which daily arose from the family altar. But I only intended to mention some of his dying expressions. A short time before his death he requested his friends about him to sing. His mother asked him what they should sing; he replied with much animation, "Sing God's best praises." The doxology was then sung—"Praise God from whom all blessings flow," in which he joined until his voice failed. Once he opened his eyes and said he saw angels, his countenance beaming with joy as he said "so bright, so beautiful."

A physician, who was watching by him, said to him, Edwin, "I do not think you can live much longer." He replied with much feeling, "I believe I am about to take wings and fly away." He sent little messages to those members of the family that were absent, exhorting them to meet him in heaven.

We feel truly grateful to the Great Head of the church for any token of his presence, we must not "despise the day of small things." L. T.

Goliad, Texas, April 9th, 1855.

Dear Brother—An extract from a letter, published under your department of the "Home and Foreign Record" for this month, written by a brother in Middle Texas, gives the gratifying intelligence that more ministers of our denomination have come into the State during the past year, than ever before in any three years. In common with that brother and our entire Church, I rejoice at this fact, and fervently hope the current year may bring still greater accessions, both of ministers and laymen. The field is wide, and is whitening for the harvest. And in this connection permit me to state a fact in relation to Western Texas a little different from that alluded to above. Within the last year, while none have come, three ministers of our denomination have left Western Texas, and returned to the States from which they came. Each of these brethren vacated an important post in this most interesting field, two of the points being villages that are rapidly increasing in population, and the other position a sort of rallying point in the midst of a thriving agricultural district. I doubt not these very brethren will testify to the vast and growing importance of the stations they have left, and I trust will do their utmost to have them refilled. Almost the whole of Western Texas is missionary ground. The point from which I address you is such in every sense. There are a few Presbyterians here, but there can now scarcely be said to be a church organization, as the only elder it ever had is now residing at the distance of forty-five miles from the place. I believe I may say with safety, not a dollar has ever been contributed here for the support of a minister of our denomination. There are a few persons here now who have some worldly substance, but hitherto our little flock has been almost entirely made up of "the Lord's poor." What this community stands in most need of, next to God's blessing in the conversion of sinners, is an influx of substantial Presbyterian families. And I may add, no portion of this new State opens a fairer field for enterprise in all the ordinary pursuits of life, than this very spot, and the adjacent country. The infant College (Aranama) under the care of Western Texas Presbytery, is making slow, but I trust, healthful progress. A female Seminary under the care of the Methodist's Conference is located here, and is in a prosperous condition. One of the female teachers, I understand, is a member of our Church. These two institutions of learning would seem to offer inducements to settlers which are rarely found in countries so new and primitive as Western Texas. Who then will come to our help? In the language of Israel's king—"Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"

Yours in Christian bonds, J. T. C.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year. Provided we have their address.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE PIOUS POOR AND THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.

Poverty, in the sense of beggary, is scarcely applicable to pious men. The observation of King David accords with the general history of the church in all ages: "I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." But though that extreme want implied in the term pauperism, is seldom found except in connection with vice, either directly or by natural consequence, it does not follow that piety is usually associated with wealth. There is a wide difference between absolute penury and overflowing abundance; and though many noble examples of devoted piety and active usefulness are found among the rich, the great body of God's people occupy a position between the two points above indicated. They are able to support their families with comfort and respectability; but are nevertheless comparatively poor; i. e., they possess no overplus beyond the supply of their ordinary wants, and the calls made upon them for the support of the Gospel, the common school, and those several benevolent objects to which all the members of the church are expected to contribute. They can educate their children in the various branches of an English education, as taught in the common school, and can sometimes send them a few months to an academy or high-school; but are unable to incur the expense of giving them a liberal or college education. This is what we mean by pious poor in the caption of this article, and from such families God has seen fit, to a large extent, to call his ministers.

By comparing the minutes of the General Assembly for 1854, with the annual report of the Board of Education for the same year, it will appear that the number of candidates reported to the Assembly by all the Presbyteries, is 390, and that the number reported by the Board is 342; showing that all the candidates in our church, except 48, as far as officially reported, belong to the pious poor. These statistics, however, we believe, do not present the exact state of the case. Many of those candidates, whose parents are able to pay the whole expense of their education, do not place themselves under the care of Presbytery, until they are prepared to apply for licensure, and hence are not reported to the Assembly. The number of students in our Theological Seminaries, according to recent reports, is 283. Supposing there are 15 or 20 engaged in theological studies under private tuition (which we have reason to believe is the fact,) then the result is, that the 390 reported to the General Assembly by the several Presbyteries exceeds by 90 only the number who have passed through their literary course and are engaged in the study of theology; leaving the remainder of our candidates, viz., all of them (except 90) who are in colleges, academies, and elsewhere, to be added to the number reported by the Presbyteries to the General Assembly. The number under the care of the Board of Education, in colleges, academies, and other preparatory schools, is not less than 200; and from information received from several institutions the number thus aided varies from one-half to two-thirds of the whole number of those who are pursuing their literary course with the ministry in view. Supposing the number in all to be 350, from which subtract 90, the difference between the number reported to the last General Assembly, and the number of theological Students, then the whole number of candidates for the Gospel ministry in our Church, in all stages of preparation, is as follows:—

Pursuing their literary course,	260
Total,	560
Aided by the Board of Education,	342
Aided from other sources, or supporting themselves,	218

A small part only of those who support themselves, are rich. Some are sons of clergymen, who seldom accumulate property. Others are sons of farmers or mechanics, or small country merchants, who, with the utmost economy, save enough from their income to educate a son for the Gospel ministry. And some, without assistance either from parents or elsewhere, earn their own support, by teaching school, &c., during their intervals of study. But with few exceptions, whatever their pecuniary resources, and whether aided or not, they belong to pious families. An inquiry recently made among the students of Allegheny Theological Seminary, disclosed the interesting fact, that of the 47 then in attendance, 41 had both parents pious, 5 only one, and but 1 neither.

Another fact is also worthy of notice, viz., that those who are called to the ministry have generally been trained to habits of industry. Idle, sluggish men lack an important pre-requisite for this office; and hence God usually enters those families where the sons are taught in early life to contribute their share of the common and necessary toil incident to a comfortable and honourable support. The office of a bishop is not a sinecure, but a work, for which a drone is utterly disqualified. But a disposition to activity, energy, diligence, and self-denial, is not so much a constitutional trait of character, as the product of early parental education; and the incentive to this training in the case of the pious poor, is not only moral duty but necessity; whereas, in the case of the rich, it is moral duty alone; which is too often insufficient to influence them to train up their sons to industrious and economical habits. This neglect is probably one reason why so few rich men's sons, even when they are pious, have a desire to become ministers of the Gospel. All children ought to be taught from early life, as a matter of principle, to be diligent in business, to practice self-denial, and to seek the good of others as well as their own. This kind of training would be one important item in qualifying the sons of the rich for the ministerial office; and it would also render it more inviting to them than when childhood and youth are spent in vain amusement and self-gratification.

It becomes those parents on whom Divine Providence has bestowed wealth, to consider, in a serious and prayerful manner, whether they do not enjoy their wealth at too great a cost, if its possession is to prevent their sons from engaging in this high and holy calling; and to inquire how they can avert from their families, this implied mark of God's displeasure. It is far better to be poor with the Lord's favour, than rich without it. Riches, however, though dangerous, may be made a blessing; and they are such when employed in a wise and proper manner. But they are not employed wisely or properly, when they are lavished with an unsparing hand upon our children, to the neglect of that discipline of body and mind, which is a necessary stimulus to personal exertion and to active and efficient usefulness. Many rich men commenced life without property, and have become wealthy, mainly by their own exertions. Their early habits may serve to teach them what kind of training is best for their children; and if they carefully and conscientiously adhere to this rule, their sons, instead of being effeminate and luxurious (like too many in high life,) will possess that true dignity which wealth and virtue mutually impart to each other. Such young men will not regard any post of usefulness beneath their attention, and accordingly, when they become pious, they will be as likely to enter the ministry as the pious poor. We do not regard it as any reproach on the ministry that its candidates are chiefly of the poorer class. Christ chose his apostles from this class. But we would submit to the wealthy the question, whether they do not desire to share more largely than they now do, in the privilege of furnishing the church with her ministry; and whether this would not be the case, if they should feel and act in the matter as we have indicated. Let them so train their sons as to prepare them to practice the self-denials and discharge the duties of this office, if they desire to have them enjoy its honours.—Presbyterian Magazine.

THE PROPER TRAINING OF CANDIDATES.

We take the following from the Central Christian Herald, Cincinnati, which we commend to the special consideration of our brethren in the ministry. Though our own observation does not accord with that of the writer concerning the backwardness and inactivity of our church members in social religious meetings, yet we doubt not they do exist in some places, and that the cause in part is, that the brethren are not encouraged to employ their gifts in this manner. A sound discretion needs to be exercised by pastors, in order to avoid the two extremes of permitting church members on the one hand to bury their talents, and on the other of calling them into exercise too soon after their conversion, and of using them too much and too often, so as to injure their Christian graces and detract from their future influence and usefulness. This is particularly necessary in the case of young members, whose vanity is more easily excited than that of older persons, and whose youth and inexperience make them less qualified to lead their seniors in social prayer, or to edify them by exhortations. Still with proper restrictions, and in appropriate circumstances, they should be encouraged to take part in such meetings, both for their own benefit and the benefit of others. Praying church members (we mean social prayer as well as secret) may be reasonably expected to have more religious enjoyment and a more vigorous and growing piety, than those of a different character; and Christian activity in this form will also contribute to make them more zealous and efficient in other religious duties.

But our design in publishing this communication is to invite attention to the effect of such a course in increasing our candidates for the gospel ministry. We concur fully in the sentiment that a judicious exercise of their gifts in social prayer meetings, by the young men of our churches, is one of the best means to test their "aptness to teach," and thus show their fitness or unfitness in this respect for the sacred office. We could name some useful and acceptable ministers, who would not probably have entered the ministry at all, except for this preparatory training, which elicited their talents and zeal for doing good, brought them to the special notice of their pastors and brethren in the church, and resulted in their becoming preachers of the gospel. Perhaps there may now be many such young men in our communion, who, by a similar process, would in due time find their way clear to seek this office, but who without this kind of training and encouragement, will engage in other pursuits.

To the inquiry, "Have you preached on Education for the Ministry?" I answer, No. It would violate a general rule of mine, which is, never to preach to a congregation what is applicable to only a few. To individuals in need, preach personally and privately.

Of a kind of education or training for the ministry, the pastors, more than the people, are in fault. Young men or their parents are not the most apt to discern their gifts or fitness for the ministerial office. Those actually in the office are the best judges, and should search out and bring forward the fairest candidates. It is manifestly their duty to educate, not so much in the schools, as in the prayer-meeting and lecture-room, the young and promising of their charge. Early teach them to pray and to speak for God and the truth—to be active, as well as acted upon, from the beginning of their Christian course.

If I mistake not, this is one great, and perhaps growing defect in our denomination and age. The minister must do all, or nearly all, the praying, speaking, exhorting. This is his business, and for others to do any, is looked upon as aspiring and intruding. Certain I am, that the Congregational pastors in New England, formerly, made a great deal more use of their lay members in the conference-room, in visiting, and in performing many other duties for the Church, than Presbyterian pastors do, in any region in which I am acquainted. The effect has been, in New England, not only soul-reviving in the churches, but the bringing forward of many young men, who have been nourished and educated by the very churches in which they were born, and where they manifested their first desires and capacities for doing good. Such a course of training naturally leads young men to see what they can do, gives them a taste and habit for the work, and then the way is easily opened for more ample qualifications.

The opposite course, so generally practised in the Presbyterian Church, has kept back multitudes. They have never been led to pray in public, or ever to think the sacred office within their reach.

These courses accord with reason. Suppose two men are mechanics; each has boys. The one encourages his, from childhood, in the use of tools, encourages them in their early efforts at mechanism. The other discourages, denies them tools and materials, tells them they are not old enough, the trade requires great skill and long experience. Now, which will turn out the best mechanics?

They accord also with facts. I know something of two large congregations in Ohio, not far apart. Both have long been well supplied with excellent pastors. One, the smallest of the two, and of New England origin, has always been in the habit of using largely its lay members, and it has turned out many very excellent ministers. The other, of pure Presbyterian order, of Pennsylvania stamp, its pastor notoriously orthodox. But not even a Sabbath-school could be opened without the aid of the right reverend, or certainly the almost reverend elders. Not recollecting of any ministers from that large and rich Church, I asked one, long and well acquainted with it, if they had ever raised up and sent forth any? He replied, "Not one."

Brethren in the ministry, perhaps you know of some similar cases. Do not infer that we are to give up the ministry to the young and unlearned. No; but to use such for their own good and the good of the Church, and to lead them to inquire what God would have them to do.

Well do I remember the remark of a devoted pastor, in my younger days, "Your father has been a very great help to me in conducting meetings, and I want you should be." The thought of my doing any good in meetings had not entered my head or heart; but after, in my Academic, Collegiate and Theological course, I was active in various ways, and so were many of my fellows; and I look back upon some of those labours as among the most useful of my life.

I still love the old way of mingling theoretical with practical knowledge. Is it not a fact that too many of our few candidates come out of the Theological Seminaries with very little, save book knowledge?

Perhaps our lack in not using lay assistance is one reason why religion languishes in our Churches, and why so few are looking forward with ardent desires for the work of the ministry. It is not money, so much as men inclined to the office, that we need. To the pastors belongs the preliminary work of education for the ministry.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE BIBLE IN COLLEGES.

The honour of introducing the Bible into college, as a regular college study, is due to the Rev. Ashbel Green, D. D., and the Institution that was thus so highly favoured was the College of New Jersey at Princeton. The practice has been continued there down to this day, and with signal benefit to the students and the Institution. Many other colleges have introduced the same kind of exercise, and we trust the time is near when every literary institution in our land will regard this as an essential part of its course. The president of Washington College, Pa., writes us as follows: "The interest manifested by the students in the religious instruction now incorporated with our course of college instruction, is highly gratifying. This part of our present system went fully into operation only last fall. The good effects of such a course of doctrinal as well as practical religious instruction, as a regular part of collegiate training, are clear to me as the light of day. Opinions previously entertained respecting this matter, have been greatly strengthened, have in fact been fully confirmed by the experience of the last six months." Dr. Green's account of its introduction at Princeton College, and some of its happy results, is as follows.

When I was called to the presidency of the College, in the autumn of 1812, one of my first cares was to devise a system of religious instruction for the whole Institution; and I determined that a part of it should consist of the very course which I had pursued with the two lower classes when I was a tutor,—other additional exercises being required of the two higher classes. I took the senior class to myself, assigned the junior to Mr. Slack, the Sophomore to Mr. Lindsly, and the Freshman to Mr. Clark. But it was soon rumoured that I added at the Bible recitations which I heard, expositions and illustrations by maps and drawings of which the classes inferior to the senior were deprived. It was Mr. Lindsly, I recollect, who first stated to me, (what really had not occurred to me before,) that there would be no more labour in hearing the whole College than in hearing a single class; and that the students generally and the officers also, might be gratified or benefited, by hearing the expositions, illustrations, and applications, which had hitherto been confined to the seniors. I yielded without hesitation to his suggestions, and before the end of the year 1812, the whole College was examined by myself and addressed afterwards on the topics which were presented by the portion of the Sacred Scriptures previously recited. This system was continued till I left the Institution in the autumn of 1822. My plan for the study of the Bible was as follows: 1. History. 2. Doctrine. 3. Prophecy. 4. Devotion and morals. And it took four years to go over the whole, and in that space the whole was gone over. I took the entire historical part of the Bible, both of the Old and New Testaments, because this was easiest to remember and recite. For doctrine, I took only the Epistle to the Galatians; for prophecy, only the book of Daniel; and for devotion and morals, a part of the Psalms and Proverbs. In the ten years of my presidency, I went twice over this ground entirely, and about half over it in a third course. I made laborious preparation for the service; but it was a delightful one, and one from which I reaped benefit to myself, as well as imparted it to others.

In the close of the year 1814, and beginning of 1815, we were favoured with a very remarkable and general revival of religion in the College. For some months, there was not, I believe, a prayerless room or study in the whole college edifice. An account of this revival was drawn up by myself, and laid before the Board of Trustees, at their spring meeting in 1815. Contrary to my expectation and wishes, they ordered it to be printed. It was accordingly printed; and by some means, I know not how, it found its way to Britain, and was reprinted in the Christian Observer for the month of October, 1815. The editors of that work commended the measures which led to the revival, and even recommended them for imitation in the English Universities; and yet they pretty severely condemned the publication, as likely to be injurious to the young converts. In this they entirely accorded with my opinion. In my narrative of the revival, I assigned the apparent instrumental causes, from which I extract the following sentences:

"Its more immediate causes appear to have been these. First and chiefly, the study of the Holy Scriptures, accompanied with comments on the portion read, and a practical application of the leading truths contained in it. God has remarkably honoured and blessed his own word. Strange as it may seem, this study of the Bible has always been a favourite one among the youth of the College, not excepting the most gay and dissipated. Pains indeed have been taken to render it interesting; but the degree in which it has been so, has been truly surprising,"—and in a note it is said, "For more than two years the Holy Scriptures had been made the subject of as regular study and examination as the classics, the mathematics, or philosophy. The afternoon of the Lord's day was appropriated uniformly to the recitation of a certain number of students, taken promiscuously (for all were required to be prepared) on five chapters, assigned to them the preceding week. The recitation was always accompanied with expositions, critical remarks, and a practical application. The exercise was concluded with prayer and singing, and was considered as the afternoon religious exercise of College. In the morning, public worship in usual form was celebrated."

I never heard a candidate for licensure before a Presbytery, who could answer questions on the Bible with as much readiness and propriety as was done by the majority of my senior classes at all their examinations. I verily believe that the whole system of Bible class instruction, now so prevalent, may be traced to my father's family. I not only practised it while a tutor, but afterwards as a pastor; and as far as I know, it was not practised beyond the College till some time after I introduced it there in 1812. I believe it spread from Nassau Hall as its central point.

ROCK RIVER PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

The Presbytery of Rock River (Illinois) have resolved to establish a Presbyterial Academy at Dixon, Illinois. The citizens of that place have secured the payment of $15,000, to be appropriated for ground, buildings, &c., with the prospect of several thousand more. The school has already opened under favourable auspices. May the Lord smile on this important undertaking. This is only one among eight others (9 in all) reported to the Board of Education during the past year. Several of them, however, have been in operation for some years under private management, but have been, within the last twelve months placed under the care of Presbyteries. This circumstance is a clear indication of the favourable manner in which this mode of conducting literary institutions is viewed by the Christian public.

WHITE WATER (IND.) PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

Resolutions of Presbytery.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, This Presbytery have already entered into the plans of the Assembly, in reference to the establishment of institutions of learning, under ecclesiastical control, and have established an Academy which is now in successful operation, to which candidates for the ministry under our care will usually be sent; and whereas, it is of the utmost importance that Presbytery acknowledge, and act upon their responsibilities to the Church at large, and to the Board of Education in particular, therefore,

1. Resolved, That Presbytery require of the Board of Trustees of Dunlapsville Academy, a report of the state and prospects of the institution, at each fall meeting of Presbytery.

2. That we require of the Principal, at every stated meeting, a full and explicit report in reference to each of the beneficiaries of the Board of Education as to grade in scholarship, talents, diligence, deportment, attendance upon religious duties, religious character, influence and promise.

3. That the above be added to the standing docket.

DELAWARE FEMALE COLLEGE, OHIO.

ACTION OF THE MARION PRESBYTERY.

The Delaware Female College occupied a large share of the attention of Presbytery. The President, Rev. D. McCartee, was present, and made interesting statements relative to its present position and prospects. Mr. Alexander Miller and Mr. Vincent Manelli, were elected professors in the Institution. The examining committee highly commended the thorough system of education adopted in the College. It appeared that there was a deficiency of some $500 to meet the coming payments on the property, and in view of this fact, and of the necessity of erecting additional buildings to accommodate the increasing number of pupils, it was resolved that an effort be made to raise among the churches the sum of $11,000, and the following was adopted:

Resolved, That the Rev. Henry Van Deman, and the interests of this Institution be cordially commended to the favourable consideration of our churches, believing, as this Presbytery does, that the interests of the kingdom of Christ in our midst are, in a very important sense, identified with the prosperity of this Institution, whether we regard its prospective usefulness, or our honour and good faith as already committed and involved in carrying out our pledges in regard to it.

Marion, April, 1855.

FEMALE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, PONTOTOC, MISS.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES TO THE CHEROKEE PRESBYTERY.

The Trustees of the Presbyterial Female Collegiate Institute at Pontotoc reported that the buildings were advancing rapidly to completion, and considered admirably adapted to the purpose. The school is in a flourishing condition, under Professor Conkey and lady, with assistant teachers. The Trustees call public attention to the school, and warmly recommend it to the patrons of female education. Col. G. G. Rennau, S. Daggett, Esq., and Rev. F. Patton, were re-elected to fill vacancies in the Board of Trustees, and Rev. J. N. Waddel, D. D., was appointed to deliver an address on Female Education at the next annual examination of the Institute.

DR. ALEXANDER AND THE CATECHISM.

"He enjoyed," says the reviewer, "the inestimable advantage of a correct doctrinal education in his youth. He was early taught the Westminster Catechism, an educational process of priceless value. The principles of moral and religious truth contained in that sublime symbol, when once imbedded in the mind, enlarge, sustain, and illuminate it for all time. That God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth, is a height of knowledge to which Plato never reached. That the eternal Son of God became man by taking to himself a true body and a reasonable soul, and so was and continues to be both God and man, in two distinct natures and one person for ever, is a truth worth all other knowledge. A series of such precise, accurate, luminous propositions, inscribed on the understanding of a child, is the richest inheritance which can be given to him. They are seeds which need only the vivifying influence of the Spirit of life, to cause them to bring forth the fruits of holiness and glory. Dr. Alexander experienced this benefit in its full extent. He learned the Catechism as a matter of custom. Its truths were not pressed upon his heart and conscience. They lay in his mind as a form of doctrine, (what men are wont erroneously to call dead orthodoxy, as though truth can ever be dead.) Still, even as mere speculative knowledge, it occupied his mind to the exclusion of error. The understanding is the regal faculty, and when filled with the self-evidencing truths of divine revelation, it does and must control, to a great degree, the convictions and principles even of those not yet renewed. His mind being thus stored with truth, as soon as his moral and religious feelings were excited, they had the proper forms at hand in which to express themselves. The intellectual and emotional elements combined by a kind of elective affinity, and formed that knowledge which is eternal life."—Bib. Repertory.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Board of Foreign Missions held its regular Annual Meeting at the Mission House, New York, on Monday afternoon, May 7th. Rev. Dr. Spring, President of the Board, opened the meeting with prayer. The Executive Committee presented the records of the past year, which were examined and approved. They also presented their Annual Report, which being referred to sub-committees of the Board, in detached portions, were by these examined, and severally recommended for adoption.

Interesting statements in regard to some of the missions were also made by the Secretaries and members of the Board.

The general aspect of the work is very encouraging. The missions in India are extending their influence in a very marked degree. In Africa the work is carried on more efficiently than ever before. Missions among our Indian tribes are extending, and by recent arrangements with the Department at Washington, the Board has new facilities for establishing schools and disseminating the gospel among the tribes inhabiting the territories of Kansas and Nebraska. Among the Choctaws and Seminoles an interesting work of grace is reported, which is still going on. The Board have taken measures to establish new missions in Japan and South America. One of the members of the Ningpo Mission has been requested to visit the former country in reference to a station in that interesting portion of the heathen world, and a young brother is already under appointment as a missionary to Bogota, the capital of New Grenada.

The Treasurer's report was read, which presents some gratifying results. The total receipts, including a balance from last year, is $184.074 17. This is a larger sum than was ever before reported. The amount received directly from churches, is nearly $5,000 greater than in any former year, yet this does not make up for deficiencies from individual contributors. Still, we are encouraged in finding that the churches are yearly increasing their donations, and the Board would gladly rely upon them, as their more certain dependence in all their future operations. This is the true theory of our system, and we hope to see it in all its practical workings more and more complete.

The experiment of dispensing with agents thus far proves successful. Three years ago the agency department of the Foreign Board cost $5,300 against $300, the expense of the last year. During the same period the church contributions have increased $13,500. With these facts before them, the Board will continue to rely upon the Pastors and Church Sessions to do its agency work, and this is simply the adoption of a plan of systematic benevolence, such as was recommended by the last General Assembly.

So far as we can gather the views of church members generally, we are satisfied that pastors can promote our cause among their people more efficiently than any special agent sent to them for that purpose. We value agents chiefly as a means of effecting regularity and system in church collections. But their services are unnecessary where this duty is attended to by the proper officers of the church. Missionary intelligence is monthly communicated to our ministers through the journals of the Board; and a little attention to system and such interest in the work as we trust they all possess, will secure to our Treasury the offerings of all our people.

Appended to the Treasurer's report are tables showing the receipts for the year from the several churches within our bounds, arranged under their respective Presbyteries and Synods. From these it may be seen that while there is in some of the churches a gratifying increase of receipts over former years, in others there is a considerable falling off. These tables are suggestive, and we invite special attention to them.

We trust, too, that our annual report, which will be extensively circulated, will be read with the interest which the great subjects of which it treats demand.

The providence of God is opening to our Foreign Board wider fields of usefulness. Into these we are advancing, and hope every year to report new mission stations occupied, and a larger demand for the liberal offerings of the Church. There is no retreat in this warfare. There is no standing still amid the many tokens of Divine favour which mark the aggressive movements of our Church upon the kingdom of darkness.

The total expenditure of the Board during the past year is over $175,000. For the year just commencing there will be needed $200,000. The estimates which the committee and the Board have sanctioned will require this sum; and with no little confidence in the result, we appeal to the churches to increase their contributions during the present year.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, New York, May 13th, 1855.

Indian Missions.—Our most recent letters from the Indian Missions are, Seminole, March 4th; Chippewa, March 26th; Creek, April 26; Omaha, April 18th; and Choctaw, April 19th.

The present number of the Record contains letters from Mr. Reid of the Choctaw Mission, and Mr. Lilley of the Seminole, giving some account of an interesting work of grace at their respective stations.

Others of a more recent date assure us that this work is progressing most happily among both of these tribes, and are leading to the most important results. Our information in relation to the state of things at the Seminole Mission is through Mr. Templeton, who had been there about the middle of April, for the purpose of assisting in the services of a protracted meeting, and administering the sacrament. He reports twenty persons as having been baptized and received to the communion of the Church. Many more were concerned for the salvation of their souls.

At the Six-towns Church, near Spencer Academy, where there has been such rich fruits during the past year, the Spirit of God seems to be poured out more abundantly just now, than ever before. At a protracted meeting which closed on the fifteenth of April, it is said between sixty and seventy persons were anxiously concerned to know what they must do to be saved; and it is particularly gratifying to know that nearly one-half of these are connected with the Spencer Academy. Mr. Reid gives an account of several cases of conversion among the pupils, some of which are specially interesting, and will be laid before our readers in a subsequent number of the Record. An awakening has commenced also among another community, known as the Longtown's people, to the North and West of Spencer, which promises to be as important in its results as that at the Six-town's Church.

In relation to this general work of grace which is extending itself so rapidly over the surrounding country, Mr. Reid says, "You need not be afraid of referring to it in too strong language. It can scarcely be exaggerated—the half cannot be told."

We need scarcely remind the friends of missions, that such distinguished favours call for exercise of sincere gratitude to God, and should stir them up to more earnest prayer that this work of grace may not only be continued, but enlarged until all these benighted people shall be gathered into the fold of Christ.

India.—We have received letters from Lahor, to March 9th; Lodiana, February 5th; Saharunpur, February 3d; Agra, to March 10; Mynpurie, February 24th; Futtehgurh, to March 10th; Allahabad, to March 10th. Mr. and Mrs. Orbison had reached Futtehgurh on their way to Malacca for Mrs. Orbison's health, which we regret to learn continues to be very feeble. Mr. Morrison was on a Missionary tour towards Rawal Pinde. Mr. Forman asks for more missionaries; "when are we to receive such re-inforcements as to enable us to occupy more stations, particularly Sealkote and Srinagar, the capital of Cashmere. I saw Dr. C—, in December, at Sealkote. He had returned a short time before from Srinagar. He spoke in glowing terms of it as a missionary field. The population is large, and composed to a great extent of Cashméré Brahmans, whom he considers among the finest races of men in Asia. I have seen a number of them; and quite concur in his opinion. The king is quite dependent on the British, and has expressed a willingness to allow missionaries to come into his country. All is ready except the Church. How should we blush to have to write or read such a sentence."—Mr. Janvier was on a preaching tour in the vicinity of Lodiana.—Mr. Campbell mentions the admission to Church membership at Saharunpur, of three natives. One of these is the fakir referred to in former letters, who has taken the name of Isa Das, "a servant of Jesus."

At Agra, the church and schools gave much encouragement to the missionaries. Four members had been lately received into the church, one of them the Rev. Golak Nath's daughter, now at the school in Agra. Of the boys in the East Indian school, four or five were apparently under the influences of the Spirit. Mr. Fullerton says: "The manifestation of interest in spiritual things among us greatly rejoices us, and yet we rejoice with trembling. Will you not pray for us."—Mr. Newton and his company had left Agra, on their way to the Upper Mission.—Mr. Ullman had lately returned from a three months' journey, undertaken partly for his wife's health, but so planned as to enable him to devote his time to daily preaching. He writes: "We started on the 23d of November and returned on the 28th of February, travelling down the main road to Cawnpore, Futtehpore, Allahabad, Benares, Juanpore, and back to Furrukhabad, and preaching not only in the cities, but also in the villages along the road, that were not too far from the place where we pitched our tent. Hanukh was my assistant, and a valuable assistant he is. I spent a fortnight at Allahabad, during which time I and Hanukh assisted the brethren there in preaching at the large Mela. In several of the villages, the people told me that some years ago another missionary, a tall and stout man (brother W.) had been preaching there, and had told them the very same thing that I said. Upon the whole, I feel encouraged in the work; and though I cannot speak of conversions, yet that a general and steady change for the better is going on. There is not the least doubt." The death of a native female member of the Allahabad church, who was living at Banda, is mentioned. The kind English physician and his wife, who attended her in her last illness, both thought well of her piety and preparation for her departure.

SIAM.—Letters have been received from Dr. House, December 25; Mr. Mattoon, January 22; and Mr. Carlton at Singapore, January.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlton had a pleasant voyage to Singapore, and hoped soon to find a vessel going up to Bangkok. Dr. House had returned from another missionary tour, in which he had spent over a month, visiting places some two hundred and fifty to three hundred miles from Bangkok, in two provinces not before reached by a missionary. The work of the missionaries was suffering considerable embarrassment from certain measures of the government. This embarrassment, it is hoped, will soon be removed, though causing some solicitude.

CHINA.—Our letters are dated at Ningpo to January 10; Shanghai, January 22; Canton, February 13; and from Mr. Happer at Batavia, February 12; where the ship had been detained, but was ready to sail. Mrs. Happer's health was somewhat better, Mr. Culbertson had reached Shanghai, with less improvement of health than was expected, but with hopes of benefit from the change and from the colder weather. The mission property at Shanghai was greatly injured in the conflicts between the Insurgents and Imperialists. The latter have made compensation for this, leaving the land still in the ownership of the mission. The houses had been rendered unfit for use. Mr. French says, "All our missionary operations here at Canton are prosecuted without interruption, and everything is going on pleasantly;" though he speaks of public affairs as continuing in a very unsettled state. The newspapers report the withdrawal of the Insurgents both from Shanghai and Canton. The letters from the missionaries are not of so late a date.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

SPENCER ACADEMY.

A LETTER FROM ALEXANDER REID, OF 9TH APRIL, 1855.

Several communications have already appeared in the Record, in relation to the interesting work of grace that has been in progress at Spencer, during the past year.

The following letter from Mr. Reid, embodies facts not heretofore published, and gives, at the same time, a concise history of the work, and will therefore be read with interest by all who love the Missionary cause.

I will try and fulfil the promise I made in my last letter. One year ago yesterday, the church of Spencer Academy was re-organized. On the same day commenced the first "big meeting" ever held by Presbyterians in the vicinity of Spencer. (Sacramental meetings are, among us, called "big meetings.") These meetings usually last two days. Sometimes they begin on Friday night, and close on Monday morning. This meeting will be long remembered by many of our Six-town neighbours. The word preached was made the mighty power of God unto the salvation of many present. Thirty-two persons publicly expressed sorrow for sin, and a determination to seek the salvation of their souls. All the leading men of the settlement were among this company of penitents. Our next "big meeting" was held on the third Sabbath of July, at the same place. At this time twenty-four persons were received by baptism into the communion of the church. On this day, twenty-four persons openly professed themselves anxious about their souls. Of this number were several very aged women and several young persons, grandchildren of these aged women. It was a most deeply affecting sight to see grandparents, parents, and children pressing together into the kingdom of God. On the first Sabbath in August a "big meeting" was held at Spencer. There were about five hundred persons present. At this time nineteen persons were added to the church, and forty eight children baptized. This was an exceedingly interesting meeting. It was then that Old Akostrimintobi, the blind man, first saw the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. This day, nineteen persons began to call upon the name of the Lord. This meeting closed on Monday morning. Towards evening one of our pupils, an amiable and promising lad, who had passed through the meeting unmoved, was deeply convinced of his sin and misery, and, as we humbly hope, soon found pardon and peace, by believing in Jesus. There was great joy felt by the mission family over this our repenting youth. His conversion was regarded as a clear proof that God hears prayer; and also as the first drop of a great outpouring of divine influences about to come upon the precious youth connected with the institution. Our next "big meeting" was on the fourth Sabbath of September, at the same time that the Synod of Arkansas met at Doaksville. The presence of brethren who had come from a distance to attend the meeting of Synod, greatly increased the interest of this meeting. There were between seven and eight hundred persons on the ground. It was on this day that Capt. John Frazer so boldly renounced his allegiance to the Prince of Darkness. For several months the old man had been thinking a good deal about his soul, now his mind was fully made up to forsake his evil ways and serve the Lord. He rose up in the meeting and spoke to his people in a most earnest and affecting manner, reminding them of his former life, and exhorting them to follow their old captain in the road to heaven, as they had for so many years followed him in the road to hell. "I am," he cried, "an old and dried up tree. I cannot stand among you much longer. Soon death will blow upon me, and I shall fall. O! my people, quit your old and wicked ways and follow your old captain in the heavenly road." In a few weeks death breathed upon the dry tree and it fell. Before an opportunity offered of receiving him into the communion of the church on earth, the old captain died, and was, we hope, received by the Chief Shepherd into the communion of the Church of the first-born, which are written in Heaven.

Since the first of April, 1854, ten big meetings have been held. Five at the Six-Town schoolhouse, three at Spencer, one at the Long Town schoolhouse on the north, and one at the Chickasaw schoolhouse on the south of us. One hundred and four persons have publicly acknowledged themselves determined to seek the salvation of their souls, at these different meetings. Of this number, sixty-six have been received into the church of the Academy, and six have joined the church at Wheelock. A number of them are still under our care as inquirers, and candidates for admission into the church. The whole number of members belonging to the Spencer church at the present time, is ninety-five—thirteen white persons, seven blacks, and seventy-five Choctaws. Of the Choctaws, nine have been received on certificate from other churches. Sixty-one children have been baptized. Two of the members of this church have, within the year, finished their course with joy, one of these a Choctaw boy named Thomas. He joined the church last July, and died a few weeks ago in peace. Thomas loved to pray and sing, and read the word of God. He could repeat the whole Shorter Catechism, in Choctaw, perfectly. He prayed much the day he died. (He was far from home when he died, and was sick only a day and a half.) His last words were, "Whatever the Lord doeth is right." He was, I think, about 17 years of age.

SEMINOLE MISSION.

The following extract from a letter of Mr. Lilley, of recent date, shows that the Lord is visiting the Seminoles as well as the Choctaws, with the outpouring of his Spirit.

Our school is still in session and doing very well; all are here that were at the station when you visited us. They have improved in their studies. Nineteen are reading the word of God; indeed all are reading more or less. We have twenty-six pupils—twenty of whom are Seminoles. But what will doubtless interest you more than all, is the fact, that great seriousness prevails among our scholars. Our largest boys spend considerable time in secret prayer. There is much concern about the way of salvation among the grown-up persons in the neighbourhood; and what is perhaps not generally the case, the men have been foremost in making known their desire to quit their wickedness, and devote themselves to the service of God. However, we have evidence that the Spirit of the Lord is moving on the hearts of the females too. For some time back, scholars and neighbours would come to me, and say they wanted to unite with the church; I told them I would write down their names as an inquiring class. I explained to them that it was not joining church, but it was showing that they were anxious to quit a life of sin, and live unto God. After Sabbath meeting, I invited those who wanted to give in their names, to come forward. Eight came. We all knelt down and our interpreter prayed in their own language. It was a most solemn time. God was showing us that among this people his name would be glorified; that here too, souls would be saved from death, and admitted to the assembly of the just hereafter. Seven more have since given in their names. Mrs. B——, is among the number. Others still appear to be convinced of sin. Already the fruits of righteousness are being seen. I suppose you know Indians have sometimes more than one wife. It occurred, that among those who have turned their faces Zionward, there was a woman married to her mother's husband; of course, they all thought it was right; but she was told she must give up her mother's husband, and she at once did so; and what makes it more cheering the husband told her if she wanted to leave him and do what was right, he was willing she should do it. I anticipated trouble from this case, but God, who is better to us than our fears would lead us to think, has in an unexpected way overcome the difficulty, and that too, without opposition or ill-feeling. Thanks to his holy name. We held a meeting on Sabbath afternoon at an Indian house. The woman of the house is sick. She says she is praying to God, and that in her heart she loves Jesus. She will most likely never recover, but we trust that He whom she professes to love, has washed away her sins in his own blood, and that soon she will be removed to that happy place, "where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more." We hold a Sabbath evening prayer-meeting at the mission, and on Wednesday evening at one of the Indian houses in the neighbourhood. We more than ever earnestly ask your prayers, that God would carry on the work he has begun among this people, and that he would use us as the humble instruments in his hands of doing much good.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

SCHOOLS UNDER THE CARE OF THE LAHOR MISSIONARIES.

The following statement in relation to the Schools at Lahor, under the care of our Missionaries, prepared by Rev. C. W. Forman, gives a minute account of the arrangements, studies, and results of these schools, and cannot fail to be read with interest.

Main School Lahor. Four departments—English, Persian, Sanskrit and Gurmukhi. Number of pupils about three hundred and sixty.

English Department.—First Class.—Three pupils. Studies—Geometry, History of England, and Bible. Have completed Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy, Natural Philosophy, Evidences of Christianity, &c. The pupils are intelligent young men, apparently fully pursuaded of the truth and excellency of Christianity. Teacher, Rev. C. W. Forman.

Second Class.—Twenty pupils. Studies—Macculloch's Course of Reading in Science and Literature, Natural Philosophy, Geography and Bible. Have completed Lennie's Grammar, Arithmetic, &c. Teachers, Rev. C. W. Forman, and a pupil of 1st class.

Third Class.—Eighteen pupils. Studies—Geography, Grammar, Universal History, and Bible. Teachers, pupils of 1st class, and Rev. C. W. Forman, in Bible.

Fourth Class.—Fifteen pupils. Third Instructer, Geography, Grammar, and Bible. Teachers, pupils of 1st and 2d classes, in Bible Rev. C. W. Forman.

Fifth Class.—Twenty-five pupils. Study—Second Instructer. Teachers, pupils of 1st and 2d classes.

Sixth Class.—Twenty-two pupils. Study—First Instructer. Teachers, pupils of 1st and 2d classes.

Persian Department. The whole of this department, consisting of about one hundred and sixty pupils, are reading the Bible, or, if not able to read, are committing verses to memory. The Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, and part of the 5th chapter of Matthew are generally committed to memory before a gospel or catechism is given them. About fifteen pupils are studying Arithmetic, and Natural Philosophy, in Persian, together with Persian Literature and Solomon's Proverbs. They have also read the "Way of Life," one or two of the Gospels, and have studied Geography.

Hirdi Department.—Eighty pupils, all Brahmins. They are reading, some the Gospels, some a book of Tracts, some the Psalms and some a catechism, together with Sanskrit literature.

Gurmukhi Department.—Twelve pupils writing the character, or reading Christian books.

The whole school, including teachers and pupils, is assembled in a large room or chapel (44 by 23 feet) every morning for worship, when a portion of Scripture is read and explained, and a prayer offered.

The teachers seem generally well disposed towards Christianity. One of them, a Musulman, has taken part with me in an argument with another Musulman. One of the pundits (Brahmin Teachers,) I hear, declares their Shasters are altogether false. The teachers themselves are required to read the Bible, and an opportunity is given them every Saturday to ask any questions, or state any difficulties with regard to the portion read during the previous week. This has had a good effect in removing prejudice and convincing of the truth.

Branch Schools.

Having given some account of our main school at Lahor, I will now proceed to give you a similar statement regarding our branch schools.

The most important of these is known as the Hira Mandi, or Diamond Market, school. It contains one hundred and eleven pupils, all of whom study Persian literature. Those who are not able to read intelligently are required to commit to memory the Lord's Prayer, the ten commandments, and the 5th chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel. Those who are able read the gospel of Matthew, and study Geography and Arithmetic. The teacher of this school is a candidate for baptism. He has been in our service for a long time, and has given us great satisfaction as a teacher. He has attended our Hindustani services regularly, and has suffered some persecution for avowing his belief of the Christian religion. I devote about an hour each day to the instruction of the more advanced pupils in Christianity. Their views seem to be gradually changing, and when the precepts of Christ are compared with those of Mohammed, they express the most decided preference for the former. Some of them are very clever, and if converted, will, I think, make very useful men.

The next school has forty pupils who study our religion in connection with their own (Persian) literature. The teacher was a bigoted Musulman, but his belief in Islam seems to have been shaken; at least he evidently feels his inability to prove its truth. He was formerly in the habit of speaking of the Koran as the Kalam ulla (word of God); when asked why he considered it Kalam ulla, he replied, because Mohammed worked so many miracles. He seemed not a little confused to hear that Mohammed had repeatedly acknowledged his inability to work miracles, and he has not since called the Koran the word of God in my hearing.

Mrs. Morrison has a female school in which there are about twenty girls. She does not speak of them very encouragingly. Still, religious truth is implanted in their minds, and it is impossible to say what fruit will be produced.

The last school is in the Poor-House, and contains thirty-nine boys and girls; nearly all the children of paupers. Twelve or fifteen of them can read Hindustani in the Roman character. The only book taught, is the Child's Book on the Soul, in Hindustani. Two children in the school have asked for baptism. Their teacher has also asked for baptism, but there is too much evidence of insincerity. Still, it is pretty manifest that he believes Christianity to be true.

Thus, it appears that a large number of children are daily receiving Christian instruction in this place. Will not Christian parents pray for these children, whose parents care not for their souls? They are, in a spiritual point of view, orphans cast upon the care of our branch of the Church of Christ. Surely, then, we must pray, and pray earnestly for them, or be be guilty of great want of charity to them, and of unfaithfulness to our Lord.

FRANCE.

The following account of the labours of an Evangelist in the South of France, under the direction of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, but whose support is furnished by the Board, will give a good idea of the nature of the work in which he is engaged, and cannot fail to be interesting to the readers of the Record.

Stations in the Department of I——.

Since our last report on the evangelical stations of I——, we have let a time longer than we usually do, elapse; not that the work which is pursued in this department has afforded less interest than before, but there is, of course, a certain uniformity in our narrations, and consequently it is better not to repeat them too frequeetly.

We must observe, on the contrary, with thanksgiving to God, that the work of the evangelization in I—— has not been hindered during the year that is just over, and we ought to see in that circumstance, an earnest call to increase our activity and our endeavours to speed the pure gospel while yet we may.

All that happens elsewhere shows that that liberty of action may be taken away from us unexpectedly. Our stations of S—— and T—— have been indeed, these last few months, the objects of great trial. Four of our dear evangelists have been imprisoned after a lawsuit against them, for their having made use of the right of meeting for the worship which they had enjoyed for twenty years. Their work had been remarkably blessed in those places where a delightful revival had taken place. No doubt the adversary had been frightened to see a number of souls escape from him, and has made use of all his artifice to stop that progress. He has found a strong auxiliary, that is, the Roman clergy, who, by their secret ways and false reports, have risen up against our brethren. But the Lord has made good come out of the evil, for he has enabled our dear evangelists, their families, and their flocks, to glorify him wonderfully in that trial. The fidelity, the perseverance displayed in professing the truth, by these humble confessors of the faith, lately converted to the gospel, and some of whom have also endured prison, have proved, in a most rejoicing way, the reality of the work accomplished in them. If the enemies of the gospel had hoped by that way to detach them from their new faith, and prove to the world that their change was but apparent, they must have been confused, and they have given to the friends of evangelization the opportunity of acknowledging how great the blessing which rests upon them is; how solid and deep the work of our evangelists.

May all this encourage us to persevere in that good work.

The health of our dear evangelist Mr. C——, which had given us some uneasiness recently, has become much stronger, and during the last year he has been able to pursue his business without any interruption, and to continue his numerous excursions in the neighbourhood of G——, and even in far distant villages. We have been happy to acknowledge that his sojourn in V—— had a very good result. He often thanks us for having made him follow that treatment, which, through God's blessing, has recovered his health. We ought to be so much the more grateful for that health God has preserved for him, that he has been exposed to the cholera, which has reigned with a great strength in France last summer, and has not spared the department of I——, and G——, though it has not been very violent in this town. During the epidemic, brother C—— together with a pastor of G—— had established special prayer meetings in two places of the town; when these faithful servants of God endeavoured to call sinners to repentance and to flee from the wrath to come in believing and giving themselves up to the Saviour.

Mr. C—— has pursued with great interest his work, among the soldiers in the garrison at G——, passing through that town, or ill in the hospital. He has often found some who received with joy the word of life, that was offered to them, and who, having received it, honoured the gospel by their behaviour amidst their fellow soldiers. Some of those to whom he had preached Jesus Christ, have left this world; he has assisted them when on their death-bed, and he hopes that for some at least, his words were not thrown away.

Others who gave him great satisfaction have been engaged on the expedition to the Crimea. While he is writing this, he is anxious about their fate, and he prays the God in whom they have believed, to be with them and to keep them. Here is an extract from his correspondence concerning these soldiers:

"My dear soldiers are often the subject of my prayers. When those I am acquainted with set off, I gave them their provision of the seed of life. My dear corporal S—— has been at L—— for a few months. He writes to me that he misses very much our conversation, but he adds that God has far indemnified him in making him meet with soldiers who also love the Lord who has saved them.

"Indeed," says he to me, "I find I am rather far from the meeting places, but with joy I haste and even run every night to join the fortress where I am stationed, after having attended the meetings of my brethren."

That dear friend relates with a childlike simplicity what has happened to him during his journey from G—— to L——; he has always dwelt in Catholic houses, and I see with pleasure that he was not ashamed of confessing the Lord Jesus, and that he has done so meekly, though he is as quick as powder. He adds: "I have often left you with my heart oppressed. I wept in seeing my progress so slow, and my propensity to go astray from the way which Christians ought to walk in. How often have I not sighed over my unbelief, and over my sins! but God has never left me when I thus prayed." "Forgive me," says C——, "if I talk so long of my dear corporal, I love him so dearly, and the work of the Holy Spirit has been so clearly manifested, by the change of his natural temper, that I feel eager to give glory to God, who so easily changes hearts, even the hardest.

September, 1854.—"Another soldier, an artillery brigadier, continues to honour the gospel, and he fails not to mark those, who, out of the recruits belong to our communion. In the hospital there is another who seems to be quite another man since he is ill; he tells me how happy he is when I come and speak with him of his soul and of the gospel; may God be pleased to give him, while he is ill, the health of his soul. My brigadier said to me that he had seen several of his fellow comrades fall down like stones, during the exercises, and in less than one hour struck with the epidemic. Since I know the Lord, adds he, I have often read out of the gospel the words, 'Be ready;' but I had never understood their importance as well as I do now. How happy are we in the present time to be enlisted in the army of our dear Saviour, and to know that the 'death of his beloved is precious unto him.'"

As it is always, and particularly this year, when the cholera has increased the mortality, our evangelist has been called to accompany several funerals, and he has always taken advantage of it to announce salvation through Christ to the numerous people, who, in France, walk after the funerals. The present epidemic made his words still more impressive. I had the privilege of announcing my dear Saviour to a number of Catholics who always come to our funerals to hear the address, and receive a tract. I saw with gratitude to the Lord that every one listened attentively when I spoke of the love of God in giving us a plan of salvation. A Catholic gentleman approached me, as he came back from the churchyard, and said to me, "I have just attended one of your funerals for the first time, and I assure you, your religion has a peculiar character that ours has not. You speak to the mind and to the heart, for though I am hard hearted and have not wept for a long while, your words have moved me, and I could not help crying. May I not forget, O my God, that to me belongs shame and confusion, and that thou only art worthy to receive honour, glory and power." "A few days afterwards I was obliged to lead to the churchyard the corpse of a child seven years old. About two hundred persons were gathered around me. As I was meditating about that which I was to say near the grave the Lord reminded me of the words contained in Hebrews ii. 1, and he gave me his help to meditate on them. In the application of what I had said, I said a word of the three plagues which now afflict the world, to entreat them to pay a more serious attention to the great affair of the salvation of our souls, and I saw that every one listened very attentively. While I was distributing my tracts, several persons were still moved as they shook hands with me, and I easily saw that a coal-man whom I have been long acquainted with had cried, for his black cheeks were covered with marks of tears.

A—— is still often visited by brother S.; the room where the meetings took place had become too small, since the number of people who come and bathe at A—— had increased. Among these are always a number of Protestants; besides these, several Catholics attended to the worship regularly. An Englishman at G——, having given a piece of ground, a humble chapel, during last summer, has been constructed there by means of collections gathered in several places. This chapel was inaugurated on the fourth of July, by the clergymen of G—— and M——, and a numerous assembly filled up the church, the auditors were attentive, and serious and evangelical exhortations were several times addressed to them. The required sum has not yet been gathered to pay for the chapel. That small flock at A—— gives always joy to our evangelist. A few young men whom he had taught the truths of the gospel, have been admitted to the communion after having been carefully examined, by our brother and friend, pastor S. of G——. It was interesting to see those young men professing thus publicly their belief in salvation through Jesus Christ alone, and then living according to the gospel, amidst such a population as that of A——, where the Romish superstitions generally reign. Nowhere have those whose awakened conscience oblige them to leave the Romish worship greater contradiction to endure, and a greater need of faith and courage, than those C. gives us an instance of in his letters.

"Sometime ago, a man named F., a member of the society of the penitents for thirty years, came to hear the gospel preached; he has a Bible sold to him by brother C., and last winter we visited him, sometimes, to help him through our humble means, to understand the Holy Scriptures. This man has been enabled by the Holy Spirit, to choose affliction and persecution with the small flock at A——, thinking as Moses, that the reproach of Christ is more precious than the approbation of the world. The priests have tried hard to make him renounce his new faith, but he has resisted firmly. At last his wife, who had gone to the mass, inquired why he had not come hither. 'I went to the chapel,' said he calmly; 'she became so angry that she did not only reproach him, but wished to beat him; it had never happened for thirty years they have been married. Then she prepared a parcel of her clothes, saying she would live with him no longer, hoping her husband would change; though he calmly said, 'you can do whatever you please, if you go away, it will grieve me; if you remain, I shall be glad of it; as for me, I am decided. I have long been thinking of what I am doing this day, and God is a witness that all my wish is to love and serve him according to the gospel.' I am convinced that the conversion of our friend's mind has taken place, and that the conversion of his heart has begun. May the Lord himself be pleased to make it complete for his glory! I hope that some brother will feel anxious to pray for him."

Later, C. wrote about that man:

"F. our new member of the small family is in the right way; he behaves towards his wife in a most Christian way. Since his eyes have been opened to the light, he is full of attention towards her, and she disturbs him no longer. He related to me that as he was dining, he had asked his wife what the curate had said at church? 'You know,' said she, 'it is always the same thing.' 'Well I shall tell you the good instructions Mr. C. has given us—for he spoke in French; then I left off dining, and I repeated to her your sermon about trials, and the feelings with which we ought to receive them; and she calmly listened.' I see with joy that the Holy Spirit strengthens its work in the heart of that dear friend, who becomes every day more a true child of God. May the Lord give me more and more wisdom, more love, to souls more prudence and zeal." The irritation of the Catholic party on account of the erection of the A—— chapel, has occasioned numerous endeavours to have it shut, or at least to hinder the meetings of more than twenty persons. But the superior authorities do not seem inclined to encourage those hinderances and the worship has till now been celebrated quietly.

By the following instances you may judge of the struggles the poor inhabitants of those papist countries have to undergo, when they wish to live and to die according to the pure gospel of Jesus Christ. Brother C. wrote to us—"that a mother R. who appeared to have felt the more deeply the power of the gospel, has fallen very ill; my dear and sweet Saviour enabled me to speak to her with love of her everlasting interests, and of the attempts that would be made to move her. I read to her several promises our heavenly Father has enclosed in his word. She understood them, and seemed to be strengthened by them, and when I had prayed, she held my hands fast, as if she wished me not to leave her. However, I was obliged to leave after having wished several friends to visit her. On my returning there a second time, in a deep snow, I was informed that the poor creature was no longer here below. Our friends had gone to see that woman who had listened to them with a deep interest, but her daughter encouraged by the bigoted fiend, the priest, had forbidden them to come back, and was determined to have her mother confessed. The dear friend resisted as long as her moral strength has allowed her to do so, but on the last day of her life, the curate ordered every one to walk out of the room, and he confessed the poor dying woman. Some moments after, the daughter inquired how she was now; 'I am as before, my girl; I had confessed my sins to Jesus Christ long ago, many times a day I did so. I declare my child I wish you would do the same, for He gives the true absolution.' I have the sweet hope that the God of the gospel, in whom she had believed, has spoken to her in her last moments of peace and mercy."

C. wrote also to us—"Brother B. has related to me the edifying death of his young nephew. He was attacked with a consumption, and being obliged to renounce all other business, he began to read one of the religious tracts he found in his house. After having read it over, he wished to read others; then the New Testament, and then the Bible. In that holy study, to which the Lord directed him, the dear young man learned three things; the errors of the Romish church, his own heart, and the truth that saves through Christ. But one cannot fancy all the struggles he had with his father, who is a very honest man in the world's opinion, and who considered himself dishonoured if his son would not attend the mass and die a Catholic. After having tired of meekness and threats, he forbade every person except his family to see him. But as he himself said, his Saviour never left him; he employed his last day in praying aloud, and his mother said his prayers were only thanksgivings. He entreated his parents to give themselves up to Christ, and to believe in the gospel. He said to his mother—'Do not cry, I go up to heaven with Jesus my Saviour,' and he expired. He was 19 years old."

How much the examples of those Christians, dying in the calm and peace that the faith in our Saviour gives, ought to encourage us to make that name through which alone men may die in peace, known everywhere.

If it is a consolation to see young people leave this world in the peace of a Christian, it is interesting also to see old men to whom brother C. has preached the gospel, wish to employ the last few days God still gives them, in glorifying Him whom they have been taught to know and to love. An old man of 85 years old, said: "The more I approach the end of my pilgrimage, the more the yoke of my Redeemer seems to me sweet and easy."

Another of 86 years old, fights with courage against his family, who wish him to receive absolution from the curate. Always difficulties and struggles, but overcome by faith.

The details into which we have entered about the work that our evangelist C. pursues, do not allow us to speak now long of that which is now in the hands of Mr. H., an evangelist at V——. We shall then say only to-day, that without presenting a very striking progress, the work of our brother however bears fruit. His school which he considers as a most important matter for the evangelization, contains about twenty-five scholars. The priests do all they can to hinder the Catholic parents from sending there their children. Thus they called for a woman named B., and inquired why she attended to our worship and sent her child to our school? She answered, that as for herself she felt happy to hear the gospel preached, and that as for her child, she saw he learned better there than anywhere else. After having vainly contrived to make her change her resolution, they have taken away from her the two-thirds of the help she received from the committee for alms, and she was told that her child should not be placed into apprenticeship. She was at first somewhat moved of it, but the Lord strengthened her, and she bore her trial with joy.

As for the worship-meetings, they are numerous, and would be far more so if most of the Protestants in V—— did not show a sad indifference to religion. On the contrary, God has chosen for himself out of the papism, a people still weak, but who increase by degrees; and in his last letters brother H. says that the small flock at V——, makes progress in spiritual life in a rejoicing way.

May the Lord be pleased to bless those beginnings.

MISCELLANIES.

DR. DUFF ON FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The following extract from a recent speech of this distinguished Missionary, embodies, in a brief compass, a weighty argument in behalf of the Foreign Missionary enterprise, and ought to be well considered by those who think too much is done for the foreign field.

An argument frequently made use of against Foreign Missions is, that there is sufficient to be done at home. If that be the rule, we need not, frequently, even go beyond our own families to find that we have enough to do at home; or even beyond this physical body of ours; for there is no man nor woman living who has not to contend with some remaining root of sin or corruption. I do not understand that language, and in the sight of the living God I protest, this night, that at the bottom of it there lies, unintentionally, a huge deal of Anti-Christianity. What! do you suppose that the Apostles in Jerusalem would have argued in this manner, in the face of the Divine command to go and preach the Gospel among all nations? Would they have risen up, when they were commanded to go into all the world, and to every creature, and say, "No, Lord! we have enough to do at home; thousands are unconverted in Jerusalem, and is not Jerusalem the mother of all churches? We require to have our strength concentrated here." Was that the way in which they spoke or acted? I simply feel that speaking in such a manner is practically saying, "Lord Jesus! thou great Head of the Church, thou art wrong. Thou didst give a wrong command when thou didst tell us to go and preach the Gospel among all nations, when so many are still unevangelized amongst us!" We must deal with this matter with the word of God in our hands, and not by the maxims of prudential worldly wisdom. Let us take God's view of the matter; and we will find that home will be blessed more abundantly, the more we commiserate and help the perishing in other lands.

But if we practically say, "Lord, we are wiser than thou; we are more judiciously benevolent than thou," we shall never succeed. I know you will think this wild language; but I use it purposely to provoke inquiry, for I feel it is doing injustice to the word of God, and that it is a scandal against the name of Jesus Christ, and a deadly injury to the souls of men, when this matter is thus dealt with.

PROGRESS OF THE GOSPEL IN THE NORTH OF FRANCE.

There is little to say concerning the state of our Protestant Churches during the last month.

The Central Protestant Society is making delightful progress in the North of France, and does not meet with many difficulties from the civil power, except in the South. One pastor, M. Monnier, having prepared a place of worship for some fifty or sixty proselytes from Romanism, in the village of Mennevret, requested authorization from the mayor to open this temple. The mayor consulted the superior Administration, which replied, "that religious worship is free in France." If the Government had always acted on this opinion it would have been saved from many embarrassing positions, and we should have escaped much vexation. But what is the reason that the Government appears to be more liberal in the northern provinces than in the southern? Is it occasioned by the proximity of these provinces to England? Is it because the population is less ignorant and less fanatic? Whatever it may be, during the last fifteen months, five new places of worship have been opened by the northern section of the society, namely, at Bohain, La Fère, Le Cateau, Grongier, and Mennevret. The members of these little communities are composed mainly of converted Papists. In the sixteenth century Protestantism had many disciples in this part of France; and now, in our time, it is gradually regaining what it lost by persecution.

At Elbeuf, an industrial city of Normandy, where there has been an evangelical chapel for several years, the inhabitants continue to manifest increasing sympathy for the preaching of the truth. About 450 persons have been present at the meetings which the pastor has held every Sunday evening. The Protestant boys' and girls' schools are attended by increasing numbers, and lately eight Roman Catholics have abjured their errors and embraced the true faith of the Gospel. Others are preparing to be received into the Protestant communion at the festival of Easter.

THE OASES IN THE DESERT.

Amidst this widely extended field of labour which, until a very recent period, presented an unbroken mass of heathenism, the gospel of Christ has been embraced with joy by hundreds of the inhabitants. In numerous villages the converts are enjoying the advantages of religious instruction; four Christian churches have been organized; and, in each successive visit to these interesting localities, the missionary is encouraged to find eager candidates waiting for admission to the rite of baptism.

In a letter written from Carnool, one hundred miles northwest of Cuddapah, and bearing date 12th December, ult., the Rev. Edward Porter thus describes the incidents connected with the itinerant labours in which he was then engaged.

"You will be glad to hear that our mission work continues to prosper, and that we have frequent accessions to the number of our converts at nearly all our out-stations. During my tour from Cuddapah to this station, I have had the pleasure of baptizing no less than one hundred and fifty adults and children. Most of the number have been twelve months under Christian instruction, and were baptized after urgent solicitation on their part. I could have baptized many more, but on account of their deficiency in Christian knowledge, I deemed it prudent to keep them back a little longer. The above converts reside at four of our out-stations, viz., Peidalah, Gundicoor, Poloor, and Jotoon, villages situated in the Cuddapah and Karnool Zillahs. Most of our baptismal services were held by moonlight under the shade of some beautiful tamarind trees. Some of our village chapels are not yet completed, owing to the difficulty in obtaining ground, so that we were obliged to resort to the canopy of trees and heaven's clear sky. How I wish you and some of our English friends could have witnessed the interesting scene. You must fancy a small tent under a tree, at the door of which stands the missionary with a table covered with white cloth and a pillow instead of a velvet cushion. On the table is placed the New Testament in Telugu, David's inspired Psalms, and a hymn book in the same language. On one side stand the native catechists (dressed in the graceful tunics and turbans of the East,) and in front a number of Hindoo females and children seated on mats and native rugs made of cotton and wool. On both sides of the table the men are seated in like manner. A few heathen stragglers stand outside of the Christian group, wondering at the strange sight before them. A short prayer is offered, then a hymn sung in the native language, answering to the words,

"Come, Holy Spirit, come,
Let thy bright beams arise, &c.

"A portion of the Scriptures is read, prayer is offered up, and a sermon is then preached from the words of our Saviour, 'Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.' After the sermon is finished, the candidates come forward and avow their faith in Christ, by answering questions put to them, and repeating the Apostles' Creed in their own tongue.

"Baptism, in the name of the Holy Trinity, is then performed by the missionary, and a short prayer is offered that the Spirit of God may descend and renew the hearts of all who have been baptized.

"The congregation sing, and the benediction being given, the people return to their homes, having thus avowed the Lord Jehovah to be their God. Thus have been formed, through God's blessing upon our labours, four Christian churches in the midst of this wide heathen wilderness, in which we hope for many years the light of heavenly truth will continue to shine. Let me entreat your prayers, and those of the friends of Christian Missions, that these churches may prove fruitful gardens fragrant with Christian graces and fruits—monuments of the Saviour's redeeming power, and of the Spirit's sanctifying grace."—Missionary Magazine.

SPAIN: EFFORTS FOR ITS EVANGELIZATION.

Those who are at all acquainted with the recent history of Spain, know that a change of a very marked character has been silently progressing in that country. While continuing nominally Popish, it has been steadily moving away from Rome. Many of the young priests, dissatisfied with the gospel of the Breviary, have become earnest inquirers after the gospel of the New Testament. Those who looked narrowly at their state of mind could discover, too, an impatience of the yoke of the Pope, and a pretty general desire among the younger members of the priesthood to break away from Peter's chair, and to form themselves into a free, independent Popish Church of Spain. This would be a very important change of itself; but valuable, chiefly, as the pioneer of other and greater changes, which would most certainly follow it.

Even so late as the year 1851, a formidable attempt was made by the Pope and the Spanish Government, to restore the waning power of the Romish Church in that country, and to place her once more in the same position of influence and wealth she had formerly enjoyed. In that year, as some of our readers may recollect, a concordat was concluded betwixt Rome and the Spanish Government, the object of which, in plain terms, was, first, to proscribe for ever freedom of conscience in the realm of Spain; second, to effect the extinction of knowledge, and guarantee an eternity of dominion to ignorance; third, to take the civil authorities bound and astricted to aid the clergy in searching for Bibles; and hunting out missionaries; and, fourthly, to erect convents and form religious societies all over Spain, the better to enable the clergy to coerce the citizen, and beard the government. It seemed when that concordat was concluded, as if Spain was more firmly bound than ever, and that nothing remained for it but to lie down and die in its chains. There was no power within the country to break those chains; in vain was a deliverer looked for from without. But, all suddenly, like a thunder-cloud from the Gaudaramas, help came from an unexpected quarter. A revolution burst on the Escurial; the tyrants which had oppressed the country were scattered; the government changed; the fruits of the concordat swept away; and the restrictions which kept out the doctrines of the gospel in good degree relaxed. This is the day of Spain's visitation, of which the friends of truth desire to avail themselves.

This movement originated with the late Dr. James Thompson, of London, a man of apostolic simplicity and zeal, who, himself, had been a missionary in Spain for many years. He employed agents, and circulated Bibles and tracts in that country; and the society in the Scottish Metropolis, for the Evangelization of Spain was, at first subsidiary to Dr. Thompson, and aimed only at helping him in his great work. In consequence of his death, and also of the recent favourable events in Spain, that society has seen it to be its duty to adopt an independent organization, and to employ an agency of its own to operate on the Iberian peninsula. The society in their interesting report just issued, thus state the prospects with which they enter on this most important field:—

"It may cheer the hearts of those interested in Spain's highest welfare to be assured, that we have information in our hands to prove that the special instrumentalities set on foot by Dr. Thompson, not long before his death, and towards which a large portion of the funds sent from Scotland, were applied, have been attended by a most surprising success. Notwithstanding the opposition of the priesthood, the word of God is reaching the understanding and the hearts of many throughout large and important portions of that hitherto benighted land. In not a few of the principal towns, a strong interest of a hopeful kind has been awakened; and there is evidently a loud call for renewed endeavours.

"At the present hour there are, it is quite certain, in one single town of Spain, nearly four thousand persons who have abandoned Papal worship, and who assiduously read and study the Holy Scriptures as their sole rule and standard. In other towns also, there are many persons, including not a few of the clergy, who protest against the tyranny and superstitions of the Church of Rome, and declare themselves desirous of further light and knowledge. There are not a few, moreover, of the Lord's own people in that land, watching, praying, labouring, and waiting for the overthrow of Anti-Christian error, and the advancement of gospel truth. In Turkey, the recent results of more than twenty years' unwearied missionary effort have been to show the hand of the Lord giving abundant blessing and encouragement. The encouragement now furnished for corresponding effort in Spain is far greater. Twenty months may not improbably accomplish there, by the divine blessing, as much as has been done in Turkey during the course of twenty years."

The momentous consequences which might be expected to follow the conversion of Spain to the Protestant faith, are well stated in El Alba, "The Dawn," a small Spanish periodical, which is acting as the pioneer of the gospel in Spain.

"But suppose the Spanish nation to become Protestant, how many advantages should we derive from that circumstance! On what a powerful auxiliary might we not calculate! All that Spain now gives to Rome, she would give to the support of the truth; and, therefore, the moral force of Spain's conversion would strike the death-blow of Rome, from which she would rise no more. In that case, the noble language of Castile would carry the principles of Protestantism to no less than seventeen millions of human beings who speak that language in America, and to five millions more who speak it in Asia. Her treasures would no longer be squandered away in the Holy Land on rosaries and scapularies; they would be employed in sending Bibles to the tens of thousands of Jews, descendants of those expelled from Spain and scattered over the East, but who still preserve the language of their ancient country.

"But again; Spain has five important military establishments on the north coast of the Empire of Morocco, in Africa, and in all of which the Spanish idiom is much spoken, as well by Jews as by the Spanish Moors.

"Spain has, also, on the western coast of Africa, a group of islands forming an important colony. It is, therefore, obvious that, with all these elements, if Spain were to become Protestant, a large portion of the Continent of Africa might reasonably be expected to follow her example."—Free Church Record.

STATISTICS OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

We trust it is in no spirit of self-gratulation, but with devout thankfulness to the Giver of all good, that we present to our readers the following abstract of the doings of the Board during the fifteen years of its existence. Commencing in the humblest way, but in the hands of men of strong faith, ardent zeal, and firm purpose, by the blessing of God it has arisen to a commanding eminence, and has made its influence felt in every quarter of the globe. God has said, "My word shall not return unto me void." Faith might rest satisfied with the promise that so much precious seed has not been sown in vain; but we have the evidence of sense, that the promise has actually been fulfilled. Our eyes have seen, and our ears have heard of sinners converted to God and saints edified and comforted by means of these publications. But we must not forget that what has been done bears a very small proportion to what remains to be done. Let us then thank God, and take courage to pursue our onward way, until no man shall need any more to teach his neighbour, but all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest.

The Board has likewise published 3,592,000 numbers of the Sabbath-school Visitor, a strictly religious paper, each number of which contains as much reading matter as an 18mo volume of 50 pages in small pica leaded. This would make an addition to our Sabbath-school literature of 1,796,000 volumes of 100 pages each, or 35,215 Sabbath-school libraries of 51 distinct volumes, illustrated with numerous engravings.

* NOTE.—This includes 18 tracts published by the Presbyterian Tract and Sabbath-school Book Society, from which the Board of Publication originated.

A GOOD WORD FROM ABROAD.

We publish with pleasure the following favourable notice of our operations, extracted from the Halifax Presbyterian Witness.

PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The sixteenth annual report of this noble Institution; its "Principles and Plans;" its "Alphabetical and Descriptive Catalogues;" its Almanac for 1855, replete with Presbyterian and general denominational statistics; and not a few of its Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts, are before and around me. A statement of some of the facts which they contain, will, I doubt not, suggest some important practical ideas. In particular, I trust it may lead to an effort on the part of the Presbyterians, and friends of Evangelical Christianity in these Lower Provinces, to put themselves into a position to reap the advantages which the Board is ready to confer; to accept the gifts which it so generously offers, and to aid in accomplishing the beneficial results which are the grand end of its organization.

During the past year the Board had 151 colporteurs in commission, of whom one was in India, one hundred and forty-four in the United States, and only six in the British Provinces, five of them being in Nova Scotia and one in Canada West. The appointment of a colporteur by the Presbytery of St. Stephen was subsequent to the publication of the report. It is hoped, however, that by the time the next report shall have been presented, there may be as many Agents reported from New Brunswick alone, as are at present found in all the Lower Provinces. There is abundant room for them all; a hearty welcome will be given by the people; and sufficient inducement offered by the Board, especially to those whose hearts are in the work, and whom the love of Christ constraineth.

During the past year the Board distributed 135,983 volumes, of which 16,098 volumes were donations. It also, by the same colporteur agency, distributed gratuitously 1,300,547 pages of Tracts. These, so called tracts, embrace frequently valuable treatises, such as Dr. Samuel Miller on Presbyterianism, and on Infant Baptism; Drs. William Symington and J. J. Janeway on the Atonement; Newman Hall's Come to Jesus; Ryle's Cross of Christ, and Do you Pray; Sacrifice of Mass, by Henry Cooke, D.D., LL.D.; many of the smaller works of McCheyne, Dr. James Hamilton, Robert Hall, President Edwards, the Alexanders of Princeton, Dr. Doddridge; in short the choicest productions of all the great and good, whether living or departed, without respect of creed or country. From what I have already witnessed as to the kind of places in which our own colporteur has introduced these valuable works, I can well understand the Report when it intimates that, in their distribution, the colporteurs have encountered "Unitarians and Universalists, Pelagians and Socinians, Deists and Infidels, as well as less pernicious errorists." The number of families visited, of whom very many were conversed and prayed with, was 68,185, of which no less than 2,340 Presbyterian families were found without the Confession of Faith; and 1,603 families, (of different denominations) without any religious book, except the Bible. Of course, the two last mentioned items afford a proof that the families in question were destitute of pastoral instruction. The sad state of things thus disclosed forms a fearful aggravation of the latter great want. I need hardly say that such destitution, both as to religious books and the preaching of the word, has been of very old standing in New Brunswick, and still exists in many parts. Indeed, the absence of the Bible itself, and of books of every description, has been discovered in quarters where such a discovery was not at all anticipated.

The sale of books within the bounds of the Presbytery of St. Stephen has far surpassed expectations. Indeed, it is a most interesting sight to drive out to the colporteur's head quarters on one of those winter evenings, and to observe the eager throng by which he is found to be surrounded. His large box has been opened; his books have been strewn around the table. There are Calvin's Institutes, and M'Crie's Life of Knox; there are Owen on Justification, and Charnock on Regeneration; there is a most tempting edition of the Pilgrim's Progress, and here are the choicest works of Baxter, Henry, and Doddridge. There also are the British Reformers from Wickliff and Bilney to Fox and Coverdale. There is "Leila Ada," the Jewish convert, with a portrait, which will certainly sell the book, as may be seen by looking at the admiring faces of the spectators, not that one of the most saleable books in the whole collection and the most absorbing story amongst them, needs any such recommendation. If the resources of our book-loving visitors were equal to their wishes, the colporteur would speedily be relieved of his precious collection; as it is, two, and three, and four, and up to eight dollars' worth, have been borne away by single individuals. Children's books have a great run, for if one little boy or girl has obtained the "Children of the Bible," or "Little Mary," or "Sarah Lee and Susan Gray," why should not all their little neighbours have these books also, whether the prices be forthcoming or not? Blessings manifold be on them all, the Board, the books, the colporteur, the buyers, and the children!

Our Presbytery will nominate additional colporteurs so soon as suitable men can be found.

I believe there is abundant field for three or four colporteurs within the bounds of each of our three Presbyteries, not to mention the wants of our brethren of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, of the Established Church of Scotland, and of the Presbyterian Church of Nova Scotia. The salary allowed is at the rate of 200 dollars per year, including in this sum, however, 50 dollars for outfit. The Board pays all necessary expenses. In a letter to the writer the superintendent of the department says, "We consider it indispensable that the colporteurs should be pious men, and very desirable that they should be Presbyterians. But the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the extension of his kingdom, should be his predominant desire." Nothing, indeed, is more praiseworthy than the catholicity of the Board, as may be seen in the works it has selected from every evangelical denomination, and as evinced in the above extract. But herein it only exemplifies the catholicity of Presbyterianism, as taught in the Westminster Standards, and as ever exemplified by all genuine Presbyterians.

The Board publishes a monthly Record, and a valuable bi-monthly Sabbath-school Visitor. The latter is far beyond any child's paper known to me, in excellence of matter, if not in perfection of its illustrations.

THE MINISTRY AND COLPORTAGE.

We had occasion in the Record for April to quote a brief article from the Southern Presbyterian, published at Charleston, S. C. In the same excellent paper we find, under date of March 10th, an article under the above heading, which, although somewhat longer than we are accustomed to insert, we venture to transfer entire to our columns.

The increase of the number of competent and faithful ministers of the gospel, is the great necessity of the Church in our country. On this subject we presume there is no diversity of sentiment among those who have given their attention to the complaints which reach us from every branch of evangelical Christians. One of the hopeful indications of the times is, that the want of an enlarged number of such ministers begins to be felt, and, as a consequence, in some degree at least, the energies of the Church are directed to a removal of the evil.

But the increase of the ministry is the work of time. The young men whom God may call and incline to the sacred office, are to be educated for its functions. In some churches, and in our own particularly, the requisite process of preparation extends through several years, varying according to the stage in his mental cultivation, to which the candidate has attained at the time when he devotes himself to the service of the Church. It becomes then a question for the serious consideration of all who love the kingdom of our Lord, and desire the salvation of the thousands in our land that are now perishing for lack of knowledge. What shall be done for the relief of our spiritual destitutions, until such time as an adequate number of ministers shall be sent forth into the vineyard? We do not ask whether any agency of what kind soever shall supersede the ministry, nor whether the work pertaining to the office can be fulfilled as successfully by any other instrumentality. On this subject the doctrine of the Scriptures is explicit; with us it is positive and final. Any scheme, therefore, which proposes to dispense with the ministry of the word, or any the legitimate tendency of which is to disparage its value, we are prepared to reject as unauthorized by the principles of the gospel, as well as by its letter, and as necessarily detrimental to the best interests of the Church and of the world. In perfect accordance with these views, however, we may ask, seeing that the paucity of ministers leaves many portions of our land destitute of their services, and that, in the nature of the case, this "lack of service" must continue for some years to come, what shall be done in the meantime for their religious welfare? We have not ministers to send to them; is there any other agency by which we may reach them and do them good?

After all the examination we have been able to give the subject, we have seen no agency that seems to promise so much as that of colportage, as conducted by our Board of Publication, or by the American Tract Society. It requires little time, comparatively, to put it in efficient operation. It is eminently distributive in its action. It may be sustained at a less expense than any other agency which accomplishes an equal amount of work in anything like the same time. It has upon it already, the seal of God's blessing. Not to speak of other forms in which its happy fruits have been developed, the numbers in all parts of the country, whom it has already brought to the knowledge of Christ, would, if gathered into one body, form a great army of redeemed sinners.

We have thought that this plan of colportage is particularly adapted to the condition of our Southern and Southwestern States. Our people, for the number of them, are dispersed over a very wide extent of territory. Their habitations for the most part are far asunder, and but a small number can meet together at one place for public worship. This renders it necessary to provide an unusually large proportionate number of ministers, if all shall enjoy the full privileges of the gospel. Such a supply of ministers cannot now be furnished; we fear that many years shall elapse before the disability will be removed. Even the inadequate, very inadequate number now in the field, owing to the sparseness of the population and other causes, are not supported to such an extent that they can all devote their entire labours to their appropriate work. But the colporteur, with the excellent books placed in his charge, may traverse the land in every direction, explore every corner, visit every house, and leave there that which, if God is pleased to bless it, will nourish the soul of the Christian, and direct the sinner to the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." The book may not be as good as the sermon, but it may help much to make the sermon more efficient, and where the sermon cannot be had, the book may be of unspeakable value.

It is not our purpose, however, to dwell on the importance of colportage in its general influence, but to speak of it in its relation to the ministry in the present exigency of the Church, growing out of the inadequate number of those filling the sacred office. It appears to us that in its progress, especially if its operations should be much enlarged, it will exert an important influence upon the supply of ministers. It would contradict all that we have learned of the effect of a wider diffusion of gospel light and of deeper impressions of Divine grace upon the hearts of men, to suppose that the circulation of good books will lead to a depreciated estimate of the value of public preaching and other ordinances of God's house. On the contrary, wherever such books are distributed and are read, (the blessing of God accompanying) an increased desire is awakened to enjoy these privileges, and more exertions and sacrifices are made to obtain them.

The first effects, therefore, of the successful services of the colporteur will be to create a larger demand for ministers. And this we should hail as itself a blessing to the Church; for let the demand increase, and let the Church see and feel that it is increasing, then there will be more prayer to the "Lord of the harvest," and more of a spirit of personal and of household consecration to his cause. When the Church shall thus be brought up to the measure of her duty, ministers in greater numbers will be sent forth. God is able to raise them up.

Besides, of those whom it may please our Lord to convert unto himself through the instrumentality of the books put in circulation, there will be the usual proportion who will devote themselves to his service in the work of preaching the gospel. When we hear of a revival of religion, one of the first inquiries we make is, how many will it furnish to the ranks of the ministry. Every agency which multiplies the number of Christians, we expect to multiply also the number of ministers. The labours of the colporteur have not been, and will not be wanting in the same fruits.

Looking then at the results of an efficient and extended system of colportage upon the increase of the ministry, we must regard it as an agency that God has raised up at the present time to accomplish a great work on behalf of our country. We rejoice in the success which has crowned its labours under the control of the American Tract Society, and we rejoice in the energy displayed by the Board of Publication of our own Church in giving through the same channel a wider circulation to their most valuable books. It is painful, however, to observe that the Board are greatly restricted in their plans by the want of sufficient means to carry them forward. Will not our churches come to their relief, and that speedily?

A FAITHFUL LABOURER GONE TO HIS REWARD.

Died, April 24, at Medina, O., Mr. John R. Patton, a zealous, devoted and successful colporteur of the Board of Publication. His disease was pulmonary consumption, under which he gradually sunk, until, in the language of one who was privileged to minister at his dying bed, "his happy spirit passed triumphantly and sweetly away."

How richly he was endowed with the true colporteur spirit, will be seen from the following extracts from his correspondence with the Board. Writing, Oct. 26, 1854, he says:

"The pleasure derived from this truly great and excellent work has done much toward sustaining me when depressed by physical exhaustion, and it has been a privilege which I feel that I do not sufficiently appreciate. Feeble, indeed, is the instrument employed, but it is, I firmly believe, the great doctrines and other truths revealed in the word of God, that is sown thus on a field where I hope the Spirit of God will bless it, and make it effectual in the sanctification of his people and the conversion of sinners, and in leading many of our precious youth to embrace, intelligently, those doctrines that lead them, like Mary, to the feet of Christ."

March 7, 1855, he writes:—"Your very kind letter should have had an earlier reply, acknowledging the generosity of the Board towards an unworthy servant, who has performed only a feeble part as an instrument in the hand of God, in extending the knowledge of the precious gospel of his Son. This is truly a glorious work, and eternity alone will reveal its influence in checking error, in enlightening the minds of thousands in reference to the way of salvation by grace, leading them to Christ as the only foundation; feeding the advanced Christian with strong meat, and refreshing the weak with milk and honey; guarding the inexperienced against the dangers of the way, and opening up the precious fulness of the gospel for their encouragement; instructing all to whom they come, in the principles of truth, none being left without something adapted to their case. Even the little child is amply provided for, and every colporteur who bears with him the Catechism and the excellent little books provided for them, is sowing good seed where we may hope it will be fruitful. May God prosper this work more and more abundantly with the attending influences of the Holy Spirit, that it may redound to his glory.

"It is painful for me to write. I am steadily declining and have no hope of recovery. My refuge is in Christ; to him I look. In him is my trust. My pen must ere long lie still. My prayer to God is, that you, and all who stand in your position, may be blessed and your labours crowned with abundant success."

Again, March 8, he says:—"Finding myself sinking under the influence of pulmonary disease, and my means very much limited, I enclose a half-year's subscription for the Record, wishing it stopped with the June number, as my year begins with January, I have taken it from its first issue, and felt that if I had but one paper it must be the Record.

"One who feels a deep interest in the progress of the gospel cannot but ask, 'Watchman, what of the night?' and be anxious to know not only what success it is meeting, but what our own beloved Zion is doing.—Would that every member of our Church read it."

May he, being dead, still speak to many a young man in our Church, to convince him of the duty and privilege of engaging in this important work.

LEILA ADA.

A copy of this interesting volume with a portrait, will be sent free of postage for 67 cents in post office stamps, or to a clergyman for 56 cents. Address J. P. Engles, Publishing Agent, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

NEW TRACTS.

No. 171.—Does your Faith grow? 4 pp. By the Rev. Dr. Plumer.

A searching inquiry, suitable for all who profess the religion of Christ.

No. 172.—A Time to dance. 28 pp. By the Rev. J. Ramsey Wilson.

A seasonable publication, in this age, when there are found, among the dancing daughters of the Church, more imitators of the daughter of Herodias, than of the sister of Moses—more who dance to gratify vanity, if not some worse passion, than to glorify God.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

Varieties.

First Books in America.—It is a remarkable fact, that in a year after the first printing press was established in Cambridge, Mass., or in 1640, an American book was issued from it, (being the first published in what are now the United States,) which was soon after reprinted in England, where it passed through no less than eighteen editions, the last being issued in 1754; thus maintaining a hold on English popularity for one hundred and fourteen years! This was the "Bay Psalm Book." It passed through twenty-two editions in Scotland, where it was extensively known, the last bearing date 1759; and as it was reprinted without the compiler enjoying pecuniary benefit from its sale, we have irrefutable proof that England pirated the first American book, being in reality the original aggressor in this line. This first American work enjoyed a more lasting reputation and had a wider circulation than any volume since of American origin, having passed, in all, through seventy editions—a very remarkable number for the age in which it flourished. Success attended the colonial press; and in 1663, the first Bible printed in America was published at Cambridge. It was unlawful to print an English version of the Scriptures—that right being a monopoly enjoyed by privilege and patent in England. The one printed in Massachusetts, was Eliot's famous Indian Bible; and although fifteen hundred copies were struck off, they are now quite rare, and "sealed books," as the tongue in which they are written is literally a "dead language;" the tribe and all who had a knowledge of the dialect, being long extinct. Eliot's work is unique; being at once a monument to his piety, perseverance and learning. Its literary successor was Newman's Concordance of the Scriptures. This was compiled by the light of pine-knots, in a log cabin, in one of the frontier settlements of Massachusetts. It was the first of its kind, and for more than a century was admitted to be the most perfect, holding its place in public esteem until superseded by Cruden's, which it suggested.

Oahu College.—Oahu College has been founded at the Sandwich Islands. It is located about two miles from the city of Honolulu, and went into operation last fall. The President of the College is Edward G. Beckwith, who has been for two years past Principal of the Royal School. Mr. B. is a native of Great Barrington, Massachusetts, and graduated at William's College in 1849. The American Board has already expended from $20,000 to $30,000 in the erection of buildings, and at present is responsible for the salaries of both President and Professor.

In all the English Government Schools in India, there is not a single female; in the Missionary schools, in 1854, there were 14,000. The little that has been done to place education within the reach of the poor in this country, has chiefly been the work of the missionaries.

A thousand testaments were put in circulation at Ningpo, China, in a single day, at the literary examination recently occurring in that city. There were not less than 6,000 or 8,000 literary men present from all parts of the country.

Religious Newspapers.—The number and circulation of English religious papers bear no comparison with those of the United States. The Church of England has two papers: the Record, published twice a week, with a circulation of 3,379 each number; and the Ecclesiastical Gazette, weekly, with a circulation of 2,750. The Baptists have no paper, but they patronize the papers of the Independent denomination. These are—the Patriot, issued twice a week, with 1,268 subscribers; the British Banner, with a weekly circulation of 3,888; and the Nonconformist, with a weekly circulation of 3,211. The Wesleyan Conference has only one paper, the Watchman, with a subscription list of between 3,000 and 4,000. The Wesleyan Times, the organ of the agitators, is rapidly declining, its circulation having diminished one-half since the year 1851.

REPORT ON SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE.

At the recent meeting of the General Assembly at Nashville, Tenn., the following report was presented and read by the Rev. J. H. Thornwell, D. D., chairman of the Standing Committee on Systematic Benevolence. It deserves a careful perusal from everybody.

This being the first time that a Committee on Systematic Benevolence has entered as an element into the organization of the Assembly, there seems to be a propriety in prefacing its Report with a brief statement of the principle which lies at the basis of the whole scheme.

It is not to be presumed that God gives people a soul niggardly from meanness, or parsimonious from covetousness; and yet their contributions to the treasury of the Lord are amazingly disproportioned to their blessings and resources. This can only be resolved into ignorance of duty, or a failure to apprehend the real relation of liberality in almsgiving to their Christian profession. As "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," so whatever does not appeal to their faith cannot permanently interest their hearts. It cannot be denied that our Churches have been too much accustomed to look upon giving as purely a matter of Christian liberty, a thing which might or might not be done, according to the impulses which happen to prevail at the moment, without in either case involving the integrity of Christian character; what has been given, has been regarded as a bounty, and those who solicit it represented as beggars. This has been a feeling implicitly recognized where it has not been explicitly announced.

Appeals in behalf of the dearest interests of Christ's kingdom have been in many cases coldly received, in others formally repulsed, on the plea of repugnance to so much begging.

It was not that the people were penurious or mean, but that they did not understand the nature of the case; and the way to remove the difficulty is not by denunciation or invective, but by familiar exposition of the scriptural principle upon which these appeals are made. The law of the Lord, when clearly apprehended, can never fail to tell upon the hearts and consciences of the children of God. That law in relation to the question before us, is, that liberality is a grace of the Spirit, alms-giving an office of Christian worship, and collections for the poor and the spread of the Gospel an ordinance of God.

Giving, in the Scripture, is put upon substantially the same basis as prayer, the one is the sacrifice of the lips, and the other of the substance; and the acceptance of our gifts is a greater proof of the Divine condescension, than the acceptance of our petitions. God needs none of our offerings; "the cattle upon a thousand hills are his, and if he were hungry he would not tell us." But though needing nothing at our hands, he has condescended, for the purpose of uniting our hearts to him in profounder sympathy, to assume a position in which he appeals to us as really and tenderly as if he needed all things. Though our alms and our righteousness extend not directly to him, yet the Saviour is comforted and refreshed with the humblest ministrations to his saints upon the earth; it is he who receives the cup of cold water administered to his disciples. The believer, accordingly, who enters into the spirit of the Christian doctrine, must feel it almost hardly less a grievance to be debarred from the throne of grace, than to be prevented from casting his mite into the treasury of the Lord, and would as soon think of turning Christ from his doors, or leaving him unvisited in sickness and in prison, as think of slighting the appeals of Christ's earthly kingdom to his contributions and his sympathies. It is Christ whom we honour in serving the interests of his kingdom, or rather it is Christ who honours us, in thus permitting us to honour him, and as all Christian duties are at the same time privileges, and every precept stands upon a promise, so the child of God habitually experiences that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." He is the beggar who solicits the favour of having his gift accepted, and he feels it to be a distinction that he can glorify God with the fruits of his substance, having given himself to the Lord. All that he possesses is equally devoted, and what he uses for himself is rather by permission than by right of property. It is this principle which makes alms-giving a species of thanksgiving, and gifts a part of our spiritual worship. This principle underlies the whole subject of Systematic Benevolence.

The recognition of this principle, in its fulness and energy, is all that is wanted to infuse new life into the Church, and to make our offerings commensurate with our resources.

To keep this principle steadily before the Church is one important end of the appointment of this committee.

Alms-giving being at once a duty and a privilege, an ordinance of God and a means of grace, it is manifestly incumbent upon the Courts of the Church to impart this, as well as every other blessing of the Gospel, to the Christian people. Any believer has a right to complain that his soul is neglected, and the fulness of his Christian inheritance impaired, if he has not the opportunity of presenting his gifts as well as of hearing the word. The General Assembly accordingly has done no more than it was bound to do, in enjoining upon the Presbyteries "to adopt some practicable method by which an opportunity shall be afforded, and an invitation given to all the members of their congregations to contribute regularly to the objects of Christian benevolence, recognized by the Assembly in the organization of the Boards of the Church, and to such other institutions as to them may seem right.

But it is not enough that the Assembly should command in the name of Christ, it must also see that its injunctions are obeyed, and hence it has required an Annual Report from every Presbytery in its bounds, of the diligence of Ministers and Church Sessions in complying with its requisitions.

Your Committee has been specially appointed to receive and examine these reports. We are sorry to say that very few of our Presbyteries (only twenty-six of them) have made any reports at all; but these give a gratifying proof that the blessing of God is not wanting on their efforts to comply with his commands.

Your Committee cannot forbear to take a particular notice of the Presbytery of Baltimore, which has co-operated most heartily with the ends and aims of the Assembly, by sending a pastoral letter to its churches, in which the doctrine of Scripture is ably and affectionately enforced. That letter deserves the commendation of the Assembly, and a much wider circulation, and gives a favourable omen of the prospects of religion in that city. The committee, however, cannot forbear to add, that an important feature in any and every place should be the training of the young in habits of liberality. Let us not overlook the lambs of the flock.

The doctrine of Systematic Benevolence, however, must be more fully understood before a general attention to the duty can be effected.

Your committee do not think it wise, in the meagre state of the reports from the Presbyteries, to suggest the details of any plan. This matter had better be left to Presbyteries, Sessions and ministers. We unanimously recommend that the Assembly re-affirm the resolutions of last year upon the subject, and that they be printed as a part of this Report.

1. Resolved, That this Assembly hereby enjoins upon the pastors of our churches to give greater prominence in the ministration of the word, to the doctrine of the Scripture as set forth and interpreted in our standards, (more particularly chap. 26, sec. 2, of the Confession; in quest. 121 of the Larger Catechism; in chap 7, of the Form of Government; and in chap. 6, sec. 5, of the Directory for Worship) namely, that "saints are, by profession, bound to maintain an holy fellowship and communion, in relieving each other in outward things according to their several abilities and necessities, which communion, as God offereth opportunities, is to be extended unto all those, who in every place call upon the name of the Lord Jesus," "giving and lending freely, according to their abilities, and in conformity to this doctrine, recognizing as one of the ordinances, established by Christ," in connection with the sermon, prayer and praise, a "collection raised for the poor and other purposes of the Church."

2. Resolved, The Presbyteries which have not anticipated the provisions of this action of the Assembly, are most earnestly and affectionately enjoined, (1) at their meeting following the rising of this Assembly, to take order that the ministers and church sessions in their bounds, shall be directed to adopt some practical method, by which an opportunity shall be afforded, and an invitation given to all the members of their congregations, to contribute regularly to the objects of Christian benevolence, recognized by the Assembly, in the organization of the Boards of the Church, and to such other institutions as, to them, may seem right.

And (2) at every spring meeting to institute a proper inquiry into the diligence of ministers and church sessions in executing the provisions of such method.

3. Resolved, The Presbyteries are further enjoined to enter on record and report to the next General Assembly, their action on the first part of the foregoing resolution, and also to record at their next and all subsequent spring meetings, the result of the inquiry prescribed, and report the same to the General Assembly, with the usual annual Presbyterial reports, stating the delinquencies and diligence of pastors and church sessions.

4. Resolved, There shall be appointed a Standing Committee on Systematic Benevolence, by the Assembly, which shall be charged with the reception and examination of such reports, and the presentation to the Assembly of their aggregate results.

5. Resolved, The Boards of the Church are invited to aid in the proper execution of the foregoing arrangements of the churches, by such official communications with the Presbyteries as may seem proper.

6. Resolved, The Professors of our Theological Seminaries are respectfully requested to give proper attention to the right training of the future pastors of the Church in view of the duties herein contemplated.

The Committee also presented as part of their report, and recommend for the consideration of the church sessions and pastors, one or other, of such plans,

FOR STATED AND REGULAR CONTRIBUTIONS

as the following.

1. A committee may be appointed by the sessions for each object of benevolence, and a particular month assigned, in which they are to do their work, by calling upon the people, or otherwise obtaining their contributions.

2. All the objects to be aided may be presented in separate columns, and each contributor called upon to say what he will give quarterly or annually.

3. Weekly or monthly collections may be taken up, and thrown into a benevolent fund, which the session may divide among the several objects approved by them in such proportion as they think proper.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Presented to the General Assembly in Nashville, May, 1855.

In presenting to the General Assembly their fifty-third Annual Report, the Board of Missions desire, first of all, to express their gratitude to Almighty God for the degree of success with which it has pleased him to crown their efforts in the prosecution of the great work assigned them. The past year has been one of great pecuniary pressure and commercial embarrassment throughout our country; and yet with the balance providentially in hand at the date of our last report, and the liberal contributions of many of the friends of the cause, we have, by the blessing of God, been enabled to get through the year without difficulty.

The salaries of our missionaries have not been reduced, but augmented; and all of them have been promptly and fully paid, so far as they have reported. The appointments recommended by the Presbyteries have, with very few exceptions, been promptly made, and the amount recommended towards their support, appropriated by the Board. The number of missionaries has been slightly increased—our former missionary ground maintained, and various new fields explored and occupied. The receipts have, in the aggregate, been less, in consequence of the monetary difficulties already alluded to; but in the field under the care of the Eastern Executive Committee, the contributions have been slightly augmented. From the reports of our missionaries, it affords us the greatest pleasure to say, that we have reason to believe that God has graciously visited many of their churches with the special outpouring of his Spirit, and that the labours of nearly all of them have not been without tokens of the Divine favour, in the edification of God's children and the conversion and salvation of souls.

OPERATIONS OF THE YEAR.

Of Missions.—Statistical Details.

The number of missionaries in commission, April 1, 1854, was 340, to which have been added, to April 1, 1855, 185, making the whole number 525, being more by 2 than in the year previous.

The number of churches and missionary stations, wholly or in part supplied, (so far as reported,) by our missionaries, is 819.

The number of newly organized churches, is 36.

The number of admissions on examination is 1,778, and on certificate 1,568, making a total of admissions of 3,346.

The number in communion with churches connected with the Board is 20,412.

The number of Sabbath-schools is 305; of teachers, 2,350; and of scholars, 14,548. (In this Report the Board have omitted all Union Schools, and have included only those which are Presbyterian or denominational.)

The number of baptisms is 2,125.

And the number of houses of worship erected or finished is 51.

Of the 525 missionaries who have been in commission during the year, 179 have sent in no special report for the Assembly, more than one-third of the whole number; consequently we must increase all the returns one-third, to make them correct.

Appropriations.

The appropriations made to our missionaries, from April 1, 1854, to April 1, 1855, have been, at the office in Philadelphia, $48,735.42, and at the office in Louisville, $25,759.00; making a total of $74,494.42.

The appropriations made from April 1, 1853, to April 1, 1854, were, at the office in Philadelphia, $42,547.50, and at the office in Louisville, $32,874.42; making a total of $75,421.92.

From this statement it appears that the appropriations made at the office in Philadelphia exceeded those made the year before, $6,187.92, and at the office in Louisville they were less by $7,115.42; thus making the total appropriations this year less than the year preceding, by $927.50.

For the purpose of further comparison we may state, that the appropriations made from April 1, 1852, to April 1, 1853, were, at the office in Philadelphia, $35,273.58, and at the office in Louisville, $21,637.50; making a total of $56,911.08.

From this statement it appears that the appropriations made at the office in Philadelphia exceeded those made two years before $13,461.84, and at the office in Louisville $4,121.50; thus making the total excess of appropriations this year above those made from April 1, 1852, to April 1, 1853, $17,583.34.

Receipts.

The total amount of receipts from all sources, from April 1, 1854, to April 1, 1855, is $71,834.47, to which add balances on hand in the different Treasuries, April 1, 1854, $22,654.58; making the available resources of the Board during the year, $94,489.05.

The amount paid out at the different Treasuries for the same time, is $78,944.76, leaving an available balance in all the Treasuries on the 1st of April, 1855, of $15,544.29. The amount due the missionaries at the same date was $10,004.59, leaving an unexpended balance of $5,539.70.

The aggregate receipts have fallen off, as compared with the preceding year, $3,373.33. The falling off has been in individual or special donations and legacies $2,827.03, and in the contributions of the churches $546.30; owing no doubt to the pecuniary pressure and commercial embarrassment throughout our country during the past year. While the receipts at the office in Philadelphia, including the Presbyterial Treasuries, were larger by $1,958.76, the receipts at the office in Louisville show a falling off of $5,332.09. The wants of the Western Executive Committee, were, however, fully met. Drafts by that Committee upon the Treasury at Philadelphia, during the year, to the amount of $13,091.00, (which was more by $7,600.60 than the year preceding,) were promptly paid, and repeated instructions forwarded by the Corresponding Secretary of the Board to that Committee, not to reduce their appropriations to the missionaries, nor to defer the payment of their salaries, but to draw promptly and freely upon the Treasury at Philadelphia, whenever their funds were insufficient to meet their liabilities.

The balance in the Treasury on the 1st of April, 1855, is less by $7,110.29, than the amount which was reported in hand on the 1st of April, 1854. This in connection with the fact that at the close of the fiscal year, the amount due the missionaries was $10,004.59, shows the indispensable necessity of enlarged contributions by the friends of the cause, and the imperative duty of increased caution on the part of Presbyteries in recommending, and the Board in granting future appropriations. Indeed it is obvious that, unless the resources of the Board are augmented, they will not be able to continue much beyond this year, their present scale of appropriations without involving themselves in debt; and as the appointments are generally made for twelve months, if the current receipts are not increased as the year advances, retrenchment must commence before the termination of the year, if a debt is to be avoided during the year succeeding.

Re-enforcements and Enlargement of the Church.

During the year, the Board have established new missions in several of the larger cities in the East and West, and in various smaller towns and rural districts. They have also, to the extent of their ability, re-enforced our missionaries in the newer States and Territories. Three additional missionaries have been sent to Texas, and one to California. Arrangements have been made to send two missionaries to Kansas, and one to Nebraska. One has been commissioned to Minnesota; and arrangements are in progress to send three or four additional missionaries to California. The Board would also state that, during the year, thirty-six of our missionaries have been commissioned and employed as itinerants. The greater part of our missionaries perform more or less of such service; but the number above mentioned are either wholly, or almost entirely employed as itinerants.

State of our Missions.

From the reports of our missionaries, we have reason to believe that their labours have been generally prospered of God. Many of them report unusual progress; and not a few of them tell us of the special visitations of the Holy Spirit, by which the graces of God's people have been revived, and many souls converted. Some of the revivals reported to us during the past year, have been powerful and extensive, and their fruits exceedingly precious.

Clothing.

Clothing valued at $9,137.40 has been received during the year, and distributed among the missionaries who needed it. Of this amount, $6,150.18 were received at the office in Philadelphia; $2,107.34 at the office in Louisville; and $879.88 at the Depot in Pittsburgh. From the letters of the missionaries acknowledging the receipt of the clothing sent, we have no doubt that it has been very gratefully received, and that it has added very much to their health and comfort. Our friends, however, are cautioned against permitting their donations of clothing (which are never deducted from the salaries of the missionaries) to interfere with their cash contributions to the Board.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

The balance of the Church Extension Fund, on the 1st of April, 1854, was $6,332.17.

The receipts from April 1, 1854, to April 1, 1855, were, from individuals, $1,669.24, and from churches, $3,577.24; making the receipts $5,246.48; which, added to the amount in hand on April 1, 1854, make a total of $11,578.65. The appropriations paid from April 1, 1854, to April 1, 1855, amount to $7,405.55, which leaves a balance in the Treasury, April 1, 1855, of $4,173.10. There are, however, unpaid appropriations, amounting to $5,840.00, which would more than consume this balance, and leave the Church Extension Fund in debt, $1,666.90.

Appropriations have been made, during the year, to forty-six churches, scattered over twenty-four Synods, and within the bounds of thirty-seven Presbyteries.

Forty-nine churches have been finished during the year, and have received their respective appropriations.

For the purpose of comparison, we state, that the receipts for Church Extension from the 1st of April, 1853, to the 1st of April, 1854, were as follows:—From individuals, $3,211.93, and from churches, $3,086.16; making a total of $6,298.09. From this it appears that the receipts this year were $1,051.61 less than the year preceding. The number of churches which were finished last year, and which received their appropriations, was thirty-five; the number this year, was forty-nine, being fourteen more than the year previous.

As it may be desirable to know the gross amount that has been received from the commencement of the Church Extension Fund, we add the following statement. Cash received for Church Extension, from July 20, 1844, to April 1, 1855—from individuals, $47,711.27, and from churches, $20,832.79; making a total of $68,544.06. The whole number of churches which have received appropriations, during this period, is 382, and these are scattered over every section of our Church.

IMPORTANCE OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Objects of the Board.

The objects of the Board of Missions are two-fold;

1. To supply vacant churches and assist weak and feeble congregations in the support of pastors.

2. To extend the boundaries of the Church, by employing ministers to preach the gospel, organize new congregations, and form churches in the hitherto neglected and waste places of our country.

Hundreds of our churches are so weak and feeble, that it would be impossible for them to maintain their pastors without aid from others. Besides these weak congregations, there were no less than six hundred and ninety-six churches, connected with our denomination, which were reported to the last General Assembly as vacant; that is, without pastors or stated supplies. And in addition to both these classes of weak and vacant churches, there are thousands of places scattered throughout our widely extended country, which are destitute of evangelical ministers, and which must be supplied, if supplied at all, by those who already enjoy and appreciate the blessings of the gospel. How immensely important it is, that these spiritual destitutions should be adequately and speedily supplied.

DEMAND FOR MISSIONARIES.

The Board continues to receive the most earnest and affecting appeals for missionary aid. From the North and the South, from the East and the West, the Macedonia cry is raised, "Come over and help us!" Ah! how sadly do they describe their spiritual wants, how urgently and imploringly do they entreat us to supply them with the priceless blessing of an evangelical, intelligent, and faithful ministry!

PROGRESS MADE BY OUR CHURCH IN THE MISSIONARY WORK.

In 1828, the year of the re-organization of the Board, there were but thirty-one missionaries, and an income of $2,400.00 only.

In 1840, two years after the division of the Church, and when the parts were fairly separated, there were 256 missionaries, and an income of $40,734.00.

In 1855, the number of missionaries employed was 525, and the income $71,666.03.

Since the re-organization of the Board, we have increased 12 Synods, 56 Presbyteries, 918 ministers, 1,008 churches, and 79,096 members. Since 1840, two years after the division of the Church, we have increased 11 Synods, 51 Presbyteries, 588 ministers, 1,303 churches, and 98,821 members.

The number of Evangelical Ministers in this land is more than keeping pace with the population of this country. Its ministers in twenty-two years have increased 175 per cent. while its population has increased but 88 per cent. Our own branch of the Church has no reason to be discouraged. In the period of the most rapid growth of our population, the number of our ministers and licentiates has gained 12 per cent. on the population!

And yet, so rapidly is our branch of the Church extending, that it has been found impracticable to supply the demand for Presbyterian ministers.

SALARIES OF MISSIONARIES.

Notwithstanding the great falling off in the current receipts of the Board in the West, and the fact that the current receipts in the East but little more than held their own, the Board, during the past year, not only continued the advanced average appropriations to the missionaries of the year preceding, but actually increased them $10.37.

Within the last two years the Board has increased the average appropriations to the missionaries $30.00.

If the congregations to which they minister had advanced proportionately, our missionaries would have been much more comfortably supported. But while the Board has increased their appropriations 23 per cent., their people have advanced only 13¾ per cent.

NEED OF FUNDS.

In view of the present state of our Treasury and the greatly increased demands which will be made upon the Board during this year, will not the churches more generally and liberally contribute to this vitally important cause?

It now rests with our people to say, whether the Board of Missions shall be able to sustain the missions which they now have, and go forward in establishing others where they are so urgently needed, or whether they shall be compelled to refuse new appointments, and actually reduce the number and compensation of the missionaries now employed. Without an increase of funds, this latter alternative is unavoidable!

The Board have still to regret that more than one-half of our churches contribute nothing to this cause! Will not every church, during this year, contribute something?

PRESBYTERIES AND CHURCHES RECEIVING AID.

In the present state of the Treasury and the large liabilities which the Board have assumed, it is indispensable that more than ordinary care should be taken that no unnecessary appropriation be recommended by the Presbyteries, and no one of greater amount than is absolutely needed.

No church should apply for aid from the Missionary Fund who could do without it, nor should any apply for more than is absolutely requisite. Every church should do as much as they can for the support of the gospel among themselves, and should endeavour to become, as fast and as fully as practicable, a self-sustaining and contributing church.

DUTIES OF MISSIONARIES.

Every missionary should send in an Annual Statistical Report. Last year, no less than 179 neglected this important duty—more than one-third of the whole number who were in commission.

The Board would also call the attention of the missionaries under the care of the Western Executive Committee to the rule which requires them to send quarterly reports to the office in Philadelphia, as well as duplicates to the office in Louisville.

It is the duty of all our missionaries to afford their people an opportunity to contribute to the Missionary Fund of the Church, and to use their best endeavours to induce them to give according to their ability.

CHANGE OF THE FISCAL YEAR.

The Board have found it necessary to resolve that, hereafter, their fiscal year shall terminate at the same time that their missionary year now ends. Heretofore, while the missionary reports were made up to the 1st of March, the cash accounts were not closed until the 1st of April. Hereafter, the fiscal year will terminate on the 1st of March; so that the missionary reports and the pecuniary accounts will be made up to the same date.

CONCLUSION.

The Report concludes with an earnest appeal to Christians to pray more for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in order that the resources and usefulness of the Board may be increased.

MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The monthly meeting of the Board was held at the Mission Rooms, on Monday, the 11th of June. The Rev. J. J. Janeway, D. D., President, in the chair.

The officers of the Board for the present year were unanimously re-elected.

The work of Church Extension having been transferred by the General Assembly from the Board of Missions to a Committee of Church Extension located at St. Louis, which work had been mainly under the superintendence of the Assistant Secretary of the Board, the title of the Rev. R. Happersett was changed from Assistant to that of Associate Secretary. The Executive Committee were directed to define the duties of the Associate Secretary, which according to the expressed opinions of the Board, will be to visit the Synods, Presbyteries, and Churches throughout our bounds, for the purpose of collecting funds and promoting the general interests of the cause.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Dr. Backus, from the Committee on Domestic Missions, reported the following resolutions on the report of the Board:

"Resolved, That the General Assembly has reason to express profound gratitude to Almighty God, for the success with which he has been graciously pleased to crown the efforts of our church in the prosecution of this most important and interesting work. Notwithstanding the past year has been one of uncommon commercial embarrassment, and extensive failure of the crops throughout the country, which has affected severely all benevolent operations, yet the receipts have been but very slightly diminished; and the Board has been able to increase the number, and enlarge the salaries of its missionaries; and the Great Head of the Church, while granting no little encouragement to nearly all our missions, has visited many of the churches under the care of the Board with special outpourings of the Holy Ghost.

"Resolved, That this Assembly would express its approbation of the faithful, judicious, and efficient execution, on the part of the Board and its officers, of the important trusts committed to them; and would call the attention of the Presbyteries and Churches to the earnest appeals made in the report in favour of a more diligent and liberal co-operation in this great work. No cause has a stronger claim upon the Christians of this land, with its immense territory and rapidly increasing population, than that of Domestic Missions. The Assembly is pained, therefore, to learn that 1546, more than one-half, of our churches, still withhold their contributions from this important work.

"Resolved, That this Assembly approves of the conduct of the Board in increasing its appropriations to its missionaries; and while it earnestly desires that the present scale should be continued and even increased, yet it cannot recommend such an anticipation of funds as would involve any large debt at the close of the year; but would urge the Board and Presbyteries to renewed efforts to bring out the liberality of the churches, that while graduating their receipts they may still further increase them; that thus our missionaries may be relieved of many of those privations they have endured, and their efficiency and usefulness be greatly increased.

"The Assembly moreover would embrace this opportunity to urge upon all our churches to cherish a deeper sense of their responsibility in this matter, and systematically to contribute of their substance to meet the increasing demands of our country and the world."

On motion of Dr. Plumer the following resolution was adopted, viz.

"Resolved, That this Assembly rejoices in the evidences submitted to it, of the abundant labours and faithfulness of the Secretaries and other Executive officers of our several Boards; and feels it a privilege to give this public expression of its confidence in their wisdom and energy."

CHURCH EXTENSION.

The General Assembly has appointed a Committee of Church Extension, composed of 12 ministers and 12 ruling elders, one-third of whom are to be elected annually, for the purpose of conducting the important work of Church Extension. The Committee is located at the city of St. Louis, Mo., and has the power of appointing a Secretary and Treasurer.

We sincerely and greatly rejoice at this action of the Assembly. The work of Church Extension is of vast importance to the interests of our Church. While connected with the Board of Missions, it was regarded by the churches as merely incidental, and could not be prosecuted with success. Now that it is entrusted to a separate committee, and will be brought before the churches more specifically and prominently, we trust that it will command the general attention and liberal co-operation which it so truly and urgently demands. The Committee at St. Louis has our hearty approval and shall have our most earnest prayers for its success.

A MISSIONARY'S FAREWELL.

The following interesting letter from one of our esteemed missionaries, in taking leave of the Board, will be read with pleasure by our readers, as expressive of the views and feelings of our missionaries towards the Board and those who have generously aided them in their laborious and self-denying work. We thank our good brother for such an expression of his kind feelings and pious purposes, and assure him that he has our best wishes and most fervent prayers for his continued usefulness.

June 4th, 1855.

Rev. and Dear Sir—A report is now due you for my labours in the Church of ———, for the last three months. The ordinary pastoral labours have been performed up to the 1st of June. My congregations for the last quarter have been larger than usual. We administered the sacraments, but no addition to the communion of the church. We are interested in two flourishing Union Sabbath-schools. Situated as we are, in reference to a house for worship, we must engage in the Union School or none. I have never been able to present the prospects of this organization as flattering. Good has been done, and we still hope that this little church is a light that will not be permitted to go out. My connection with that and the ——— church ceased on the 1st of June, having accepted a call to the First Church in ———.

I now present to the Board my last quarterly report for that field of labour. This is the forty-first which I have made, and ten annual reports. I have been enabled to comply with the requirements of the Board, in this particular at least. Not having failed in one instance since first commissioned ten years and two months ago. My relations with the Board have been of the most pleasant character. It has my entire confidence and shall continue to have my hearty co-operation, and my contributions. For its support and prosperity I shall labour in my new field.

Fathers and brethren, I now take my leave of you, as one of the missionaries under commission by you, and as one of the recipients of the funds under your control. I have not only been aided by you in your continued prompt payment of the amount due, but I confidently believe I have been the recipient of spiritual blessing, sent down in answer to your prayers. None but one who has for a time sustained the relation to the Board which I have done for more than ten years, can fully appreciate my feelings in taking my leave of you. I love the Board, but permit me to say, that with a stronger love I love the cause it has in its hands, the cause of our common Master. And brethren, before I may have passed out of your minds, and my name has been forgotten, let at least one earnest, fervent, special prayer ascend from your hearts that God's blessing may attend me in my new field of labour. I enter a weak church, in a town of about 5000 inhabitants, a church for twenty-three years under the pastoral care of old Dr. ———. For a long time it has been waning. For a year this people have been as sheep without a shepherd, and they are consequently much scattered. Much hard labour has here to be performed, but in my Master's name, and in his strength, I desire to undertake the work. With his blessing the church will rise. Present indications are encouraging. Yesterday, my first Sabbath, was an interesting day.

But finally, brethren, farewell; and may the King and Head of Zion smile upon you and prosper your labours. "And may the beauty of the Lord our God be upon you, and may he establish the work of your hands upon you."

Yours in the gospel of Jesus Christ, W. M. R.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

ABSTRACT.

Dr. Van Rensselaer, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Education, presented to the Assembly the thirty-sixth Annual Report of the Board, of which the following is an abstract:

Part I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.—The care of the Presbyterian Church, in the perpetuation of an Evangelical Ministry, is the general topic considered in the first part of the report. The care of the Church is exhibited: I. In her views of a call to the Gospel Ministry. The call, according to our standards, must come from God; the candidate must have satisfactory evidences of it in his own consciousness and gracious experience; and it must be subject to the examination and approval of the Church.

II. The Church's care is seen in her zeal for the qualifications of her ministers for the sacred office. Intellect, as well as piety, is needful; and hence the Church has always insisted upon the education of her Ministry, and has established a number of Seminaries for that purpose.

III. The Church provides for the temporal comfort and support of her candidates. From time immemorial, provision was made for her indigent sons. The Board of Education was organized in 1819, to give greater efficiency to these measures. Our Theological Seminaries give their instructions gratuitously; and facilities are offered to all who give evidence that they are called to the office. In assisting her indigent sons, the Church does it on the ground of duty to God and to His cause, and endeavours to be discriminating in the amount offered, and to administer the system on principles of parental affection.

IV. The Church's care is further seen in the supervision and oversight of her candidates during the preparatory course. The Presbyteries are the source of ecclesiastical authority, and supervise the candidates from beginning to end. Pastors, professors and teachers, and the Board of Education, co-operate in the work with the Presbyteries.

V. The Church uses scriptural means to increase the number of her candidates. Chief among the means is prayer to the Lord of the harvest. Also, parental consecration and instruction of the young; the establishment of Christian Institutions of learning, encouraging all classes of pious youth to examine their personal duty, &c.

VI. The Church exhibits her care in the licensure and ordination of her candidates, which occur after intervals of examination and testing their fitness for the work.

Candidates.—The number of new candidates is 125, which is much the largest number of any year since the division of the Church. The number last year was 104, and in late years it has sunk down even to 60. Thanks be to God for his mercy! The total number of candidates on the roll this year is 364, against 342 of the previous year.

Officers and Agents.—Dr. James Wood has been chosen an Associate Secretary. Dr. McCluskey, and Rev. Thomas Castleton have acted as agents in different parts of the field, but they have recently entered upon other arrangements.

State of the Treasury.—The total income of the year, in all departments including balances, has been $55,366 88, and the expenditure $52,131 97. The Board will need an increase in its receipts next year, in order to continue the scale of increased appropriations to candidates, and to do justice to the work committed to their hands.

Part II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES AND COLLEGES.

Parochial or Primary Schools.—Some new schools have been established during the year, several of which are of great interest and importance. But the aggregate number, judging from imperfect statistical returns, has not increased. The munificent sum of $5,000, has been, for the third year, placed at the disposal of the Board, by one of the friends of the cause.

Presbyterial Academies.—The number of these institutions is fifty-two. They are found in all sections of the church, and are doing a great work in the cause of literature and learning. Some of them have been favoured with revivals of religion during the year; and one of them reports, since its organization, the conversion of about one hundred of its youth, of whom ten or twelve are looking forward to the ministry.

Colleges.—The report gives a notice of each college under Synodical supervision. The total number of our ecclesiastical colleges, in operation, or with charters expecting to commence operations, is twenty. Several of these, however, are yet in their infancy, and most of them are struggling to effect an endowment. All such institutions have their trials and troubles; but the foundations must be laid in season, and the result be left with God.

The care of the Presbyterian Church for her Children and Youth.—This forms the conclusion of the Report.

I. The Presbyterian Church shows her tender care for her children by consecrating them to God in baptism. Some of the advantages of this divine ordinance are pointed out and insisted upon.

II. The Church exercises her care in the domestic religious training of her children. By divine authority this work belongs to parents. The family comes down with the memories and hopes of paradise. It is a religious institution, and God makes use of it to carry out the covenant made with Abraham. Among the things needed to give more efficiency to the household, is: 1st. Scriptural instruction by parents themselves. 2d. Training as well as teaching. 3d. Godly example. 4th. Faith in God and his covenant promise.

III. The Church displays her care over her youth in her own efforts for their conversion by Catechetical and Bible classes, by Sabbath-schools, by preaching and by pastoral intercourse. Each of these agencies, grouped together as ecclesiastical instrumentalities, is briefly commented upon in the Annual Report.

IV. A fourth agency, more exterior to direct ecclesiastical action, but lawfully within its compass, is the establishment of Christian institutions for the public education of the young.

Public education is a powerful agency in moulding character; it is auxiliary to home training; and it is in its nature adapted to the inculcation of religion. The question whether the Church may assist in providing Christian institutions to meet the wants of her household is a very simple one. The question is not whether the Church has an exclusive divine right to take part in public education, nor whether she is bound, under all circumstances, to exercise that authority; but simply whether she may lawfully assist in providing institutions to carry forward the religious education of her youth, when she deems that such institutions are required. Every church in christendom, and the Presbyterian Church in all periods of her history and all places of her extension, has claimed this right. Every Synod in our own Church has either acted on this principle, or admitted its truth. The General Assembly has repeatedly sanctioned it, and with great unanimity. In so doing, our Church cordially hails, as co-partners in the same work, all Christian institutions under whatever supervision they may be, private or public. She yields to others their rights, and maintains her own.

V. The Church provides a sound Christian literature for the edification of the young.

VI. The Presbyterian Church exhibits her concern for her children and youth in a parental inspection of their conduct, in appropriate acts of discipline, and in inviting them to partake of the Lord's Supper when they have sufficient knowledge to discern his body. Our standards fully recognize baptized children as members of the visible Church. The duty of "inspection" requires the Church to have an oversight over her baptized children, expressed in acts of interest for their welfare and in inquiries relating to it. Appropriate discipline is implied in the idea of church membership. The report, without expressing any opinion on doubtful points, suggests that the character of the discipline, and the general circumstances of its administration, might deserve the examination of our higher judicatories, and especially of the General Assembly.

The Church enjoins the duty of making a public profession of religion upon infant church members when they have reached the years of discretion, and can discern the Lord's body. 1. The Presbyterian organization assumes that children are already members of the visible Church. 2. Our standards assume that many baptized children will ordinarily be led, by the grace of God, to profess their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. 3. They further assume that many will apply for the Lord's supper, early in life. 4. Our Church prescribes true piety as the qualification of admission to the Lord's Supper. 5. Our Church uses means to bring into the full communion of the church her baptized members, who possess the requisite spiritual qualifications.

The report concludes with the sentiment that the public measures of education are only subordinate to the other great agencies of home and church in saving our youth. The aim of all is the fulfilment of the covenant made by God with Abraham—the salvation of the soul.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The action of the General Assembly on the Report of the Board of Education, and in approval and confirmation of its general policy, was without opposition. We have never known an Assembly which appeared so unanimous on the subject. Considerable opposition had been anticipated by some of the friends of denominational education, but the Report seemed to give general satisfaction, if "actions speak louder than words." The resolutions presented to the Assembly through Dr. WINES, chairman of the Education Committee, were read twice, and then a third time one by one, and the vote taken on each separately. A loud and unanimous aye followed each resolution.

Dr. Krebs moved that the resolutions be taken up and adopted seriatim, which motion prevailed, and the resolutions, seven in number, were adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Assembly has heard with emotions of fervent gratitude to God, of the prosperity which has attended the operations of the Board during the past year; that our joy in view of the increased number of candidates for the ministry, is proportioned to the sorrow felt in former times, at the smallness of the numbers reported as seeking this holy office, and that we offer solemn thanksgiving to the Head of the Church for these gracious tokens of his favour.

Resolved, That while all suitable scriptural efforts should be made to enlighted the young men of the Church on the nature and importance of the Christian ministry, and to direct their thoughts to that field of labour, yet our Presbyteries ought to use great care in requiring of their candidates such gifts of intellect, learning, piety, and aptness to teach, as give reasonable assurance of usefulness in the sacred calling.

Resolved, That as the knowledge of God is almost the only knowledge that men cannot do without, so religious instruction is almost the only kind of instruction that may not be excluded from our schools, it being the end of learning "to repair the ruins of the fall by teaching to know God aright, and out of that knowledge to love him and obey him;" that, therefore, the General Assembly reaffirms its approval, so often expressed in former years, of the policy of the Board in reference to the establishment of Christian schools, academies and colleges.

Resolved, That this General Assembly, in recommending the establishment of institutions under its own care, has never intended to depreciate truly Christian schools, academies or colleges, under private, corporate, or State management, but cordially acknowledges and welcomes them as co-partners in a great work, and invokes the blessing of God upon their instructions. And, although the public schools are far from being what they ought to be in respect to religious teaching, yet, instead of the withdrawal of Presbyterians from the support of the public system, the General Assembly recommends the putting forth earnest efforts, wherever practicable, to improve its condition, especially by keeping in the public schools the Bible, as the great text-book of human instruction.

Resolved, That the Presbyteries be reminded of the increased wants of the Board, and the necessity of increasing contributions to meet them, and that they be requested to adopt such measures for the accomplishment of the end in view, as to them may seem proper.

Resolved, That the General Assembly has a high appreciation of the importance of infant baptism, as an ordinance of God and means of grace, and enjoins it upon the pastors and elders of our churches to enlighten Christian parents on their duty and privilege and to use all proper means to induce them to dedicate their offspring to God in this holy sacrament. Further, the Assembly earnestly calls the attention of the lower judicatories, to the relation of baptized children to the church, and recommends to church sessions to maintain a Christian watchfulness over these lambs of the flock, and to use faithful and affectionate efforts to bring them to the communion of the church.

Resolved, That the Assembly has full confidence in the efficacy of prayer, and therefore, while it would exhort the members of all the churches under its care, to "pray without ceasing," that "the Lord of the harvest would send forth labourers into his harvest," it appoints the last Thursday of February, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to be observed as a day of special prayer, for the outpouring of the Spirit on our baptized children and youth, more particularly those who are under instruction in our various institutions of learning, and recommends that public services be held in all our churches on that day.

ANNUAL REPORT.

A PARAGRAPH STRUCK OUT.

In the Annual Report of the Board of Education, a paragraph, relating to the Free Church of Scotland, was regarded as giving an occasion of offence to some of our brethren over the waters. Such, of course, was not the design; and if the idea had been suggested, in reading the Report to the Board, before its presentation to the Assembly, the paragraph would have been immediately withdrawn.

The following is an account of what occurred in the Assembly, taken from "The Presbyterian" and other sources. We also append the obnoxious sentences.

Rev. Dr. PLUMER said that one of the resolutions calls for the printing of the Annual Report. It is known that there is a controversy in Scotland as to the plurality of Theological Seminaries. This report takes sides on that question. He hoped that part would be stricken out. "He that meddleth with his neighbour's business is as he that taketh a dog by the ears." Taking a dog by the ears is not agreeable, because, 1. A dog is not a very agreeable animal. 2. The ears are not very good to hold by; and 3. When you let go you may get bit. He did not wish this Assembly to take ground against such men as Drs. Candlish, Cunningham, and Buchanan of Glasgow. The second mentioned had been a good friend to us. It is a strife, at any rate, in a little territory, not so large as New Jersey. The state of things in the two countries is entirely different, and no argument can be drawn from the one to the other.

The Rev. Dr. JONES called for the reading of that part of the Report.

The Rev. Dr. VAN RENSSELAER said it was far from the intention of the Board to interfere with the Scotch controversy. Possibly the statements may have been too strong. After reading the paragraph alluded to, Dr. Van Rensselaer contended that the language was not on one side more than the other. The controversy, as he understood it, in the Free Church, about Theological Halls was not on the point of Church Extension, but on the bearings of a plurality of Halls on raising, or depressing, the standard of ministerial qualification. Both Drs. Candlish and Cunningham were in favour of Church Extension. They differed chiefly about the influence which an increase of Halls would have upon the prosperity of the Edinburgh Institution. He presumed that Dr. Cunningham would admit that an increase of Halls would increase the number of students, although Dr. C. would contend that the effect would be to lower their qualifications. On this latter point, the Report expressed no opinion. The paragraph was put in simply as an illustration of the idea that an increase of ministers was connected, under God, with an increase of the facilities afforded to pious youth for obtaining a ministerial education.

The Rev. Dr. PLUMER did not think it was a designed interference. Dr. Cunningham and his friends deny that the multiplying Theological Schools tends to advance Church Extension, and to draw such an inference is to take sides.

Dr. VAN RENSSELEAR said that the paragraph was of no consequenee to the report, and as it appeared liable to misinterpretation, he was in favour of striking it out, and hoped that no objection would be made to such a course.

The motion to strike out was then agreed to.

The sentences objected to by Dr. Plumer occur in a part of the Report which alludes to the increase in the number of literary and theological institutions, as an evidence of the Church's care for the increase of candidates for the ministry. In order to give a full view of the case, we insert the whole passage, placing the sentences stricken out, in brackets.

"The Church, by increasing the number of literary and theological institutions, has assisted in the increase of candidates. It is known to the Board that a number of youth have already availed themselves of recently founded academies and colleges to commence their course of studies for the ministry, who would not otherwise have looked forward to this profession. Every new academy and college is an instrumentality to bless the Church with a pious and learned ministry. The policy of establishing Theological Seminaries in different parts of the country accomplishes similar results. With six seminaries under the superintendence of able men, the Church will obtain more candidates, in the ordinary course of Providence, than with one, two, or five institutions. Dr. Buchanan, of Glasgow, remarked in a recent speech, that there were six or eight young men who would study for the ministry, if there were a Theological Hall in that city, who were prevented from going to Edinburgh, by circumstances beyond their control, and who would therefore be compelled to seek other professions. It has always been so. Geneva and Wittemburg brought multitudes into the ministry, by the grace and power of God, through the institutions where Calvin and Luther gave their instructions. In like manner, Princeton, and Alleghany, and Union, and Columbia, and New Albany, and Danville, will each be the means of increasing the number of Presbyterian ministers—not as human institutions, independent of the divine decrees, but as institutions ordained for that very purpose in the counsels of eternal wisdom.

[The question that has been agitating the Scotch Free Church has been, whether there shall be only one Theological Hall, or a plurality of Halls. In deciding in favour of a plurality of Theological Halls, the Free Church has virtually shut herself up to the policy of Church Extension, because a plurality of Halls involves a greater increase of candidates and ministers.] The policy of our own Church is well settled in favour of a plurality of Theological Seminaries; and among other advantages is the unquestionable one, in our position, of that of an increased ministry."

From the Puritan Recorder.

TO A SON IN COLLEGE.

Messrs. Editors—It is now more than three years since death put me in possession of relics that seem too sacred to be touched. Yet they have long demanded, and still demand—such is my own uncertain hold on life—to be carefully examined, and duly sepulchered. This is a tearful duty;—but I have commenced it. And the first letter I took up this morning, after laying open the packages, proved to be one about thirty-four years old. It is from a devout and godly minister, to his only son in Middlebury College.

As I read it, I felt that it ought not to be buried. It seemed to me that if it could be thrown into some of our Colleges that are in a state of revival, or into the hands of a parent who has an impenitent son in College, it might do good, now when it is old, as it did when it was young. You have it below:

———June 9, 1821.

Dear S——:—With great interest and pleasure I learn from your letter and otherwise, that a special work of the Spirit of God has now begun to appear in Middlebury, and a few in College are hopefully sealed by grace. I have been lately hoping, that the many prayers of several years past, for Middlebury College, were soon to be answered. If these hopes have been selfish (as I have much feared,) arising from the ardour of paternal affection and concern, they have yet been cheering. Has the angel of the covenant indeed commenced his solemn work of sealing for eternity in Middlebury College; and shall I feel more solicitude for my only son—the son of my covenant vows—than for an individual stranger, who may be, like him, an enemy of God, an idolater of self, a stranger to present happiness, and a candidate for future wo!—I think I must. He is my immediate charge; and his blood will, in an important sense, be required at my hands. I feel conscious of much unfaithfulness to his soul. I write with pungent grief. I am afraid his distinguished hardness, his levity, and repulsive insensibility to religious concerns, will be found to be the fruit of parental neglect in his early years. I am afraid he will be left an enemy of God, will be reprobated and lost through this neglect. I have, indeed often warned him of the danger of an impenitent, prayerless life—of neglecting the early day of grace, of refusing the calls of mercy "to-day," of presumptuously calculating on future years for the great work of salvation. But I have no reason to believe that I have felt habitually his immortal interests, as I ought, or taught him as convincingly, by example, as God requires.

Now, my dear S. what can I do? Past, neglected duty can never, never be performed; but present duty must. I must now faithfully entreat and warn you, as parental duty and approaching judgment require; and leave the result with an Omnipotent Saviour. What part, then, my dear son, are you taking, or resolved to take, in the visits of the Holy Spirit, which give life and eternal salvation to some of your companions. What are your real feelings, with respect to this sudden approach of that Almighty Agent? Has the Grand Dispenser of salvation seemed to you to come as an intruder on your plans and prospects? Has your heart really said, "Go thy way for this time;" "Wait till I am ready;" "Wait again;" "I am pre-engaged, my time is pledged to earthly plans, my order of pursuits must not be interrupted, I have prospects which I cannot now abandon;" "Yet a little sleep." If this is the feeling and prayer of your heart, I fear it will indeed be answered and realized in a more fearful sense than you intend. Remember S——, that you have seen one day of the Holy Spirit, and neglected the salvation of your soul because you could not spare time, nor be diverted from your earthly pursuits.

While your companions were leaving you, and running into the kingdom of life, you deliberately resolved that a Saviour must wait your time. You then knew that you must embrace the gospel or be lost. You were then warned of the danger of the part you were then acting. You were told that the evil day must come—that if you should be spared to accomplish your education and all your earthly plans, you would find yourself unhappy in life and unprepared for death, that your day to attend to religion might prove to be the day of judicial hardness, and total desertion by the Holy Spirit. Should you now refuse the Saviour your attention and your heart, while again your companions hear his voice, bow to his grace and run to glory, have you any reason to expect that he will ever call again? Have you the least expectation that the Prince of Salvation will be governed by your imagined convenience? O! my dear S——, have you any serious concern for the life of your soul? and dare you put that at hazard for the sake of literary honours, or any earthly interest? What can it avail you to finish your literary course with honour, and your earthly existence with everlasting shame?

Are you not convinced that those of your companions who secure the favour of God, and the pardon of sin, are much happier than yourself even now; and what is the comparison of future prospects! Are you not convinced that it would remove mountains of guilt from your soul, and dry up an ocean of bitterness, were you now a pardoned sinner? How you would participate and increase the joy of your pious friends. God has shown you, in the affecting case of a classmate, how presumptuous delay will pierce the heart of an enlightened sinner. Can you ever forget it? My S——, delay not! May I feel assured that your purpose is fixed in God to seek first his favour, which is life.*

A divine work is prevailing in this region, one has just taken her departure, in joy and triumph, to celestial rest. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Hear S——, the earnest counsel of your ever affectionate father.

P. S. I have just seen a letter, dated the 7th, which increases my hope for Middlebury College. The day of harvest is come. Blessed is he that reapeth, and receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto eternal life.

* The son was introduced into the ministry twenty-eight years ago, under the imposition of his father's hands, among others, and became pastor of one of the Congregational Churches of New England.

From the Southern Presbytorian.

OUR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES IN THE SOUTH.

The great scarcity of ministers in the whole country, and especially in the South; the pressing demands from vacant churches, and from many places where openings for our ministers are most promising, have at length aroused our people, to a good degree, to pray and work for more labourers in this plenteous harvest.

Perhaps it is safe to say, that in our Church Judicatories there never have been more anxious consultations, more spirited discussions, and more importunate prayer, than for a few years past; while, from the pulpit and the pew have gone up more earnest and oft renewed prayers than ever, that God would increase the company of ambassadors.

We have reason also to believe, and facts that have recently come to the writer's knowledge confirm the impression, that for many year's past parents have been led, more than usual, to feel the duty of consecrating their sons to the ministry.

This is not all. The friends of the Church have been more vigorous in promoting the facilities for high scholarship, and in offering inducements to the young to educate themselves, than ever before. It would seem as if a new era was opening, foretokening lofty achievements, and awakening the most soul-cheering hopes for the intelligence of coming generations.

Institutions of learning are multiplying everywhere, while religion and patriotism are consecrating their treasures to the cause of literature. With some, the offerings may be at "Minerva's shrine" alone; but with most, piety has been the impulse, and the honour of God the aim. Nearly thirty new institutions, under the care of Synods and Presbyteries, were founded during the last current Presbyterial year. It is also well known that immense sums were raised, in all parts of our country, to endow and make more efficient the partially endowed but older institutions.

CONSCIENCES.

There are five kinds of consciences on foot in the world; first, an ignorant conscience, which neither sees nor says anything, neither beholds the sins in the soul, nor reproves them; secondly, the flattering conscience, whose speech is worse than silence itself, which, though seeing sin, soothes men in the committing thereof; thirdly, the seared conscience, which has neither, sight, speech, nor sense, in "men that are past feeling;" fourthly, the wounded conscience, frightened with sin; the fifth is a quiet and clear conscience, purified in Christ Jesus. A wounded conscience is rather painful than sinful—an affliction, no offence, and is the ready way, at the next remove, to be turned into a quiet conscience.

"THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS."

Who hath despised the day of small things?

From little seeds sweet flowers do spring,
And perfume o'er our pathway fling;
The noble oaks derive their birth
From acorns buried in the earth;
And the bright corn, on waving plains
Rose from the tiny scattered grains.

And infant hands may plant the seed,
And from that small and simple deed
Rich produce shall adorn the ground,
And gladden ev'ry heart around;
For God will send the sun and shower
To cherish and refresh the flower.

How small the seed of truth appears—
Oft sown with trembling and with tears;
And yet that precious germ imparts
Fragrance and life to barren hearts;
Nor shall its progress stay until
Its branches the wide world shall fill.

And a child's soft and earnest prayer
Rich blessings may to others bear;
And a child's penny, rightly given,
May aid in guiding souls to heaven;
And lisping accents may proclaim
The sweetness of a Saviour's name.

Dear children, God is kind indeed,
To let you help to plant his seed!
O! cast it with a liberal hand
On every dark and heathen land;
And He who dwells enthroned above,
Will smile upon your work of love.

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

The humble, weary and anxious toils of the nursery sometimes need glimpses of the future, to impart to them their true dignity and value. Let any mother who feels that she is of small value, and that her duties and cares are of little account, ponder over such incidents as these. On the east of Long Island, in one of the most secluded spots in this country, more than thirty years ago, a mother, whose rare intellectual and moral endowments were known to but few, made this simple record:

"This morning I rose very early to pray for my children, and especially that my sons may be ministers and missionaries of Jesus Christ." A number of years after, a friend who was present, thus describes this mother's dying hour: "Owing to extreme weakness, her mind wandered, and her conversation was broken; but as she entered the valley of the shadow of death, her soul lighted up and gilded its darkness. She made a feeling and most appropriate prayer, and told her husband that her views and anticipations had been such that she could scarcely contain them, and that if they had been increased, she should have been overwhelmed; that her Saviour had blessed her with constant peace; and that through all her sickness, she had never prayed for life. She dedicated her five sons to God, as ministers and missionaries of Jesus Christ; and said that her greatest desire was that her children might be trained up for God.

"She spoke with joy of the advancement of the kingdom of Christ, and of the glorious day now ushering in. She attempted to speak to her children, but was so exhausted, and their cries and sobs were such, that she could say but very little. Her husband then made a prayer, in which he gave her to God, and dedicated all they held in common to him. She then fell into a sweet sleep, from which she awoke in heaven."

The prayers of this mother have been answered. All her eight children have been trained up for God. Her five sons are all ministers and missionaries of Jesus Christ. And the late Rev. George Beecher is the first of her offering whom she has welcomed to heaven.—Presbyterian of the West.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

ANNUAL REPORT.

An extra number of the Record accompanies our regular issue this month, which contains the Annual Report to the General Assembly of the foreign missionary work of the Church.

The details given in this document, we feel persuaded, will be read with sincere pleasure and deep gratitude to God by every true Christian amongst our subscribers. Can we say more to invite them to take time for its careful perusal?

We regret to notice that the introductory paragraph has been omitted by the printer, in changing the form, after striking off the octavo edition. It contained the approval of this Report by the Board.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

MISSION HOUSE, June 13, 1855.

INDIA.—We have received letters from Lodiana, to April 6; Ambala, March 29; Saharunpur, March 17; Agra, to April 4; Mynpoorie, March 24; Futtehgurh, to April 7; Allahabad, April 7. Messrs. Newton, Barnes, and Leavitt had reached the end of their long journey. Their stations were, Lodiana for Messrs. Newton and Leavitt, and Lahor for Mr. Barnes. Mr. Janvier was about to remove to Ambala for the present, Mr. Jamieson having to accompany his wife to the hills. We regret to receive no more favourable accounts of her health, nor of Mrs. Orbison's, who was very feeble when at Allahabad on her way to Malacca. At the Hardwar fair, Messrs. Campbell, Caldwell, Woodside, Rudolph, Forman, Leavitt, and Gordon, (the last of the Associate Church,) were present on the 5th of April. Hundreds of thousands of pilgrims would be in attendance for several days. One of the missionaries says, "We preach to great numbers every day. Some listen attentively, and appear to approve of what they hear." At Agra, Mr. Scott writes that "one of the best scholars in the boys' school has been received to the communion of the church. We hope he may be useful." At Futtehgurh, Mr. Walsh writes that, "at our communion last Sabbath we had the pleasure of receiving into our church two very interesting converts—one, a munshi of Lucknow, who has been receiving instructions from us for the last five months and more, and is a highly respectable man; and the other, a Rajput, son of a landholder living within forty miles of us, also a respectable and apparently a sincere man. He has shown an interest in the gospel for the last two years, and his attention was first drawn to the subject by one of the native Christians in government employ, and whom we can only regard as a nominal Christian." Mr. Walsh speaks of "others who are inquiring and ready to embrace the truth as it is in Jesus." For these tokens of God's presence, our missionary brethren feel very grateful.

SIAM.—We have received letters from the Rev. S. Mattoon, at Bangkok, February 16, and the Rev. M. M. Carleton, at Singapore, March 24. Information had been received at Singapore of orders from the king of Siam, that no Europeans or Americans should be permitted to enter his kingdom. Mr. and Mrs. Carleton had therefore been unable to proceed, although their passages were taken for Bangkok, but at great inconvenience were compelled to remain at Singapore. On the other hand, Mr. Mattoon's letter conveys a more hopeful view of the existing difficulties. We purposely abstain from giving particulars of these embarrassments, but trust our readers will not cease to pray for the continuance of this most interesting and important mission.

CHINA.—Letters have been received from Ningpo, March 3; Shanghai, March 7; Canton, March 13. At Canton anarchy still greatly prevailed, though the Insurgents had withdrawn. Mr. French speaks of the work of the mission as being steadily prosecuted: "Our chapels and dispensaries are well attended; our boarding-schools, male and female, are prospering, and our day-schools have opened under very favourable auspices. We ask a constant remembrance in your prayers, and the prayers of the Church." At Shanghai, the Insurgents had evacuated the city; and the mission-house was undergoing repairs. It had become necessary to purchase another house in the quarter occupied by foreigners, and towards its cost the money would partly contribute which was received from the Imperialist governor for injuries to the house within the walls. After the repairs of the latter were made, there would still be a balance of several hundred dollars available for the house purchased. The usual missionary labours at this city would all be resumed. At Ningpo the brethren were much encouraged in their work. Mr. Nevius, on the 5th of February, wrote as follows—"Yesterday we had the pleasure of welcoming into our little church two members of the boys' school, and a teacher employed by brother S. Martin. The services were conducted in the presence of a large company of natives, most of whom were able, from previous instruction, to understand the import of the exercises. We hope that others who were there will soon cast in their lot with us." Much seriousness of feeling on religious subjects is reported in the girls' school, and several were inquiring what they must do to be saved. In this good news, many of our readers will see an answer to their prayers.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—The Rev. W. Speer writes on the 14th of May, regretting the loss of his good Elder, Lai Sam, who has returned to China, on account of his health, and family reasons. Mr. Speer had lately visited the Chinese in the mining region around Nevada, by whom he was cordially received, as by the Chinese everywhere.

AFRICA.—Interesting accounts will be found elsewhere in our columns this month, from the Corisco Mission. The latest dates are to the 22d of January. The brethren had about completed the arduous work of rebuilding their houses, and their missionary labours were fairly recommenced. They express the hope that the influences of the Holy Spirit had been granted to some few of their hearers, one of whom had become, it was believed, a true follower of Christ. The missionaries had continued to be greatly favoured as to health.

In Liberia, Mr. Priest, writing on the 27th of February, mentions the admission to the church at Sinoe of a native young man; and Mr. Erskine, on the 3d of April, mentions the reception of two members in the church at Harrisburgh, where four or five other persons were inquiring what they must do to be saved.

INDIAN MISSIONS.—We have received letters from the Chickasaw Mission, May 8; Creek, to May 16; Choctaw, to May 24; Omaha, May 16; Chippewa and Ottawa, April 18. Mr. H. W. Guthrie, a licentiate preacher of the Presbytery of Allegheny, and still connected with the Theological Seminary at Allegheny City, Penna., has accepted an appointment to spend a few months in preaching to the Indians of this last mentioned mission—where his services are much needed. Mr. Lilley and his family, of the Seminole Mission, are making a short visit to their friends, partly on account of Mrs. Lilley's health. The Rev. Carleton H. Wilson, of the Presbytery of Harmony, and lately of the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C., and his wife have been appointed to the Chickasaw Mission, and had reached New Orleans, on their way to their station, accompanied by Miss C. W. Eddy, on her return, with improved health. The Rev. Edward Eells, of the Presbytery of Ebenezer, and his wife, with Miss H. N. Mitchell and Miss J. E. Hollingsworth, of Dayton, Ohio, Miss E. Mathews, of Meadville, Penna., and Miss L. H. Barber, of Amenia, N. Y., have been appointed to the South-western Indian Missions, and have also proceeded on their journey to their stations. Mr. and Mrs. Eells and two of the young ladies will be connected with a boarding-school for girls, at Goodwater, among the Choctaws, a few miles from Spencer Academy. This school was formerly under the care of another Board, but had been suspended for some time. It is now to be commenced anew, and we trust will be the means of doing great good. Mr. Eells leaves a pleasant pastoral charge, to take the superintendence of this Seminary. The stations of the other teachers will be reported hereafter. We mention also the appointment of Miss C. S. Boegel, of near Madison, Ind., as a teacher to the Omaha Mission, where she has arrived. We ask for all these missionary friends the prayers of the churches. It is a cause of great gratitude that so many persons of approved character and qualifications have been led by the Spirit of God, as we trust, to offer themselves for the missionary work among the Indians. Viewed in connection with the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord at some of the stations, the going forth of these servants of Christ, to his work in the wilderness, leads us to hope that God has great blessings in store for these tribes. Mr. Reid's letters from Spencer Academy still contain interesting details concerning the work of grace among the Choctaws. The meetings for worship are numerous and largely attended. He mentions the death of a convert, who was baptized on his dying bed, and who enjoyed great peace in his last hours. He also makes an earnest entreaty for more labourers.

MISSIONS TO ROMANISTS.—The Rev. T. L'Hombral writes, on the 16th of March, concerning his work at Buenos Ayres, which with points of difficulty presents also encouraging features. One of the communicants at the last time of administering the sacrament of the supper, had been a Roman Catholic. Mr. W. Rey, a delegate from the Evangelical Society of Geneva, at present on a visit to the churches in this country, has kindly communicated to us some intelligence contained in his letters from home of recent dates. The persecution in France seems to be at an end. The four churches in the department of Saone and Loire, which had been closed by Government officials, have been re-opened, and a devoted missionary, who was expecting to be exiled, has been allowed to remain and continue in his good work. A notice of Mr. Rey's object in visiting this country is given in another place.

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.—The Rev. D. A. Wilson and his wife embarked at this port in the Gem for Monrovia, on the 17th of May. They are accompanied by Mr. John White and his wife, appointed to the same mission. Mr. White is a licentiate preacher, connected with the Second Presbytery of New York. The health of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson has been greatly improved by their visit. We trust the prayers of the people of God will be offered for this little company of his servants.

VISIT TO THE IOWA AND OMAHA MISSIONS.—Walter Lowrie, Esq., one of the Secretaries of the Board, after the meeting of the General Assembly, went on to the Iowa and Omaha missions, on business connected with the new arrangements for the missions to the Omahas and Otoes. He is expected to reach the office again towards the end of July.

HEALTH OF CORISCO.

The unhealthiness of the African climate is proverbial, and has long been regarded as one of the most serious obstacles to the prosecution of the missionary work in that part of the world. The views which were formerly entertained of its extreme severity, have, however, been greatly modified by the more recent experience of the missionaries and other white persons, residing on the western coast; and to some extent by the recent successful exploration of the great central river of the continent, without loss of life. This modification of the influence of the climate is to be ascribed to a variety of causes. The diseases peculiar to the country are better understood, and are treated with more skill and judgment.

On many parts of the coast, the country has been cleared of much of its natural growth, and is better cultivated. Missionaries find better habitations now, and they are saved from many of the annoyances which formerly arose from the extremely barbarous habits of the natives, which induced them to lay their hands upon almost every species of property which was brought within their reach;—and not least among these, is the great satisfaction which the missionaries are now permitted to enjoy, in witnessing the precious fruits that are beginning to develope themselves more fully in connection with their labours.

The following remarks upon the health of Corisco, by Mr. McQueen, after a residence of more than two years there, will be read with peculiar satisfaction by all those who feel an interest in the salvation of the African race.

"You will be anxious, no doubt, to hear more particularly as to our health, since brother Mackey left. In general, I can safely say, it has been excellent, far beyond what I expected to enjoy in Africa before I left America; and I suppose, far beyond what our friends at home expected. God has dealt with us in great mercy. I was so long exempt from fever of any kind, so hearty and well, that I could not but wonder at it myself; and almost daily the thought returns, of the remarkable health which I enjoy. Mr. Clemens has enjoyed almost uninterrupted health, and Mrs. C. likewise. * * * * We have tested to our satisfaction, that a white man, of unimpaired constitution, and an ordinary degree of prudence, may live here and enjoy good health, provided he has sufficient bodily exercise. This we are convinced is necessary. When I have my hands full of such business as requires physical exercise, I enjoy good health, whether in the dry or rainy season."

AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

LETTER FROM REV. WILLIAM CLEMENS, OF JANUARY 22, 1855.

The following letter, though mainly occupied with details connected with the erection of the new mission buildings at Corisco, will be interesting nevertheless to those of our readers who are fond of contemplating the missionary work in all the variety of aspects under which it presents itself.

It will be remembered that the mission premises at that place were almost entirely consumed by fire, something more than a year ago. The brethren there, as soon as they satisfied themselves that this disaster had not resulted from any hostility on the part of the people among whom they lived, but on the contrary, that they enjoyed their hearty sympathy, and had many assurances of assistance in rebuilding their houses, immediately set to work to repair their losses; and in less than nine months from the occurrence of the fire, all the necessary buildings were completed and ready for occupation. The most remarkable achievement in connection with these labours, was the completion of a commodious two-story frame house, forty feet by twenty, by the natives of the Island, few of whom had ever seen any building of the kind, or knew anything about the use of carpenter's tools. It was done, of course, under the direction of the missionaries, but scarcely less wonderful on that account.

We would commend the earnest appeal for more missionary help with which this letter is concluded, to the serious and prayerful consideration of the young men of the Church who are looking forward to the work of the ministry. The trying crisis through which our brethren have passed, we trust will prove but the forerunner of the rich blessings which are to follow. Every facility is now enjoyed for the enlargement of the mission. The climate of the Island has proved to be comparatively healthy. The character and objects of the mission are better understood by the natives. Much religious truth has already been disseminated among them, and the time has now come when this circle of religious influence and instruction may be greatly enlarged, if more labourers can be had for that portion of the Saviour's vineyard.

The "Cortes" arrived here on the 15th September, bringing letters and supplies from America. Since then we have received letters once, being a few days ago, 20th of January.

We were about finishing our frame building when the vessel came, and brought the intelligence of the arrival of the iron store-house. We saw at once that the putting up of such a house would be something new, both to us and the natives. To ourselves it seemed an experiment in a kind of work, of which we had little practical knowledge; to the natives, for they knew nothing about working in stone, and the very idea of (Udabo Walali) a stone house, filled them with wonder. However, with a white man to direct them, they were willing to engage to work.

Mr. Mars, (stone-mason,) came from Monrovia at the same time the iron house came, sent by Mr. James, according to your instructions. Our supplies that came also in the "Cortes" occupied some time in storing and distributing them. In the meantime Mr. Mars began quarrying stone with a few men, a short distance from town, a little above where the water comes at high tide. Sometimes he was compelled to leave his work, from the water that dashed on them when the tide was full. As soon as we could command a little more time to examine farther, another place farther off, but more favourable for procuring good stone was found. This latter place was a long reef that became bare at low water. From the continued action of the waves the rock had been worn away in some places underneath. These extended so far, that the projecting rock would overbalance and break off from the main part. With a long hammer these shelving pieces could be easily broken.

Mr. Mars and his men worked in the first quarry two or three weeks. In the second, by breaking for three days, a sufficient amount of stone was obtained to finish the building, with what had been worked from the other place.

The bringing of the stone from the ocean to the place of building was much harder work. The stones were first brought in canoes from the farthest place to the beach nearest the foundation of the house, and carried from thence to the place of building. The natives worked steadily, carrying a stone each on their shoulders. The largest stones were carried on barrows, made hastily by nailing some short pieces of boards across two strong sticks. While some were employed in the way above mentioned, others were sent to gather shells and cut wood for making lime, by burning the shells. These shells were the common sea-shells gathered on the beach, or collected from the towns where the women had carried them, to obtain the live fish to eat. We succeeded to our satisfaction in burning shells, and obtained very good lime.

Mr. Mars began laying stone two or three weeks from the time he came, and finished about the first of November. Mr. James, in contracting with Mr. Mars, was bound to pay him wages as long as he remained here, and allowing him, besides, ten days for his passage to Monrovia. We contemplated building a chimney, suitable for a kitchen, and enclosing it with bamboo. Our kitchens formerly were built and used very much like the natives; consisting of a bamboo house with a fire in the middle, except that a cooking stove superseded the fire in the middle of the house. When it was seen how conveniently the stones could be procured, and the facility of breaking and carrying them, we determined to build a stone kitchen. Another reason that decided for building a stone house, was the continued pay of Mr. Mars as long as he remained away from Monrovia. Captain Laulin had not been here for some time, which led us to think he would delay two or three weeks, when it was hoped the stone work would be finished. The kitchen is twelve by fifteen feet in the inside, which was supposed to be large enough for ordinary purposes. Mr. Mars left on the 18th November, working a little more than two weeks at the kitchen. He left the building before it was half done; since then it has been completed, one of our own boys laying the remainder of the stones. He required constant watching to keep him from building crooked, but he worked with such energy, being stimulated by the kind of work he was doing, that the house was soon finished.

Before Mr. Mars left, we examined the letter of instructions for putting up the iron house, and opened the boxes containing the materials of the house. Our efforts to fit it together seemed in vain, every thing appeared out of place. At last we came to the conclusion that the bended iron bars that run across the upper part of the posts were wanting. Their places were soon supplied by hewed timbers morticed into the tops of the posts. This done, the fitting went on for some time, when a scarceness of bolts was discovered. A trip to Gaboon supplied us temporarily, so that the frame was nearly finished, when it was found necessary to undertake another journey to Gaboon for the same purpose.

The iron house was finished on the 11th, or near the middle of December, and the kitchen on the 11th of January. There is a little more work to be done to the iron house, such as building a wall for the cellar door, and cementing the cellar or lower story. We have already put cement on the outside of the wall above, and a little below the surface of the ground, to prevent the "white ants" from injuring the articles stored there. Since cementing the outside, the ants have appeared in the inside, but they will be completely shut out when the floor and inside have been cemented. Several additions have been made to the building to made it secure against thieves.

The lower story of the iron house is three feet below and three above ground. The whole story would have been made under ground had not the dampness been an obstacle.

I have said nothing about the frame house, expecting brother Mackey, will give a better history of things than I have time to give on paper. There are, however, a few things occurring since his absence that should be mentioned. We have had two ends before us in building. One was safety from thieves and the other protection against fire. These ends have in a good measure been attained. You are aware, I suppose, that in building the frame house it was so constructed as to be elevated eighteen inches or two feet above the ground. Teak sticks, or rather logs, eight inches or a foot in diameter, were set in the ground upon which the large sleepers of the house were laid. The teak logs were protected from the white ants by painting the parts above ground, having previously mixed arsenic in the paint. The building materials were all purchased in Gaboon, by brother Mackey, such as boards, doors, and windows. The great labour of the house was hewing, and bringing to the place of building. The large sleepers were forty feet long by ten inches square, and required all the men we could hire and coax to bring them on the ground. Estimating all our troubles at the highest price, they were nothing more than expected, and not as much as many supposed. After the timber had been brought from the bush, I do not know whether the same number of men from America would have accomplished the work much sooner. Our boys worked awkwardly at first, but when they became familiar with the kind of tools used and work to be done, they were helpers not to be despised.

The house was designed with a board roof, lapped so that the joints of the under boards was covered by a third laid over the joint. After painting the roof, it was thought perhaps it might do for the present, till better materials for roofing could be obtained. When the rains came there was no other alternative but to put on an "ugonga," or thatch roof over the other. This turned the rain well and made the upper story cool. Before the thatch roof was put on, the upper story was too warm to be occupied with comfort. Now it is as pleasant as the lower part of the house. The same is true of the iron house, the iron sheeting draws the heat much more than the paint on the frame house, which will prevent it from being used as a retiring place to study or read. The heat may be beneficial in another respect, that of keeping away dampness, and consequently mould, from the articles stored there. Our frame house is drier than the old bamboo house, which is evident from the absence of mould. This is to be reckoned among some of the advantages of frame buildings in Africa. With the present position of our houses we feel safe from fire, except the houses should be set on fire, and even then we imagine one could not take fire from the other.

Reflections upon completing the work of building.

When I look back but a few months at our afflicted state, when all we had could be seen in ashes, and look now at our permanent, comfortable home, it seems as if my eye has been watching a panorama. Truly goodness and mercy has followed us. The Psalmist said he would remember the Lord for his kindness in affliction, he blessed the Lord and called upon his soul and all within him to bless his holy name. We would take up the same language and adopt it as our own. Often have we felt the sweet influences of God's Spirit comforting us in our trials. Though we laid our weary bodies down at night worn with the toil of the day, it was pleasant to think we were doing the Lord's work, and should not fail of our reward. The promise was made good to us, "that as thy day is, so shall thy strength be." Welcome such toil as this, baptized by the Spirit's consolations, and we say to you and the good friends that have remembered us, rejoice with us in a review of these mercies. Our labours have filled our minds thus far. There has indeed been a long hard six months' toil, but here comes the startling fact to meet us, what arduous labours to reach the souls of these heathen. My heart sickens to think of their hopeless condition, and the feeble hands that must minister to their spiritual wants. Dear brother, we are scarcely enough to nurse each other.

An appeal for help.

Where shall we get help? God has been good, good beyond our expectations, for he has laid us aside scarcely a day from sickness, since taking charge of our work. We have had besides some cheering words of inquirers asking about the Saviour, one of whom we hope has become a follower of Christ. What more can come from a heathen people to cheer the minister of Jesus. We feel encouraged, although we are aware that the mass of the people exhibit little interest comparatively in what is said to them. They love us, but not the truth, for to love us is to love their own interest. The strangeness of the truths of the Bible, however, is wearing away. The novelty of preaching is yielding to the more intelligent scriptural view of what is said. What we want now, is force to push the work forward and occupy the minds of the people. Many are willing to, and do acknowledge that these are good things, but the majority are not reached by our preaching. Brother McQueen is chiefly confined to his school. I have been so closely pressed with business while building, that it was impossible to visit. We have been shut up in our own town except on the Sabbath, when we see the faces of our people, and say a few words to them. This is very unsatisfactory. Our desire is to be more with the people; with this desire we have lived month after month, looking forward in anticipation of its realization, but until some help shall come from the Church at home, we expect to do little more now than has been done. All that can be done, is to behold them hastening to the grave without offering relief.

REPORT OF THE FEMALE SCHOOL,

At present under the care of Mrs. Clemens.

Our Girls' School, which was disbanded near the first of April, by the destructive fire that occurred here, was not resumed till the latter part of August, and then only in a limited form. As all the household cares devolved upon me, the brethren were quite unwilling that I should burden myself with the care of many children. Five of the girls formerly in Mrs. Mackey's school, came to live with us at the above date, and soon after, three others; so that for the last four months we have had charge of eight girls. Five of these could read some, when they came; the remaining three were learning the alphabet. It was impossible to bestow upon them the attention which would have been given under other circumstances. But most of their time was occupied by giving them lessons, twice a day, in reading, &c., and once in sewing.

Five of the girls read a chapter in the New Testament, each day; and these are required to commit one verse each day. They thought this a hard task at first, but now it costs them little study, and very often they come with two or three verses to recite. In this way they have committed the three epistles of John, and are now at the first chapter of John's Gospel. Four of the girls commit short lessons in geography each day, and read a lesson in some one of the School Readers. All have exercises in orthography. The three that commenced with A B C, are now reading in the First Reader. All the girls have made considerable progress, not only in their studies, but in their manners and attention to what is told them. They are very fond of singing, and have learned a number of pieces which they take great delight in singing. Often in the evening twilight, they will seat themselves together and sing over all they can remember. Frequently they seem much interested in what concerns their souls, and their existence in the world to come. And on two occasions, their convictions of sin and the terrors of hell so alarmed them, that they wept bitterly. Again these feelings pass away, and we have not the evidence to assure us that any of them have as yet passed from death unto life. Still, we have much to encourage us, and we cannot but hope that soon some first fruits of a plentiful harvest will be gathered from this most unpromising soil—the degraded African female. We are only sorry that it is not in our power to multiply greatly the number of our scholars.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

July 2, 1854.—Another of Miss Aldersey's former pupils, Sing-a-san was baptized to day, the one referred to in my journal of April. She was once violently opposed to the gospel, and her language at times was heaven-daring, to a remarkable degree, for a young female; but grace has wrought an evident change in her conduct. Since she left school she has been called to suffer much from unkind relatives, which has been doubtless overruled to her eternal good.

July 10.—The troubles between the Portuguese and Cantonese before alluded to, have become very serious of late, and to-day we have been witnesses from our houses on the north bank of the river, of an outbreak, which it seems has proved fatal to some. A corvette has recently come into harbour from Macao, and demands have been made upon the Mandarins on account of an alleged insult to the Portuguese Consul. As the demands were not met, the man-of-war moved up near the Cantonese junks, which have for some time been lying opposite our houses, and this afternoon she fired upon them and into the city. Had the fire been returned, we should, in all probability, have suffered in our property, if not in our lives; but happily the few Canton men on board the junks made the best of their way to the shore, and escaped. The junks were then boarded and plundered. One poor old blind man and his son who lived by the Salt-gate ferry, and a young girl in the city, who at the time was embroidering by the side of her mother, were instantly killed by balls from the Portuguese cannon. Much excitement prevails, and as usual in times of anxiety, many of this timid people will probably flee from the city.

Monday, July 17.—Reports of every kind have been rife in the city, and foreigners have been annoyed in various ways in consequence of the recent disturbances. One of the missionaries and his wife were threatened by some Canton men as they were walking out a few evenings since, and it was given out that the house of another would be attacked. A musket ball was fired at a boat that was passing, and struck my house, night before last. Indeed we cannot now cross the river after dark, without being challenged by the Portuguese and Lorcha-men. Nevertheless there does not seem to be any occasion of anxiety on our part so long as we take care of ourselves. The people generally, distinguish us from the foreign aggressors in this case.

Saturday, July 22, 1854.—We were surprised on Thursday, very pleasantly, by a visit from some of the officers of the "Powhatan," one of the Japan expedition steamers. She has just returned from that country, and is on her way to Hong-Kong, touching at each of the Chinese open ports. We were very glad to bid them welcome, and they seemed to enjoy their stay of a few days among us. In the company were Dr. S. W. Williams of the American Board at Canton, and the famous Dr. Bettleheim of Loo-Choo. Captain McCluney directed the commanding officer to secure for the American residents immunity from all harm in the present disturbances, an order which was promptly, and we have reason to believe, successfully attended to. A number of us visited the leviathan steamer to-day at Chinhae, and were received with every kindness. One of the sailors died from the effect of a sun-stroke while at Ningpo, and was buried this afternoon in our graveyard.

August 6.—The ordinance of baptism was administered to two individuals this afternoon in the city church—one is the teacher in the day school under the care of Rev. W. Martin, named Dzaou, and the other is the grandmother of Lu-seen-sang's wife, now upwards of seventy years old. The former is well acquainted with the Mandarin dialect, in which he was formerly Mr. Martin's teacher, and which we hope will yet qualify him for a wide influence. There is a good deal of fever among the school girls at present, though no case has yet proved dangerous. Many people in the city, however, have died of it.

September 6.—We have been called to-day to carry to his burial, a brother greatly beloved among us, the Rev. Josiah Goddard, of the American Baptist Mission. He closed his long and useful missionary career night before last. Of the fifteen years of his missionary life, he spent the greater part in successful labour among the Chinese in Siam, which he left when his health failed, a few years ago, and came to Ningpo. During his residence here, he has completed an admirable translation of the New Testament, with three books of the Pentateuch, besides being daily employed in direct personal efforts for the good of this people. He was a man of good scholarship, of sound judgment, and of exemplary piety, loved and honoured by all his fellow missionaries. We deeply mourn our own loss; still we know that Jehovah reigns, and that these separations are, with his other providences, working out the real interests of his blessed kingdom. May we who remain be prepared, as was our brother, to depart in peace.

October 2.—The child of Sing-a-san was baptized yesterday. The father of the child is a worthless wretch, and his poor wife had to seek for him in a gambling shop to obtain permission for the performance of the ordinance. He called out to her that she might do as she pleased, as he did not care for her or the child either. Doubtless the bitter experience she has had has greatly tended to humble and chasten the spirit of this young disciple. We concluded the annual meetings of the mission as usual, by observing a day of religious exercises, and in our conference this evening, each seemed to feel abundant cause for gratitude to God with respect to the past, and hopeful for the future. We are rejoiced to hear of the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. R. Lowrie in Shanghai.

October 31.—Returned a few days since from a trip with Dr. McCartee to Za-gean, and some other places near the seashore, to the southeast of Ningpo. To-day, with my family and a few of the girls, went in another direction to Wang-ke, where Sing-a-foh, one of the converts, resides, one of Miss Aldersey's former pupils. At her suggestion, this young woman has started a school, now consisting of seven or eight girls, to whom she is teaching the colloquial according to the Romanized system, and they are making good progress. Sing-a-foh has much energy, and a very cheerful disposition, and seems to be esteemed in her native village, where she is undoubtedly exerting a good influence. Another of Miss A's former pupils, A-tsay, also a member of our church, conducts a day-school under Mrs. Cobbold's care, of the Church Mission. Thus the influence of this most excellent woman through the blessing of God is widely spreading. Our school girls greatly enjoyed the trip to-day. We visited a remarkable tomb near Wang-ke, by the side of which grows the finest specimen of the celebrated funereal cypress I have yet seen. In the bamboo grove near by, the girls ran about as fast as their little feet would allow them, greatly enjoying themselves. The hills and brooks, and groves, and the grotto which they saw were all new to most of them. Their hearts seemed more open as we returned in the bright moonlight, and they were disposed to ask many serious questions, which evinced more interest than we had supposed in religious subjects.

Monday, Nov. 6.—We have to-day welcomed a much loved fellow labourer, (Mr. Gough, of the Church Mission,) back to his field, after an absence of two years, with health confirmed.

That mission now consists of three brethren and their wives.

Saturday, Nov. 11.—Returned to-night from a trip taken with Mr. Quarterman, and the two assistants, Su-seen-sang and Shih-nean. We were absent five days among the towns and villages along the road leading to Hang-chaiu. We were only able however to go as far as Pah-kun, the limits of the canal from Ningpo. We crossed the Dzau-ngo river at this point, but the people beyond were unwilling to hire a boat to foreigners. This is owing to the trouble which some parties suffered from the officers on account of a previous trip, by some Shanghai merchants. We were thus hindered from pursuing our journey to regions beyond which we had hoped to visit, though we were by no means restricted in opportunities for useful labour. Thousands of tracts were distributed, and the bread of life broken in many places. The assistants were very faithful, and valuable helps to us in our work. Teacher Lu has a very conciliatory spirit, and easily wins the attention of those with whom he converses. Shih-neau is bold and earnest in his addresses to the people; they are much attached to each other, though of very different dispositions, and seem to help one another in the way of life. Their progress in theological studies has been thus far excellent. The country about the Dzaungo river, especially on the other side, is elevated, and much more beautiful than any we see near Ningpo. The Tallow Tree which abounds there, presents a very striking appearance, with its red leaves and white berries.

Sabbath, Dec. 3.—After conducting the usual preparatory service, with the native church members last evening, Miss Aldersey requested me to converse with some of her girls who were serious. There were in all some ten or twelve, some of whom are very hopeful. How much God has blessed the labours of this excellent woman; already eight of her household have been baptized, and now others are, we hope, seeking to walk in the way of life. The two children of Dzau-seen-sang were baptized before the communion service to-day.

Dec. 15.—Returned this afternoon with Mr. Cobbold, from a trip to Yu-yiau and Shang-yu, (Zông-nyü according to this dialect) where Mr. S. Martin and I went last spring. Several of the inhabitants of these two cities recognized me, and remembered the books we had previously distributed, though I could not learn that any deep impression had been made. We were, however, even more kindly received than before, and less suspiciousness was shown on the part of the people. Gradually they will appreciate our motives, and we can but hope become interested in them. How grateful will be that time when we will find in each city the house of some Justus, who worshipped God, where we can dwell while we remain in the place. Now, alas! we go among strangers, and not even here and there do we in these distant places find any followers of Jesus. Sometimes, especially while distributing tracts, we are much annoyed by a crowd of boys who follow us wherever we go, with the same curiosity, I suppose, that boys at home would feel in following a Chinaman walking their streets and distributing tracts. There is this difference, custom will not allow the Chinese merchant to drive out any number of persons who may rush into his shop, so that when upon invitation we enter to take a cup of tea, and converse on religious subjects, we are sure to find ourselves surrounded by a crowd of idlers, who of course greatly annoy the shop-keeper. This circumstance of course necessarily limits our stay, and we have to depend chiefly upon the good which the books distributed will impart. A good deal of experience has led me to the opinion, that in addressing the people, it is less distracting to the audience not to carry any books, but leave them in the boat, to be distributed afterwards. Would that this begging for books always denoted a real anxiety to know, like the Jews of Berea, more of the truth, and whether these things of which we speak are so. But though we often, in repassing streets, see individuals here and there in the shops reading the tracts distributed, there are not very many I fear who earnestly search into the truths which are contained in them. This is owing doubtless to the proverbial pride of scholars in China, and to the fact that not many besides professional teachers are apt readers of the written language. Their knowledge is, I think, chiefly bounded by the forms of the business in which they may be engaged, and to the lighter forms of novels. This latter circumstance is a strong reason for preparing books in the mandarin colloquial style, in which novels are generally written. Scholars will probably despise such works, while many of that class whom God generally chooses to confound the wise, will be able to understand these important truths. The translation of the Gospel of Matthew in this style, has, we learn, been recently prepared by the London Mission, at Shanghai. I make these remarks after a good deal of experience in tract distribution, though some may regard the remarks as giving too discouraging a view of the subject. Nevertheless, the importance of widely distributing tracts, and portions of the Scriptures of every style, is very evident; for we must sow beside all waters. I cannot however see the propriety, in the present state of China, of gratuitously scattering the whole of either Testaments very widely, and in this view I believe most Missionaries here sympathize. The Chinese are not prepared for it, and it seems to be a waste of the funds of the Church, well intended indeed, but not the less a waste, to follow such a plan. Better by far distribute small tracts and separate Gospels, either with or without a brief commentary attached. The book that I have found most sought after, is the Opium book tract, which Dr. McCartee has much improved, by adding a few valuable medical prescriptions, and some important religious truths. It is an interesting fact, that this tract, together with one of Dr. M's on repentance, have been recently cut in blocks by an officer in the provincial city Hang-chaw. In itinerating, however, the chief instrumentality we employ is oral preaching. We preach in the streets, and in houses, and shops, and chiefly in the principal temples, where we are always sure to secure a good audience. A very few are disposed to mock, and some to say "we will hear thee again of this matter." Though the mass remain apparently indifferent to the truth; yet they will listen attentively and assent to what is made known to them. At the mention of some doctrines, especially of the resurrection, they are surprised. We have every facility for this work of itineration, and to my own experience, it is one of peculiar interest; to say nothing of physical and other moral advantages, there is a peculiar refreshment to the soul, to stand up and proclaim in intelligible language, Jesus and the resurrection, to many immortal beings, who have never before even heard of his name.

EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF GENEVA.

We would call the attention of our readers to the fact, that William Rey, Esq., a delegate from the Evangelical Society of Geneva, has recently arrived in this country, with the hope of exciting a deeper interest among American Christians, in the plans and labours of the Society he represents. He is highly recommended by Dr. Merle D'Aubigné and other distinguished clergymen in Geneva, and it is earnestly hoped that his mission will be favourably regarded by all who feel an interest in the promotion of Evangelical religion in Europe. Mr. Rey has had several interviews with the officers and the Executive Committee of the Board of Foreign Missions, and has imparted much valuable and interesting information in relation to the plans, labours, and prospects of the Society. He directed attention to the present state and results of the missions which they have maintained in the southern portions of France for some years past, the more extended plans of operation which they contemplate for Sardinia and other parts of Italy; but especially to the claims of the Theological School, which is sustained by the Society, for the purpose of training ministers and evangelists to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ throughout all this region of Papal darkness.

The directors of the Society do not ask aid of American Christians, so much in view of what they are doing to promote evangelical religion in Switzerland, as in what they are doing and propose to do for Italy and France. They regard this as common ground, in the cultivation of which they justly consider that American Christians ought to feel a common interest with themselves. They have, many years since, entered upon their work, have followed it up with unabated zeal, and are now gathering some of the richest fruits from their past labours. But they cannot enlarge the sphere of their present efforts without greater pecuniary aid from this country and Great Britain, and it is with this object in view that their delegate is now among us.

As will be seen by reference to the Annual Report, a larger sum was appropriated by the Board for the purposes of this Society the last than any previous year. This the Board was enabled to do, to some extent, by contributions from generous individuals in the Church, which were particularly designated to this purpose.

We would take occasion to remind our Christian friends, that the European field, very many portions of it at least, is now fairly open to labours for the promotion of evangelical religion, unusual facilities exist for the furtherance of that cause, and we earnestly hope that the receipts of the Treasury the present year, will be such as to authorize the Committee to appropriate more liberally to this great cause than has ever been done before.

The following extract from a communication of Mr. Rey, will be interesting.

Since the great events of the sixteenth century, the special favour of the Lord has, for a second time, shined in our days upon Geneva. She was the chosen spot, the centre, where commenced the religious revival of western Europe in the nineteenth century. Some thirty years ago, some devoted servants of Jesus Christ, the Rev. Messrs. Malan, Gaussen, Merle D'Aubigné, and others, lifted up in Geneva the banner of the divinity of our blessed Saviour, and of the pure evangelical faith. They sacrificed in that behalf their rest and very dear friends; they were all dismissed from their posts in the established church, but the great truths of the Reform were again restored and put in honour; and God blessed his servants, and granted them to succeed and to prolong their days and toils to the present year.

The Evangelical Society of Geneva, founded in 1831, was a blessed means in the hands of the Head of the Church. Her colporteurs were, as the Society itself, the earliest in Europe; her School of Theology was and is still sending evangelical ministers into the neighbouring countries; her missionaries are now, by means of their authority and by training numerous flocks in France, one of the best pillars of the people of God there. Not many months ago, four of these missionaries and their flocks in Saone et Loire, were tried by the severest persecutions experienced in France since the past century; but all was endured with firmness and success, even prison, exile, public seal affixed to the chapels, and legal dispersion of the faithful, when three or four were discovered reading the Bible in private dwellings!

For the sake of the fact, that the ways of God be known, and not to glorify ourselves, we call to remembrance, that it is from the small city of Geneva that the spark of faith set out, and lighted a holy fire no more to be stifled, in France, Belgium, and more recently in the kingdom of Sardinia and Italy. The same influence, by the same channels, never ceases to flow anew. In Geneva itself, religious liberty is complete; an evangelical church was founded there, upon the same base of individual profession of faith and pecuniary assistance as the churches in America; and the national church itself has drawn back a foot out of Socinianism and indifference.

All these results are essentially indebted to the operations of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, at the head of which the Rev. Professor Merle D'Aubigné and Gaussen are placed, well known and loved names in the United States.

The Evangelical Society has not grown old. The source whence she expects and draws up her strength, the Lord, is ever fresh and inexhaustible. But for the moment, the war has partially dried up the resources coming from the foreign brethren. Geneva alone, which is like a small island strayed and lost upon the strand between the two Roman Catholic oceans of France and Italy, never supposed that her own resources could sufficiently supply the gospel in the vast field which God has opened to her, in the bosom of these two nations, numbering more than sixty millions of people. Therefore the Evangelical Society claims from the United States more efficacious support than in years past, and to that intent, she has sent a delegate here. She entreats, not for new and hazardous schemes, but for the support of a Christian institution, and of men, both known and experienced in twenty-five years of faithful and unwavering labours.

Independently of the brotherly ties, which bind the men, the churches, and the institutions of the United States and of Geneva, the importance of that free city for evangelization, must be more than ever held in view. The Roman priests are raging more than ever in France, and in the councils of Europe. In all probability, the children of God there will be devoted to increasing perils. Geneva is on the eve of proving itself, for the second time since the Reformation, the keystone of the evangelization in Western Europe. Remember the past for the best intelligence of coming days. The most dreadful religious persecution in France, since the dragonnades of Lewis the Fourteenth till the end of the past century, the oppressed and legally suppressed protestantism in France for more than one hundred years, proved a failure; a people of God maintained Christian life there; all this, because Geneva and the neighbouring Switzerland continued to send to the brethren, and sometimes—alas!—to the scaffolds of France, well trained ministers of the gospel and holy martyrs.

MISSION AT BUENOS AYRES.

A LETTER OF THE REV. T. L'HOMBRAL.

BUENOS AYRES, March 16th, 1855.

Since my last letter, I have been unwell, suffering from an inflammation of the bowels, a disease peculiar to this country. However, my work has not much suffered by it. Every Sabbath, we have had one service at the North American Chapel. Now, I am resuming my daily visitings among the French and others.

In my last, I spoke to you of a marriage performed in our Church. Last evening we had another, between one of our girls and a Roman Catholic man, who has expressed his desire of becoming a Protestant. I question whether the North American Chapel has ever been so crowded as it was last evening at 9 o'clock, with people of all descriptions and languages.

With God's assistance, I shall baptize the child of a native woman, married to one of our men. Though she understands but imperfectly the French language, she comes now and then to our meetings. In my visits unto her, we speak Spanish, and when I tell her that next year, I shall preach in her native tongue, she expresses great satisfaction: Vs me dará mucho gusto, says she, with a smile. I attach much importance to these little things, because of my firmly believing that, with native women, we might do much more work than with native men. . .

Two months ago we administered the Lord's supper. The North American Chapel furnished us with the things necessary. We had ten communicants, amongst whom, a born French Roman Catholic lady, the wife of the watchmaker of whom I spoke to you in my last letter. Previous to the solemnity, I had had several conversations with her, on the state of her mind and heart: Never shall I forget the emotion Mrs. B. was under when she presented herself to the holy table. I visit her house once a week.

I should not express myself well, if these, my words, were to convey to your mind the idea that we are already in an evidently prosperous condition. Most of the people I have to deal with, have lived for ten or twenty years without religion, in a country whose religion amounts to little. Often, I have to hunt for many of my hearers on Sundays; and I feel the necessity of meditating the great truths you remind me of in your letter. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation."

My friend, the pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, thinks that without a school and a chapel of our own, we shall ever do but little; and he suggests to me the idea of making an appeal to the Protestant churches of Buenos Ayres, soliciting funds for the building of an edifice to that effect. I should be somewhat inclined to think like my friend, Dr. Smith. But I have told him I would not do anything of the kind without your previous consent—and then our people are so few and poor, that I could not, in any way, hope to see that plan carried into execution, without the strong assistance of the United States Presbyterian Churches. Yesterday, I was questioning Mr. G., a Connecticut Presbyterian man, who has lived in this city about thirty years, on the sum necessary for getting a chapel. His answer was, that we want ten thousand dollars, United States money.

I believe I have told you, that I did not hear any more from the French Roman Catholic priest. He reappeared on the horizon, two months ago, backed by the Jesuits of France, and two or three influential families of this place. He has opened a school for boys, thinks of opening another shortly, for girls, and fighting his way, quand même (any how.) On another side, the native Roman Catholic priests seem to be alarmed by the daily expansion of the Protestant principles in their midst. "Sus corazones se consternan sobremanera; y arrancando de lo intimo de sus almas un profundo suspiro, no pueden por menos que preguntarse á simismo; Durará por mucho tiempo la religion en nuestra patria? Será permanente la paz entre nosotros." Under those circumstances, your missionary might well be alarmed, were he not aware that if God is with us, vainly the great and influential in the world would rise against us. Then comes the second part of the great truth above mentioned, "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation; but is within you." May thy kingdom be within me, O most gracious God! May thy unworthy servant be enabled to do much for the good of this benighted people!

Praying that our merciful God may bless you all, I remain, with great respect, dear brother,

Yours very truly.

CREEK MISSION.

JOURNAL OF A TOUR OF REV. W. H. TEMPLETON AMONG THE SEMINOLE INDIANS.—LABOURS AMONG THEM.—REVIVAL.

Dear Sir—On the last Sabbath of March we had a communion season here. One was received into the church. He is a white man who, when a youth, seventeen years ago, ran away from home, to get free from the restraints of home. He had Christian parents. He gives good evidence of having experienced a change of heart, and of being deeply wrought upon by the Holy Spirit.

For various reasons we had concluded to let our scholars go home a little while this spring, and at the request of Mr. Lilley, I visited their station.

On the morning of March 28th, I started after 9 o'clock on my journey. At sunrise the thermometer was as low as 19°, and the wind blew strong and cold from the North, all day. A little before sundown I arrived at the council ground, more than thirty miles distant, (about 33,) where I had good lodging and corn for my horse. Mr. Cook entertained me.

This morning, 29th, was not quite so cold, the weather having moderated much. But before leaving this place, I will speak a little of it. It is really the capital of the nation, being the place of meeting of the annual council of the whole nation, which is held in warm weather, and they have a large shed erected to meet under. They have besides, a large log house, where smaller councils can assemble at any time. Mr. Cook has his dwelling house, store, and necessary out-buildings. These are all the buildings in the place, except one small log house, occupied by a widow woman and her children. The council ground is situated on the eastern extremity of a range of hills, dividing the waters of the Arkansas and North Fork rivers, and is fifteen or twenty miles northwest from North Fork village, where you crossed it. The neighbourhood is well supplied with good springs, but rather scarce of timber, though there is considerable growing on the hills. This morning I started in good time, and soon reached Deep-Fork, ten miles southwest. This is a stream of very deep banks, and eighty or one hundred feet wide. It was not one foot deep, and a moderate current. It evidently does not overflow its banks here, and must in high water move rapidly, as there is considerable fall below. It is settled upwards of fifty miles along its banks, but not many living just here. It empties into the North Fork a few miles below. From this, travelling a few miles, I came to a settlement of Seminoles, who do not exhibit a prosperous appearance. They have some ground cleared, and were preparing to plant corn. From this, travelling some ten miles westward, I came near to North Fork, but as its general course is southwest there, I continued on some ten miles up, before crossing, sometimes in woodland, and sometimes in prairie; and this is about forty miles above where you crossed it. Four miles more brought me to Cummins' (the New-Yorker) a little before sundown, having made a journey of forty miles this day. He could entertain me, but had no corn for my horse, but he told me where I could get corn, one mile west. So I crossed the Oyuwohka, and went to Taylor's Store, the place designated. There I met with Mr. Bemo, who had been in, started a day sooner, and was detained with business. Here we were comfortably entertained, and had plenty of corn for our horses, at $1 50 per bushel. I expect you were not aware, when at Cummins,' that you were only three miles from North Fork river, which you had left forty miles behind you. But so it was.

March 30.—This morning still cool and cloudy, we started in good time, and it began dropping rain about the time we started, and was damp and rainy till after we reached the mission, which was a little before the middle of the day. On our arrival at the mission, we found all pretty well, except Mrs. Lilley, who is much afflicted with her eyes. She does not pretend to read, and cannot see to sew; although her necessity compelled her to sew some without seeing. Fears are entertained, lest she may lose her sight altogether. Mr. Lilley had an appointment for meeting in the evening, and I had the pleasure of speaking to a greater number of earnest listeners than I expected.

March 31.—This day was occupied partly by riding around among the people. We made an appointment for preaching, on Sabbath evening, five miles from the mission. This evening, we held a meeting at a place nearer to the station. There was a goodly number of eager listeners. In the house where the meeting was held, there was a sick woman, who had expressed concern for the salvation of her soul, before she was taken sick. In the afternoon, I preached in the same neighbourhood as the evening before, but in another house, where there was also a sick woman, who had been among the most professed seekers, before she took sick. There was a good audience here also. In the evening I preached at the appointed place, five miles distant; and although it was very damp and chilly, there was a good turn-out; mostly of persons who have not been professing to seek the salvation of their souls; and they listened attentively.

April 2.—To-day Mr. Lilley and I rode out through another neighbourhood, through which you passed when leaving there. We came to a house where they were assembling to bury a child. I spoke a few words at the grave. It was a coloured child, and the friends are mostly Baptists. But although they deny infants the rite of baptism, they are quite ready to fall in with the doctrine of infant salvation. In the evening we had a meeting of the session, to examine those who desired to be received into the church. Seventeen met with us as candidates, all of whom were separately conversed with about their experience and views. We began thus early, so as to have full time to deliberate and re-examine where it might be necessary. After they were dismissed, we conferred together about them, in general, but adjourned without deciding on any particular case.

April 3.—This morning, we started to go fifteen miles westward, to the neighbourhood of Mr. Lilley's interpreter, where he had held interesting meetings. We went around some, to a coloured settlement, to give word of our communion, on the following Sabbath. When we got into the neighbourhood, beyond the Oyuwohka, where we intended to hold a meeting, we found them quite excited about the capture of five Kechis, who had been caught with the stolen horses taken from the Shawnees, who lived about a half-day's journey. They had been taken by the place of meeting the day before, to the Creek council. On this account we were disappointed about our meeting, but the reason was obvious, and the people entirely excusable.

April 4.—We had comfortable lodging, and were kindly entertained. But being aware that there was no corn to be had in the country, and the grass not much grown, we had taken some in our saddle-bags for our horses. To-day we returned to the mission, and rode much of the way through the rain. Not having an interpreter this evening, we did not attend the prayer-meeting in the neighbourhood, which the people have.

April 6.—To-day, as well as yesterday, I tried to collect my thoughts for the exercises of the meeting, on the following day. In the evening there was a prayer-meeting in the neighbourhood; but as our interpreter did not arrive in time to attend, we met to consider the cases of those having applied for church membership. Taking up the cases separately, it was decided that eleven of the applicants be received, and the others were postponed for future action.

April 7.—In the morning we visited the two sick persons spoken of, and examined them as applicants to be admitted into the church. We also visited another person who had given in her name, but was not able to meet with us on Monday evening. At noon I preached; and at the close of the meeting, two or three additional persons came forward as inquirers, professing to have given themselves to God through our Lord Jesus Christ. In the evening, I preached again; both times to good audiences, and attentive hearers. The silent tear indicated more feeling than might have been supposed. In the spare time, the session was engaged in examining candidates, and considering their cases. Several others were received, and some postponed till to-morrow morning. Yesterday was the first clear day we had since I arrived, and all the time quite cold. There was a heavy frost that morning.

Sabbath, April 8.—This morning we had a prayer-meeting, which Mr. Lilley conducted, and made an exhortation—quite a good one. The session concluded its business, when 20 were admitted to full membership—19 of these were to be baptized; Mrs. Bemo one of the number. The 20th is Cornelia Lilley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lilley, and baptized in infancy. Of these 20, 15 are Seminoles,

2 are Creeks, 2 white, and 1 coloured:—6 are scholars of the school—3 boys, 3 girls. I preached before the middle of the day, to a very attentive audience, and after sermon baptized 17 adults. After an intermission, I baptized a child of Mr. and Mrs. Bemo, and 2 children of another parent. The baptism of the children of the Indians just received, was postponed until the parents be further instructed on infant baptism. After that, I administered the Lord's Supper to a very interesting company, the majority of whom sat down to the Lord's table for the first time. They thus by both ordinances declared themselves to be on the Lord's side; for such a declaration, they may suffer persecution. The Seminoles once had a law that any one should be whipped who had preaching at his house. I think that law is still standing. Those Seminole converts need the prayers of the Church.

In the evening we had prayer-meeting. I told Mr. Lilley I would attend, but I was too tired to take any part in it. He conducted it, and Mr. Bemo made some interesting remarks. He spoke of lately having heard an ignorant exhorter telling the people they must not mind those people who made fine speeches out of the big book, (the Old Testament) and the Testament, and the Hymn-book; but they must go according to their own hearts, &c.

Before closing the meeting, I reminded the people of Christ's words, "beware of wolves," and told them some would come as wolves, whilst others would come in sheep's clothing; and then with a short prayer and the gospel benediction, the people were dismissed. Thus closed the protracted labours of a solemn day. Much I did, was done with fear and trembling. May the Lord add his blessing, and save all who have united with that church, and add many more such unto it. I should have said before, that some were deferred until they were further taught, and had made further trial of their faith.

Mr. Templeton makes the following statement about an opening for additional missionary labours in the Creek country.

From the same centre northeast, on the other side (which is this side) of North Fork, ten miles distant, there is a town of forty-one families, and on the West side of the river, ten miles distant, there is quite a settlement of Seminoles. Two miles southeast there is also a settlement of Seminoles, which you passed through soon after leaving Mr. C.'s, and so for several miles of your zigzag course you were passing through settlements, and all around there are settlements of Creeks and Seminoles not mentioned here. Now it appears to me that this place, or somewhere near it, would be a good one for a preacher to be stationed. He would be in a half-day's ride of the Seminole mission; a half-day's ride of the interpreter's neighbourhood, where we had no meeting, on account of the excitement; a half-day's ride further up the Oyuwohka brings us to a Shawnee settlement in the Creek country, and there are settlements all along every few miles of the day's journey.

Mr. C * * * told us last summer, the people would not have preaching in that region. I suppose he does not want it. But Ward said the people were desirous to have a preacher, but there was none to preach. That region is altogether destitute of preaching. A preacher stationed there would not, I suppose, be twenty miles from the Canadian at the nearest point; and would be within one day's ride of the settlements on it for some seventy miles. He would be as accessible to the inhabitants on North Fork for as great a distance, and would be within a day's ride of Deep Fork for forty miles; and there are a good number of settlements on it.

Now there is another advantage in this point. The people are moving into the region, and it is becoming more thickly settled. If we had a preacher there, and another on Deep Fork, we could then among us occasionally visit all parts of the Creek country.

VISIT TO THE SOUTH.

After an absence of nearly two and a-half months in the Southern States, the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication reached Philadelphia again in good health and safety, just after the last number of the Record had been published. At the annual meeting of the Board, held on Tuesday, June 12th, he reported having visited during his absence the cities of Charleston, Augusta, Savannah, Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans, Memphis, and many other places. He was everywhere most hospitably and cordially received, and found everywhere a deep and growing interest in the plans and operations of the Board. Among the large numbers of intelligent and devoted ministers with whom he conferred, he found an almost unanimous conviction of the importance and indispensableness of colportage as an auxiliary in carrying forward the more thorough evangelization of the South. His own observation in the course of his journey, convinced him that this view was correct, and that in the present sparsely populated condition of wide districts there, and in the present sad scarcity of gospel ministers in those States, a large proportion of their people must depend chiefly on colporteurs for their supplies of gospel truth. The colporteur can go from hamlet to hamlet, and from dwelling to dwelling, holding social prayer-meetings; having religious conversation and prayer in the family; scattering religious tracts and volumes, full of important warning and instruction; and great multitudes may thus be reached, who would otherwise hear nothing about the interests of their souls, and an approaching eternity. The greatest difficulty in the way of extended colportage operations, in the Southern States, is found in the scarcity of suitable men to undertake the work. Still, there are men of the right sort to be found here and there among the churches, willing, in the spirit of their Master, to undertake the self-denying labour, and the pastors generally expressed a resolute intention to seek diligently for such men, and engage them for the colportage work. We trust that through their co-operation the coming year may find the Board able to commission many more colporteurs in those States.

Mr. Schenck reported also, a very general and cordial approval of the publications of the Board, throughout the South and South-west. Their general popularity exceeded his expectations, and an anxious desire was expressed in almost every place, to have them more freely and abundantly introduced into the several communities. In three or four cities, plans were agreed upon, for the establishment of depositories of the books, and arrangements were marked out, for raising the capital needed for the purchase of a sufficient stock.

The extreme Southern States were suffering severely under the pressure of the widely-extended and long-continued drought, and the pecuniary embarrassments which have of late affected more or less the whole country, yet the Southern pulpits were everywhere thrown open to a presentation of the cause of the Board of Publication, and responses were, especially considering the times, every where generously made.

The brethren at New Orleans were found earnestly at work, through their Synodical Board, in this good cause. Some time since they had purchased a very eligible building on Camp street, at a cost of $33,000, upon which nearly $18,000 had been already paid. Heavy payments were shortly about to become due, and the times made those payments difficult; but we have no doubt from the energy, and liberality, and business talent already displayed, their plans will be carried to a safe and triumphant issue. And when once their building is fully paid for, and a suitable depository of the books of the Board is established therein, and the system of colportage is fairly set in motion in connection with it, their plan will be productive of immense benefit to all the Southwestern region.

ABSTRACT OF REPORT OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The following is an abstract of the 17th Annual Report of the Board of Publication, recently presented to the General Assembly, at Nashville, Tenn., May 23d, and by it accepted and referred to the Board for publication.

The Report reviewed three departments of the operations of the Board: 1st. The Department of Production. 2nd. Of Distribution. 3d. Of Sustentation.

I. Of Production. 1st. The great object of this Board is to furnish to the Church and the world a religious literature. This literature is not to be either a substitute or a rival to the pulpit, but an auxiliary. Bible history contains many intimations, showing the propriety of making a vigorous use of the press, many of which were noted. The providence of God teaches us the same lesson. The Church must use the press in self-defence, for every evil principle is making diligent use of it. The Board of Publication is issuing and diffusing a literature which shall lead men to repentance, faith, and duty, and finally to heaven. All other objects are subordinate to this. 2d. It is an object of the Board to set out the whole system of divine truth in all its completeness. It believes that this is the likeliest way to save souls. 3d. It is another object to provide a denominational literature. While it teaches us to love all who bear the Saviour's image, it exhibits the peculiar claims of our own Zion to our love and veneration. 4. It seeks to furnish such works as may be useful to ministers of the gospel. The minds of her ministers are the fountains from which the ordinary supplies of truth are derived by the Church. Many ministers are able to purchase but very few theological works. The Board aims to supply the best, and as cheaply as possible to them. 5. It aims to supply a juvenile literature, especially a Sabbath School library. Many of the numerous religious books now published, and especially for Sabbath Schools, are very defective. The Board aims by its publications, to "feed the lambs." 6. The Board calls attention to the great variety of its publications.

The Publishing Agent reports that the Board have published during the year ending March 31, 1855, as follows:—37 new books, of which 83,750 copies have been printed; 10 new tracts, of which they have printed 23,000 copies. Total copies of new books and tracts, 148,750. Reprints of former publications, 317,700 copies. Total copies of books and tracts, 466,450. Total of copies books and tracts published since the organization of the Board, 4,954,688.

Periodicals.—Circulation of Home and Foreign Record, 17,000 copies; increase within the year, 1,750 copies. Sabbath School visitor, 41,000 copies.

II. Distribution.—173 Colporteurs have been labouring in 27 States and in the British Provinces. They have sold 97,853 volumes; given away 10,780 volumes; distributed 1,046,964 pages of tracts; number of families visited 79,092.

Donations made by the Executive Committee, 6,365 volumes, and 342,662 pages of tracts. Let the distribution of the Board continue to extend at the same rate as for the last six years, and at the end of ten years it will be found distributing annually over two and a-half millions of copies of its publications.

III. Sustentation.—Receipts for the past year from all sources, - - - - - $87,599
Total payments of past year, - - 91,319
Excess of payments, - - - - 3,719
Receipts from sales of books, - - 65,793
do. for Colportage, - - - 14,015
Balance now in Treasurer's hands, - 14,476
Deficiency of Colportage Fund, - - 4,176

The number of churches contributing to colportage is steadily increasing, although yet far too small. Very little collecting agency has been employed, and the Board has every reason to feel encouraged with the progress of the past year, and the prospects before it.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON PUBLICATION.

After the opening of the General Assembly at Nashville, the Moderator announced the following Committee on the Board of Publication, viz. Rev. Samuel Beach Jones, D. D., Rev. James T. Lapsley, Rev. M. B. Grier, Rev. E. Emerson, Rev. B. M. Smith, D. D. Ruling Elders.—Thomas Lynch, T. H. Nevin, W. S. Harris.

On Wednesday, May 23d, the Annual Report was read by the Rev. W. E. Schenck, the Corresponding Secretary of the Board, and having been accepted, was referred to the above committee.

On Monday, May 28th, the following series of resolutions, previously reported by the committee, were taken up. Dr. Jones, its chairman, stated that there was an entire unanimity among the members of the committee on all the resolutions except the fourth, which was not adopted.

Resolved, 1. That our ministers and elders be earnestly exhorted to secure a wide circulation to the Home and Foreign Record, now published at so reduced a price as to make it accessible to the poorest members of our Church.

Resolved, 2. That this Assembly regards with much satisfaction the efforts of the Board to provide a class of books appropriate to the wants of ministers, and also a choice collection of volumes suitable for Sunday-school Libraries. It would also renew its recommendation of the Visitor, believing it to be a valuable supplement to this department of our religious literature.

Resolved, 3. That we commend the policy of the Board, in increasing, during the past year, the amount of donations of books to seminaries of learning, indigent ministers, and others; and we recommend the continuance of the same policy to the utmost extent compatible with the finances of the Board.

Resolved, 4. That the Board be instructed to prepare, with as much expedition as practicable, a collection of Tunes and Hymns, together with a system of instruction adapted to the young; in order, by this means, to promote the cultivation of sacred music by our youth, and to facilitate the use of this delightful part of devotional service in family worship; and in making this collection, the Board is authorized to add to such tunes and hymns as may be adopted from the "Psalmodist," one-third as many more to be selected at its discretion. (Afterwards laid on the table.)

Resolved, 5. That the success attendant on the labours of our colporteurs calls for gratitude to the Head of the Church; and that we exhort all our churches and ministers to co-operate in this important department of labour, both by making annual collections for the Colporteur Fund, and by furnishing every facility for the thorough visitation of all our congregations by our colporteurs.

Resolved, 6. That we regard with special gratification the resolution of the Reformed Dutch Church to adopt and place its "imprimatur" on a portion of the volumes issued by our Board; and we hereby authorize the use of the German Hymn Book, prepared by the Reformed Dutch Church, in the German congregations belonging to our own branch of the Church.

Resolved, 7. That the matter of translating our Confession of Faith into the German language, be left to the discretion of the Board of Publication, and that it be recommended to increase the number of tracts, in the German language, already issued by our Church.

Resolved, 8. That the Board be authorized to make a selection, not exceeding fifty in number, from Rouse's version of the Psalms, and to have the same printed on separate sheets, in such forms as to admit of their being bound up with our other Psalms and Hymns, whenever desired.

Resolved, 9. That a preacher be appointed by this and ensuing Assemblies, to deliver a discourse before each General Assembly, in behalf of the Board of Publication, and the cause it is designed to promote.

While these resolutions, so unanimously and cordially adopted by the Assembly, will undoubtedly inspire the Board and its executive officers with new zeal and courage in their appointed work, it is also to be hoped they will produce their legitimate effect in increasing the confidence of the churches at large, and securing their fuller co-operation with the Board of Publication.

The first resolution is timely, and we trust will be effective. The terms for the Record are now so exceedingly low that it is a matter for amazement that any member of any of our churches who feels any interest in the world's conversion, and in the plans and efforts of his own church to promote it, can willingly do without it; or that any pastor who desires to instil a spirit of Christlike benevolence into the hearts of his people will fail to secure its general introduction among the families of his charge. The increase in its circulation last year was 1,750 copies. A little effort on the part of pastors and elders would enable us next year to report a much larger increase.

The second resolution likewise will do good. The Board has of late given much attention to making suitable provision for the libraries of ministers and of Sabbath-schools. A considerable proportion of its issues within the last two years have been adapted to the use of children and youth. The Sabbath-school Library of the Board now numbers 139 volumes, and may be purchased at catalogue prices for $27.20 in half-roan binding, or at cash discount prices for $20.15. For the use of Presbyterian Sabbath-schools it may be safely said to be the very best that has ever been published. It is becoming more and more popular as it becomes better known. We wish to invite the attention of those who hold the pen of a ready writer, to the question, whether they may not do much good by furnishing the Board with suitable volumes for this library. The Sabbath-school Visitor also deserves an introduction to the children of every Presbyterian family.

We would especially invite the attention of pastors and churches to the fifth resolution, relating to colportage. The results of the past year in this department of the operations of the Board have been truly gratifying. The 173 colporteurs who have been in the field within the year, have in general been, we are well assured, men of faith, and prayer, and toil. Now and then we are indeed disappointed in those whom we commission. But as none are appointed without satisfactory recommendations, so in general they are found faithful and judicious labourers. Although during the past year, owing to the pecuniary embarrassments of the times, a somewhat smaller sum was contributed for colportage than in the year previous, yet there were twenty-five more colporteurs in commission, the number of volumes sold by them was 5,968 greater, the number of volumes given away was 1,199 greater, and the number of pages of tracts distributed by them was 175,417 greater than in the preceding year. The number of families visited was likewise 13,358 greater than in the year before. Let us hope that the churches and pastors generally, will comply with the recommendation of this fifth resolution.

The adoption of the eighth resolution by the Assembly will afford gratification to many who love the version of Rouse. The Board has already taken measures to secure a careful selection, which will be printed at the earliest practicable day.

The ninth and last resolution is one of much importance. Notwithstanding all that has been said and printed on the subject, many in our Church are only half awake to the great and growing importance of the work committed to the Board of Publication. An annual sermon before the Assembly cannot fail to have an important influence in calling attention to the mighty power of the press, and the vast importance of our using it as a Church, in diffusing and establishing the truth as we hold it. The Rev. Samuel Beach Jones, D. D., of Bridgeton, N. J., was subsequently appointed by the Assembly to preach the sermon on behalf of the Board of Publication next year in New York, during the sessions of the Assembly.

THE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

By reference to the resolutions of the General Assembly, published in this number of the Record, it will be seen that that body gave its cordial approval to the action of the Board in giving away last year so large a number of volumes, and recommended a "continuance of the same policy to the utmost extent compatible with the finances of the Board." The views and wishes of the Board are entirely in accordance with the spirit of this resolution of the Assembly. But in order to carry it into effect it must call upon the churches for the means to do so.

The Distribution Fund, from which these donations of volumes are made, is at present entirely exhausted, and somewhat overdrawn. And, while this is the case, not a week is passing in which the Executive Committee is not receiving appeals for donations, many of them of a very touching kind. Several applications of this kind the committee have been obliged to defer answering.

We now have before us a letter just received from a domestic missionary, who is labouring on the St. Croix River, in the far Northwestern part of Wisconsin, in a new and growing community, earnestly soliciting a grant of the books of the Board for the Sabbath-school he has just been establishing there. He expresses his earnest conviction that such a donation would give him great aid in building up the cause of Christ, and in promoting the interests of the Presbyterian Church now just commenced. But, as has just been said, the committee has at present no funds from which to make the earnestly desired donation.

Are there not some readers of the Record who will rejoice to send in a contribution to this Fund, that thus we may be enabled to gladden the hearts of those who are looking to us for the gift of that truth which may make themselves and those around them, wise unto salvation?

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

There is in the southern part of New Jersey a pleasant and flourishing congregation, which has for many years been among the largest in its Presbytery, and has not been behind in any good work. It was, too, a liberal and benevolent congregation. In the statistical tables appended to the Minutes of the General Assembly, there regularly appeared a fair sum, as compared with the other churches of the Presbytery, entered as given to three of the four Boards of the Church. But there was from year to year one ugly blank in its reports, and that blank was in the column devoted to the Board of Publication. Why this was, we have no information. Sure we are that neither the pastor, nor his elders, nor his people would have been willing to say that it was not the duty of the Church of Christ to make use of the mighty power of the printing press to disseminate divine truth. Sure we are they would have been willing all along to admit that the same truth, in all its purity and urgency, which they felt that the pastor ought to preach from the pulpit, and they ought to teach in their families and in their Sabbath-schools, ought also to be diffused through the press, that thus it might reach thousands, and hundreds of thousands who were not likely to receive it in any other way. Sure we are, too, that if they looked over the columns of the Record from month to month, they must have seen enough to convince them that the volumes and tracts of the Board of Publication, as scattered by the hands of colporteurs, and as donated by the Executive Committee, were attended by the blessing of the Holy Spirit, and were doing good far and wide. What was the reason this ugly blank thus remained, year after year, we cannot guess. But to our great delight, a week or two ago a roll was put into our hands, on opening which we found it to contain a number of bank notes, a very generous contribution from that very church for the colportage operations of the Board. Accompanying the money was a note from the pastor of the church, stating that the subject had recently been presented to his people and they had determined to make a beginning on behalf of this cause. The ladies of the church had taken hold of the cause with much interest, and with their efficient co-operation the very handsome sum now forwarded had been collected. This sum will be large enough to send several hundreds of volumes and thousands of pages of tracts into some locality in our broad land, where, with an accompanying blessing from on high, they may result in the salvation of many souls.

We rejoice to think that in the Minutes of 1856, that ugly blank will be filled up, and we think the pastor, and the elders, and those ladies, and all the congregation who see the figures there, will feel something more than a foolish vanity, or an unhallowed pride. Those figures will be to them the exponents of service attempted for Christ and for souls, and of benevolent feelings called into exercise, and bringing in themselves a rich reward, but only a shadow of a better reward to be received through grace hereafter. And we trust there will not be wanting a purpose to let that blank never re-appear, but to have the figures there, only growing larger and larger, from year to year.

There are yet many other blanks, opposite a very melancholy proportion of the three thousand churches, or nearly so, upon the tables. Will not some of those churches follow without delay, the excellent example of the church in New Jersey, of which we have been writing?

American Bible Society.—The monthly meeting of the Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Thursday, the 7th inst., the Hon. Luther Bradish in the chair, assisted by Wm. B. Crosby, Benjamin L. Swan, and Francis Hall, Esqs.

Thirteen new Societies were recognized; of which one is in Oregon, four in Illinois, two in Arkansas, three in Texas, and one in each of the States of Georgia, South Carolina, and Kentucky.

Various interesting communications were read; among them was one from Rev. Mr. Cunningham, of Shanghai, stating that the missionaries are again enabled to pursue their work of preaching and distributing the Scriptures; one from the Secretary of the Hibernian Bible Society, containing the address of the Committee on the occasion of its jubilee year; from Matanzas, a letter containing a request for books; from Rev. James Barnett, acknowledging the receipt of funds from this Board to purchase and distribute Arabic Scriptures; a letter from Caraccas, Venezuela, signed by influential persons, expressing a desire to have a Protestant Church and clergyman in that city; a letter from the French and Foreign Bible Society, giving a statement of their issues for the year past, describing their work, and asking further aid from this Society; a letter from Vincenzo Alboretta, Turin, in relation to the publication of evangelical books in that city; another from Col. Tronchin, Geneva, in regard to publishing the New Testament for Italy; and from the Rev. C. N. Righter, Constantinople, in regard to the proposed Bible depot and reading-room in that city, stating the improving prospects of the Christian cause in that country, and the increasing interest of the Turks in the Bible.

Several interesting letters were presented from agents, showing the state and progress of the cause in our own country, in different States and Territories. Grants of books were made to the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to the Children's Aid Society, for coloured Sabbath Schools in Louisville, Ky., for the use of people of colour in Ohio; Bibles and Testaments in French and English for Hayti; Bibles and Testaments for Fort Myers, Fla.; several grants to Sabbath Schools in destitute neighbourhoods, and to feeble auxiliaries; Spanish Bibles for Cuba; and one Bible (8 vols.) for the Blind. A grant in money was made of $250, towards the expense of the reading-room and depot at Constantinople.

Peoria, Ill.—Alexander G. Tyng, Esq., son of Rev. Dr. Tyng. of New York, has presented to the Episcopal church in Peoria, the sum of twenty-four hundred dollars, to be paid in eight annual instalments of three hundred dollars each, "to be expended under the direction of the Rector of the Parish in purchasing a Theological Library, to be for ever the property of the church, and for the use and under the direction of the Rector.

Dr. Boardman's Discourse.—The sermon of Dr. Boardman, the Moderator of the previous Assembly, preached at the opening of the sessions of the General Assembly of the (O. S.) Presbyterian Church, in Nashville, Tennessee, is spoken of on all hands as an able and elaborate argument to prove that the Christian ministry is not a priesthood. We have just read the discourse published in the Nashville True Whig, and regard it as comprehensive, masterly, and timely. Its effect on the Assembly could not but be happy, and its influence wherever it is read must be good. He occupies scriptural ground, and has proved his position to be not only defensible but impregnable. His well earned popularity will be enhanced by the present discourse. We wish it may be extensively read.—Presbyterian Witness.

Rev. Jonathan Edwards, of Fort Wayne, was, on the 10th ult., unanimously elected President of Hanover College.

John B. Gough, the temperance lecturer, is expected to leave Great Britain for America, about the first of August. He is engaged to speak the ensuing fall in New Jersey.

Massachusetts Bible Society.—Anniversary on Monday, the 28th ult. The Society have distributed, during the past year, 15,671 Bibles, and 29,197 Testaments; total, 44,868. This was an increase on the issues of the preceding year of 9,283. The income of the Society was $21,204. Of this, $8,084 was by donations, and $1,466 by legacies. The expenditures had been $21,711, donations to the Parent Society $3,610.

Foreign Ecclesiastics.—A correspondent of the New York Express states that all the Bishops recently stting in Provincial Council at Baltimore, were foreigners—there was not one American among them.

The anniversary of the Massachusetts Colonization Society was held on Tuesday, the 29th ult. The Rev. Joseph Tracy, the Secretary, read the report, from which it appears that the receipts for the year ending April 30th, had been $16,406. Besides this increase of the funds, the Trustees of Donations for Education in Liberia, which this Society has called into existence, commencing in 1851, has collected more than $20,000 for the establishment of a College in Liberia. This afforded good ground for hope for the future. The disbursements were $16,715, making a balance due to the treasurer of $206. The Society has also provided repeatedly for the emigration of slaves set free by their masters, to the Western coast of Africa. It is in this way it has conferred freedom, or rather the means of enjoying it, on several hundreds.

Rev. Charles Wiley, D. D., for the past ten years the pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church in Utica, N. Y., has accepted the Presidency of the Milwaukie University.

The Executive Committee of the American Baptist Missionary Union, state that the gross income for the year has fallen $33,000 below the expenditure, and the Union is embarrassed with a debt of $60,000.

All the members of the Syracuse Annual Conference—Wesleyan Methodists—pledged themselves at a recent session to abstain entirely from smoking, chewing, and snuffing tobacco.

In Glasgow and Edinburgh, and in other parts of Scotland, where a Romish population is found, there is a general and happy movement going forward for making known the gospel to Romanists; tracts are prepared and distributed; theological students spend their long vacations in labouring for them, and associations are formed for the support of such movements.

The American Missionaries whose houses in Shanghai have been damaged and destroyed by the war, have been paid for them by the Chinese government.

HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME VI. No. 7.—Extra. | PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1855. | PRICE PER YEAR. Fifty Cents.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THE Executive Committee would begin their report with a grateful acknowledgment of the favor of God towards the work under their charge during the last year. The proofs of the Divine blessing on this work will abundantly appear, and will best be shown, by the narrative now to be made—in which the usual arrangement of subjects will be followed.

FINANCES.

The receipts from all sources, as stated in the Treasurer's Report, have been	$182,806 65
To which add balance from last year,	1,267 52
	$184,074 17
The expenses, as shown in the same Report, have been	175,705 10
Leaving a general balance in the Treasury of	$8,369 07
Of which, unexpended balance of moneys arising from the sale of the Omaha Reservation, and appropriated to Indian Missions in Kansas and Nebraska,	8,282 00
Leaving a balance in the Treasury for the general purposes of the Board, of	$87 07

In making this report of the receipts, the Committee desire to call attention to the encouraging fact, that the amount of contributions made by the churches, in annual and monthly concert collections, is larger than the sum acknowledged from these sources in any former year. This is the more worthy of special notice, inasmuch as no collecting agents have been in the service of the Board during the year, while the year itself has been one of severe pecuniary pressure in the business operations of the country. The aggregate amount of the receipts is larger also than was reported last year, although smaller sums were received from the American Bible and Tract Societies, and from miscellaneous donors.

As in former years, a number of useful and valuable donations of clothing, for the mission schools among the Indians and in Africa, have been received from the ladies of different churches. A larger supply of clothing could be turned to good account, for which application is respectfully made to ladies who have not yet aided in this good work.

PUBLICATIONS.

The Home and Foreign Record continues to be published as the organ of the different Boards of the Church. The number of copies, and the expenses and receipts of this paper, will be reported by the Board of Publication, at whose office it is published.

Of the Foreign Missionary, 20,000 copies are published in newspaper form, and 3,250 in pamphlet form. Of the pamphlet edition 2,547 copies are sent free to ministers and donors of $10 and upwards.

Of the last Annual Report, 3,550 copies were published in pamphlet form, and 16,500 copies in newspaper form, as an extra number of the Record.

A circular letter addressed to ministers on the subject of church contributions, and another concerning the endowment of a theological faculty in the Waldensian college at La Tour, were also published.

From the Presbyterian Board of Publication, the American Bible Society, and the American Tract Society, donations of their respective publications have been received, and some books from private donors, for the use of the different missions and schools.

MISSIONARIES AND ASSISTANT MISSIONARIES SENT OUT.

To North India, seven; to Siam, two; to the Chickasaw Indians, three; to the Choctaws, one; to the Creeks, five; to the Iowas and Sacs, three; to the Omahas, two; to the Ottawas and Chippewas, five. The names of these missionaries and assistant missionaries will appear in connection with their respective Missions.

AGENCIES.

For the collection of funds, as already stated, no agents have been employed during the last year.

The Secretaries of the Board have attended the meetings of several ecclesiastical bodies, and preached in a few churches when their collections were made. Some of the returned missionary brethren have also spent some time in preaching on the subject of Missions.

In some of the Presbyteries, voluntary agents were appointed by their brethren to take the general oversight of missionary collections in their respective bounds. By exchanges, correspondence, &c., these Presbyterial agents have done much to secure contributions from the congregations; and the expense of their agency is considered a proper charge on the funds of the Board. This plan is simple, inexpensive, little burdensome to the agent, and capable of being made an efficient means of increasing the interest of the churches in the cause of Missions. While the Committee would respectfully recommend it to the consideration of Presbyteries for adoption wherever advisable, they would at the same time express their conviction that the main hope of obtaining pecuniary support, sympathy, and prayer for this cause must ever rest on the Sessions, and especially on the Ministers, of the churches. It is in their power to let this work of Christ be in a great measure neglected in their respective congregations; or, on the other hand, to inculcate scriptural views of duty concerning the spread of the Gospel, to promote the circulation of missionary intelligence, to have collections made at suitable times, to sustain the monthly concert meeting of prayer, and in general to foster a missionary spirit amongst the members of their several charges. In many of the churches these things are faithfully performed, as their noble gifts plainly declare. In others, peculiar circumstances may have hindered the exercise of Christian liberality towards this work. But in the absence of contributions to it, year after year, by many churches, and by many members in contributing churches, the Committee are grieved to recognize the evidence that much is yet to be done to secure for it a proper place in the hearts of the people of God.

Northern Indians.

CHIPPEWA AND OTTAWA MISSION.

GRAND TRAVERSE.—Rev. Peter Dougherty and Mrs. Dougherty; Mr. John Porter, Mrs. Porter, and Miss W. A. Isbell, teachers; Mr. Joseph Glenn, farmer; Mrs. McConnel, assistant in domestic affairs; and Mr. Grensky, interpreter.

LITTLE TRAVERSE.—Mr. Andrew Porter, Mrs. Porter, and Miss Ann Porter teachers.

MIDDLE VILLAGE.—Mr. J. G. Turner and wife, teachers.

Several changes have been made in the different families connected with these stations during the year. Miss H. L. Cowles was released from her connection with the Mission, at her own request, last spring. Her withdrawal from the missionary work was much regretted by her associates. Mr. John Porter and his wife, Mr. Joseph Glenn and Mrs. McConnel, all of Butler Co., Pa., were appointed to the station at Grand Traverse, and entered upon their respective duties in the early part of October. Mr. Andrew Porter and Mr. Turner were both absent from their stations a few weeks during the summer, the latter on account of his wife's enfeebled health, and the former on a visit to his friends in Pennsylvania, where he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Glenn, and soon after returned to his station at Little Traverse.

The boarding-school at Grand Traverse has continued in active operation during the year. After the withdrawal of Miss Cowles in the Spring, Mr. Dougherty undertook the instruction of the male department, and continued it until the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Porter, in the Autumn. The average number of pupils has been forty-five, of whom nearly one-half are females. The more advanced pupils not only read and write with facility, but are making very creditable progress in the study of geography and arithmetic, and are at the same time treasuring up much Scripture knowledge, which, it is hoped, will be blessed to their spiritual welfare and everlasting salvation. In relation to the capacity of these children for intellectual improvement, Mr. Dougherty remarks:

"The children generally have been attentive to their studies, and have made commendable improvement. Their capacity to acquire knowledge seems to be quite as good as that of white children in similar circumstances."

Special attention is given to training these children, both male and female, to habits of industry, order, and cleanliness. In relation to this, Mr. Dougherty remarks:

"Out of school, the boys are taught the various arts of husbandry, whilst the girls are taught sewing, knitting, washing, and other household duties; comparatively little attention being given to those things that are merely ornamental, and that would be of little practical value in future life."

No report has been received of the state of the church at Grand Traverse. The number of church members the last year was thirty-two. The attendance upon religious services has uniformly been good, and the knowledge which the people are acquiring of the Word of God is not only exerting a palpable good influence upon their outward conduct and moral character, but will, there is reason to hope, be blessed to their spiritual good and everlasting salvation.

In relation to the temporal welfare and prospects of the Indians in the neighborhood of Grand Traverse, Mr. Dougherty writes:

"Most of them have purchased lands in the neighborhood of the Mission, and are clearing their lands, and preparing themselves comfortable habitations. Meetings are kept up regularly at the mission station on Sabbath, for their religious instruction. The attendance is good, and they are gradually improving in habits of sobriety, industry, and economy; and, since they have become settled on their own lands, they seem contented, and very desirous of improving their outward condition."

The school at Little Traverse has been continued without interruption during the year, with the exception of a few weeks in the Summer, when Mr. Porter was absent. There have been as many as forty pupils in the school, but the average attendance has not been more than thirty. Something more than the third of the pupils can now read and write with ease, and are acquiring some knowledge of arithmetic. Great inconvenience is felt, however, from the want of suitable text books in the Chippewa language, especially in connection with the study of arithmetic; and the progress of the children must necessarily be slow, until they have acquired a better knowledge of the English. Mr. Porter has held religious meetings for the adult population on the Sabbath, the attendance upon which has generally been from seventy to eighty. The people manifest a growing interest in these meetings, notwithstanding the constant and persevering efforts of the Roman Catholic priests in the same vicinity, to prejudice their minds against the missionaries, and to keep them away from their instructions. This would not be so much lamented, if the priests themselves were giving them any correct knowledge of the Gospel; but, unfortunately, it is here as it is everywhere else that they carry on missionary operations,—the people are merely taught to reverence their priests, and have little or no knowledge of the way of salvation.

The school at Middle Village has also been continued without interruption during the year, with the exception of a few weeks' absence of Mr. and Mrs. Turner in the Summer. The number of pupils has varied from twenty-five to thirty; and, although it has been but a comparatively short period since this school was commenced, as many as fifteen of the pupils are already able to read and write, and are making creditable progress in the study of arithmetic.

Mr. Turner has had religious meetings for the people on the Sabbath; the exercises of which have consisted of singing, prayer, and in reading and explaining the Scriptures. These meetings have been well attended when he has had an interpreter, and especially the evening meetings; and their influence, it is believed, is beginning to be felt among the people for good.

In relation to the outward improvement of the Indians around him, Mr. Turner remarks:

"Many of them raised large quantities of potatoes the last season, enough not only for their own consumption, but they have a good many for sale; and many of them are now making extensive preparations to cultivate wheat the coming season."

That portion of Chippewa and Ottawa Indians, living in the State of Michigan, are not numerous, compared with some of the larger tribes of the south-western Indian territory; but a large portion of them are scattered along the north-eastern shores of Lake Michigan, in the immediate vicinity of the stations of the Board, and they are in a position just now most favorable for improvement, both in a temporal and spiritual point of view; and there would seem to be an urgent call of Providence for the enlargement of the operations of the Board among them at the present time.

The Committee have recently received written applications from the chiefs and principal men of three of their largest villages to establish schools among them, and they would gladly comply with these requests, if men of suitable qualifications could be found to undertake these schools, and the means were furnished. There is also an urgent call for a minister of the Gospel, to labor among these people, and the Committee are not without hope that this call will meet with a response the present Summer.

The great danger to which these Indians are now exposed, is that they may be drawn into vicious and intemperate habits by the tide of white population, which, year by year, is drawing near to them, and must ultimately sweep them entirely away, unless they are speedily trained to habits of industry, and have their minds fortified by religious principle, so as to be able to withstand the coming flood of vice and intemperance.

The Church should bear in mind, that what is done to enlighten and to save these poor Indians, if it would avail anything, must be done speedily and energetically, and no pains or expense ought to be spared to bring them under the influence of the Gospel as soon as possible.

North-Western Indians.

IOWA AND SAC MISSION.

Rev. S. M. Irvin, Rev. William McCain, Mr. James Williams, farmer and teacher, and their wives; Miss Sarah J. Willson.

Mr. McCain joined this Mission the early part of February, and Miss Willson was expected to be there as soon as the river became navigable. The mission family have enjoyed good health, and their missionary labors have been carried on without material interruption.

These two tribes, since the last Annual Report, ceded to the United States about three-fourths of the land they claimed in the Territory of Kansas, and upon which they have resided since 1836, reserving, however, to each tribe about fifty sections. The portion ceded to the United States had become of comparatively little value to themselves. It afforded no advantage as a hunting-ground, as the game had long since disappeared, and there was four times as much as they needed for agricultural purposes. The price paid by Government was a full equivalent for the land ceded, and will be sufficient to open and stock their farms on the new reservation, enable them to erect comfortable cabins, and to procure supplies of food and clothes for at least one year. This fund will also be sufficient to defray the expenses of the education of their children in boarding schools. A contract has been entered into with the Indian Department, which has the control of these funds, for the education of the children of both of these tribes; and as their new reservations are quite near to the large and commodious buildings of the Mission, the children of both may attend as boarders with perfect convenience. The new contract provides for the education of fifty Iowas and twenty Sacs, seventy in all, and went into operation the 1st of January. As many of the Indians will not get settled on their new reservations before mid-summer, however, the school may not probably get into full operation before that time.

This Mission, and that at Omaha also, were visited last Autumn by the senior Secretary of the Board. The object of his visit was to advise in relation to the future locations of these tribes, and to adjust the missionary operations of the Board among them to their new and altered circumstances. An account of this visit was published in the December number of the Home and Foreign Record, and is recommended to the perusal of those who feel a particular interest in these Missions. The following extract will give the writer's views of the state and prospects of the school at the time of his visit:

The School of the Iowas.—"I gave the school a careful examination, and was pleased and encouraged with the result. The children here, as well as among the Omahas, appear to have no difficulty with the English aspirates. In the southern tribes, the tendency is to use d for th. Their reading and spelling were very good, and they have no difficulty in learning to write. They are well advanced in grammar, are greatly interested in geography, but are slow, and many of them dull, in learning arithmetic. In committing to memory portions of Scripture, Psalms, and Hymns, and the Shorter Catechism, they excel any school I ever visited. One girl about eleven years of age, had committed to memory the whole of the 119th Psalm; one boy had learned the first fourteen Psalms: I heard him recite four of them, but had not time to hear more. The larger scholars recited the Shorter Catechism without missing a word, and all who could read at all, were going through the whole. At this school, also, are five girls just becoming young women. Three of them are consistent members of the church. There is a young man named Kirwan Murray, a former pupil of the school, of the most pleasing and promising manners and deportment. He is industrious, and is now working at the agency, where he receives sixteen dollars a month and his boarding. He lodges, and spends his Sabbath at the Mission. The ten girls, at the two schools, would compare favorably with respectable white girls anywhere. They have had the best training, under Mrs. Hamilton and Mrs. Irvin. Most of them are orphans, and have no home but the Mission. The smaller boys and girls are exceedingly promising children."

Four months subsequent to the date of this communication, Mr. Irvin gives the following account of the school:

"We have now between sixty and seventy scholars. A class of four Indians are studying Latin, twelve are in English Grammar, fourteen in Geography, and twenty in Arithmetic. Composition and declamation are also attended to."

"I trust, with God's blessing, we shall soon have some respectable scholars, and that our friends who have prayed for us, and supported us these many years, will yet see that their generous efforts have not been altogether misdirected."

The children are trained to work as well as to learn. The farm, which has been managed with great success, affords full employment for the boys, when not engaged at their studies; and the girls are carefully trained to every department of housewifery.

Nor has the Mission been without some special tokens of the divine presence and blessing. At the last communion four persons applied for admission to the church, two of whom are Indian youths connected with the school, but it was thought advisable that their admission be deferred to a future occasion. It was thought, also, that much seriousness existed among the older members of the school.

Mr. Irvin mentions in the same communication, that many of the white immigrants who had arrived in that part of the country, were desirous of settling as near to the Mission premises as possible, with the view of enjoying greater religious privileges, thus bearing honorable testimony to the good influence of the Mission in general, and at the same time bespeaking much future good to the Indians in being surrounded by a sober and serious-minded class of white persons.

OMAHA MISSION.

Rev. William Hamilton, Mr. James Dillett, teacher, Mr. David Jones, farmer, and their wives; Miss Martha J. Fullerton, teacher.

Miss Mary E. Woods, at her own request, and chiefly on account of the want of health, has been released from her connection with the Mission.

Miss Fullerton has been appointed a teacher to this mission, and is expected to be at the station and enter upon her duties as soon as the river becomes navigable. The mission family have enjoyed good health, but their labors have been partially interrupted by the preparations that have been made for the removal of the Omahas to a different location.

The Omahas have also entered into a treaty with the Government, by which they have ceded their claims to a large district of country in the Nebraska Territory to the United States, reserving for themselves as much as they will need for agricultural purposes. Their condition and prospects are not unlike those of the Iowas and Sacs, with the exception that their reservation has not yet been designated. A contract has been formed with the Indian Department for the education of the children of the Omahas on the same general plan with that entered into for the Iowas and Sacs. Suitable buildings will be needed for the school, as soon as their reservation is selected; until these are provided, the school will be continued at Bellevue as heretofore. It was to have been opened according to contract on the 1st of January; and in order to provide for the increased number of Omaha children, the Pawnee, Sioux, Punca, and Blackfeet children, nineteen in all, were removed to the Iowa Mission, where the large mission buildings afford ample accommodations to receive them. In January and February the hooping-cough became very prevalent among the Omaha children, and their parents were unwilling for them to go to the school until they got well. The delay in fixing the location of the Omahas has been the occasion of uneasiness and disquietude, and has also contributed to prevent the school from going into full operation; and apprehensions are entertained that it may not be carried on very steadily and efficiently, until the people are quietly settled at their new homes. Efficient measures are in progress by the Indian Department to have their reservation marked out as soon as possible. The missionaries and teachers are on the ground, and will be ready to enter upon their labors as soon as the situation and circumstances of the people will allow them to do so.

The following extract from the report just referred to, will give a satisfactory view of the state of the school at the time it was written:

The School of the Omahas.—"I gave the school as careful an examination as my other engagements would permit. I found it in a prosperous condition. One of the boys is now a young man, and five of the girls are young women. At this Mission, none of the scholars have joined the church, but the larger ones are deeply serious, and their conduct and deportment, their manners and intelligence, would compare favorably with those of their own age anywhere. The smaller scholars of both sexes are quite promising; and if they are continued in the school, the best results will follow. At present there are in the school ten Omahas, three Otoes, sixteen Pawnees, six Sioux, four Blackfeet, three Puncas—twenty-six boys, and sixteen girls. These children from the different tribes may yet be a great blessing to their degraded relatives." [Some of these were subsequently transferred to the Iowa school.]

In the treaty formed by the Government and the Omahas, a reservation of six hundred and forty acres, including the present mission buildings and improvements, was made in favor of the Mission. This land, from its peculiar and advantageous situation, has become very valuable, but will not be needed for missionary purposes after the Indians are removed to their new location. The Board have taken measures for the disposal of it, the proceeds of which will be sacredly devoted to promoting the cause of education and religion among the Indian tribes in this region of country, many of whom have no funds whatever to devote to the education of their children.

The Otoes, who have heretofore been interested in the missionary operations at Bellevue, have also entered into a contract with Government, by which they have ceded the principal part of their lands, and will soon remove to their reservation, about sixty miles from their former residence on the Platte River. The Board has entered into an agreement with the Department to establish a school for their children also. Buildings will have to be provided, however, and it will require some time to do this. In the meantime, provision has been made to receive as many of them as possible at the Iowa station.

The missionary force necessary to carry on this new station has not yet been provided, but the hope is entertained that laborers will be secured during the present Summer, and the Mission will go into operation as soon as the necessary buildings are completed.

South-Western Indians.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The county now known as the Indian Territory, is situated to the West of the State of Arkansas. It is bounded on the East by Arkansas, on the South and West by Texas, and on the North by the newly-organized territory of Kansas. In size it does not differ materially from the State of Arkansas. A large portion of it consists of rich prairie land, equally well adapted to pasturage or agriculture. It is well watered, fertile and healthy; and under proper culture, may become one of the choicest portions of North America.

The principal Indian tribes residing in this territory are the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Chickasaws, and Choctaws.

The Cherokees have a population of something more than 25,000, the Creeks 20,000, the Chickasaws 7,000, and the Choctaws about the same as the Cherokees. All of these tribes have made considerable progress in civilization. Most of them live on farms that are cultivated and well stocked with domestic animals. They are as much in advance of the smaller tribes scattered over the north and north-west in point of education, general intelligence, sober and industrious habits, and all the arts of civilized life, as they are in point of population.

For a short period after their removal to their present location, they were greatly dispirited, and there were other evidences of retrogression that occasioned no little anxiety to those who were laboring to promote their general welfare. But of late years, there has been a decided change for the better. The climate has proved to be healthy. The soil yields more abundantly than the lands they formerly occupied on the opposite side of the Mississippi. The rich prairies enable them to raise almost any quantity of live stock, and their advantages of education for their children are even greater than they formerly were; and being more remote from an overshadowing white population, they have been enabled to develop their national character more fully and efficiently than they could ever have done in their former locality.

Compared among themselves, the Cherokees and Choctaws have made the greatest attainments in civilization; but the Creeks and Chickasaws are more industrious, have entered more extensively into agricultural pursuits, and their future prospects are quite as promising as either of the others.

A large part of the annuities that were formerly paid to these tribes by the United States Government, for the lands they abandoned on the East side of the Mississippi, have of late years been, by a vote of their Legislative Councils, devoted to the purposes of education, the beneficial effects of which, upon the people at large, are beginning to show themselves in a great many ways; and if these funds continue to be applied to this object with skill and judiciousness, they must produce still greater results, and fit these tribes, before a very distant day, to be placed on a footing of perfect civil and social equality with the surrounding white population.

The Board have missions among the Creeks, Seminoles, the Chickasaws, and the Choctaws, all of which have been visited by one of the Secretaries of the Board during the year; and extracts from his report may, with propriety, be introduced into the annual report on these different Missions.

CREEK MISSION.

Tallahassee.—Rev. R. M. Loughridge and Mrs. Loughridge; Mr. William S. Robertson, principal teacher; Mrs. Robertson, Misses Elizabeth and Naomi Diament, Miss Mary Price, teachers; Miss Nancy Thompson and Mrs. Elizabeth Reid, superintendents of domestic affairs; Mr. Elias Golde, farmer, and his wife.

Kowetah.—Rev. William H. Templeton and Mrs. Templeton; Miss Clara Stanislaus, teacher.

Several changes have taken place in the families connected with these stations. Mr. Alexander McCune, whose name was mentioned in the last Annual Report, was attacked by hemorrhage of the lungs in the Spring, which so reduced his strength, that he found it necessary to withdraw from the Mission, and return to his friends in New York. The change of climate produced no favorable change in the disease, and after a few months of continued illness, during which he manifested the utmost patience and resignation, the spirit took its flight to a better world. He was greatly beloved by his Missionary associates, and the tidings of his death was received at the station with real grief and sorrow. Rev. Wm. H. Templeton and Miss C. M. Workman, both of the Kowetah station, were united in marriage the 1st of January.

Misses Elizabeth and Naomi Diament and Miss Mary Price, the two former from New Jersey and the latter from Virginia, were appointed teachers for the school at Tallahassee, which place they reached the latter part of October, and immediately entered upon their labors. Mr. Elias Golde was appointed farmer for this station, and reached there the same time.

There has been much sickness among the people living around these stations, especially during the Winter, but the mission families have been mercifully preserved, both from sickness and death.

The only case of serious sickness that has occurred among the pupils at Tallahassee was that of an interesting Indian girl, by the name of Grace Leeds, of whose life and death a most interesting account is given in the Foreign Missionary for February.

The school at Tallahassee has been continued throughout the year without interruption; and since the arrival of the new teachers, which made the teaching department complete, it has been carried on with increased vigor and activity. The whole number of pupils is eighty, being the number stipulated for in the contract between the Board and the Creek Council, and of an equal number of either sex. All of the pupils in this institution, with the exception of a few who have been connected with it only for a short time, can read and write, both in the English and Muskogee languages, with tolerable ease. A large proportion of them have made very good progress in arithmetic, geography, English grammar, and composition.

A smaller number are making good progress in algebra, in addition to the above studies. Special attention is given to the religious instruction of the children. They are not only thoroughly taught the Shorter Catechism, but are required daily to commit a verse or more of Scripture to memory—a practice which can scarcely fail to exert a most salutary influence upon their present character and conduct, as well as their future lives. Both sexes are carefully trained to habits of industry, both in the prosecution of their studies and the out-door duties of common life. The boys work two hours on the farm every day, and do it with marked cheerfulness. The girls are taught to sew, knit, wash, and iron, and all other kinds of labor pertaining to domestic life.

The following extracts from the Report above referred to, will give the writer's views of the character and deportment of the pupils, and engagements of the teachers and others connected with the Mission:

"But with nothing was I more favorably impressed than the quiet and orderly deportment of the children, both in and out of school, the cleanliness of their persons, and their cheerful and pleasant countenances. The fact is, this institution is laying the foundation of a better state of society among the Creeks, social, intellectual, and religious, than anything they have ever before known, and it is very gratifying to perceive that the people themselves are beginning to appreciate its importance, and feel more desirous than ever before, to have their children enjoy the benefits of education. This institution was commenced, and is still carried on under the general superintendence of Mr. Loughridge, who is eminently qualified by his executive talents, his conciliatory manners and decided piety, for so responsible a trust. Besides the general superintendence of the school, he is engaged in the study of the language, and in preparing translations, and also preaches extensively among the surrounding people. Mrs. Loughridge was formerly principal of the Cherokee Female High School, and conducted it with decided efficiency. Her presence is an important acquisition to the Institution at Tallahassee. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson have heretofore sustained almost the whole burden of teaching, and his health has suffered in consequence. The reinforcement of teachers which has now been received will lighten their labors, and the school, no doubt, will hereafter be conducted with still more efficiency. Mrs. Reid and Miss Thompson, the former as superintendent of domestic affairs, and the latter as superintendent of the girls out of school, have contributed largely to the prosperity of the Institution."

Mr. Loughridge preaches three Sabbaths out of four at Tallahassee, and the other he spends either at Choska or at some other point at a distance from the Seminary. Mr. Winslett, a young man of the Creek nation, now preparing himself for the ministry, alternates with Mr. Loughridge, in holding religious meetings at these more remote stations. No report has been received of the number of church members for the present year. The number reported last year was twenty-five.

Mr. Loughridge is busily engaged in translating the gospel of Matthew into the Muskogee language, and hopes to have it ready for the press in the course of a few months. He is assisted by Mr. Winslett, the individual above referred to, and two other educated Creeks, who have been designated to aid in this work by the Methodist Missionaries in the Creek country. It is expected that the expense of publishing this translation will be borne by the churches in the Creek country. Mr. Robertson is also engaged in preparing some elementary books in the Muskogee language, for the use of the school.

The school at Kowetah has been conducted on the same general plan with that at Tallahassee. The number of pupils, including two day scholars, is twenty-seven. Miss Stanislaus has been the principal teacher; Mrs. Templeton's health not being adequate to more labor than is necessary to superintend the domestic concerns of the establishment.

The number of members connected with the church at Kowetah is thirty-one. One was suspended during the year, and two have been received.

In relation to the circumstances and character of the members of the church, the following extract from the report above mentioned, will not be out of place:

"In the afternoon Mr. Templeton and I rode through the neighborhood, and called at the houses of a good many Indian families, most of whom belonged to the church at Kowetah. This was a pleasing duty. It gave me the opportunity of seeing more of these Indians at their homes, and of becoming acquainted with the character and external circumstances of those who are members of the church, and I had the opportunity, likewise, of speaking words of comfort to these simple-hearted disciples of the Redeemer. Most of them are living in comfortable circumstances, and as far as I could judge from my very transient intercourse with them, they are living as become the disciples of Christ."

Mr. Templeton preaches at Kowetah most of the time, but makes preaching tours to more remote districts of the country, as often as his health and other engagements will allow; and for some time past, has held stated meetings at Tulseytown, on the Arkansas river, twenty-eight miles north-west of Kowetah, where there is a large Muskogee population, who have heretofore enjoyed very little religious instruction.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The Missionaries have much to encourage them in their labors among the Creeks. Their schools are well attended, and there seems to be a growing conviction among all classes, of the importance of education. Several of their former pupils are now engaged as teachers of day schools, and in this capacity are giving satisfaction to the people at large. There have been no important accessions to the churches during the year, but the attendance upon public worship has been good, and the general deportment of those that are professors of religion, has been such as to make a favorable impression upon the minds of the people generally. One young man, of great promise, is now studying with reference to the ministry, and will probably be licensed to preach the Gospel. For all these favorable tokens of good, the Committee feel grateful to the Great Head of the Church, and would earnestly commend this work to the prayerful remembrance of the people of God.

SEMINOLE MISSION.

Oak Ridge.—Mr. John Lilley and Mrs. Lilley; Mr. John D. Bemo and Mrs. Bemo, assistants.

This Mission has been conducted on the same general plan as in former years, but, in some respects, with more marked results.

If the trials of our missionary brethren have been greater, they have also had to record greater mercies and blessings.

Mr. and Mrs. Lilley have had to mourn the loss of a precious babe removed from them by death on the 22d of July, being the third child they have been called to commit to the grave since their connection with the Mission; so that this spot is now endeared to them by the graves of their children, as well as by the fact that it has been the scene of their most active and self-denying labors for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Both of them, but especially Mrs. Lilley, have suffered very much from sore eyes. At one time it was found necessary for her to be confined to a darkened room, and serious fears were entertained that she might be entirely deprived of sight. The missionary friends have been called to a further trial of their faith, in the removal by death of a young convert of the Seminole nation, who had been a great consolation to them in their missionary work. He died at a distance from the mission station, and none of his Christian friends were present to comfort him in the final struggle with death. But the missionaries learned from others who were present, that he was perfectly calm and resigned at the approach of his end, and employed his last moments in exhorting his kindred and others to be reconciled to God, and prepare to meet him in a better world.

But our missionary brethren have had occasion for thanksgiving and rejoicing also. The spirit of God has attended their efforts, and some of the pupils of the school have been made the subjects of divine grace. Two were baptized and received to the communion of the church at a protracted meeting held at this place by Rev. Messrs. Loughridge and Templeton in September. Two other applications for admission were deferred to a subsequent meeting, and a still greater number seemed to be earnestly inquiring what they must do to be saved.

The number of pupils in the school is twenty-six, being the same number that was reported last year. All of these, with the exceptions of two or three who have been in the school only for a short time, can read and write with tolerable ease, and a large proportion of them are making good progress in the study of arithmetic, but labor under the disadvantage of using text books in a language which they but imperfectly understand.

Special attention has been given to their religious instruction. They are all required to learn the catechism, and commit to memory hymns and portions of Scripture. They are also trained to habits of industry. The girls are taught to sew, knit, wash, cook, and to perform all other kinds of domestic labor, whilst the boys are required to work a few hours every day on the farm, in the garden, or to perform any other kind of manual labor needed about the station. In their general deportment they are orderly, quiet and cheerful, and give promise of usefulness and respectability hereafter.

The Seminoles are feeling much more interest than formerly in the education of their children.

On this subject Mr. Lilley writes:

"Much greater interest is felt in education than formerly. Parents desire to get a place for their children in the school, and in some cases the children themselves run away from home and come to us to take them into school. Some of these cases are so urgent that it is hard to refuse them. We think we have much to encourage us."

The prospects of this Mission, in many respects, are more encouraging than they have been in past years. The children in the school have not only received a most favorable moral impress themselves, but it is believed that their sober, upright, and consistent deportment is exerting a silent but powerful influence upon the character and conduct of their parents. There is a more general disposition among the adult population to receive religious instruction; intemperance is less common, and many of the people are manifesting a stronger disposition to conform to the habits and usages of civilized life. Most, if not all of these results, are to be ascribed mainly to the influence of this Mission, and thus induce the hope, that it is the appointed instrument of Providence for rescuing this little family of Indians from utter extinction and ruin.

A very recent communication from this Mission brings the welcome tidings, that a very interesting state of religious feeling had been awakened at this station. Much seriousness exists among the pupils of the school; and twelve or fifteen adults from the surrounding country were anxiously inquiring what they must do to be saved. Several cases of special interest are mentioned, and it is devoutly hoped that this work of grace may be continued until many of these benighted Indians may be gathered into the fold of Christ.

CHICKASAW MISSION.

Wapanucka.—Rev. H. Balentine, superintendent, Mr. James S. Allan, farmer, and their wives; Mr. J. L. Davis, Mr. John C. Carter, and his wife, assistants; Miss F. K. Thompson, Miss Hannah M. Green, Miss Mary Jane Burns, Miss Anna M. Turner, Miss Clara W. Eddy, Miss Anna Ogden, and Miss Mary J. F. Thayer, teachers.

Boggy Depôt.—Rev. J. H. Burns.

Miss Shellabarger, whose name was mentioned in the last Annual Report, was released from her connection with the Mission at her own request, and returned to her friends in Ohio last Spring.

About the same time, Miss Thompson found it necessary to withdraw from her labors temporarily, in the hope of recruiting her health by relaxation and a change of climate. In this her expectations were realized, and she was enabled to resume her post early in the Autumn. Miss Eddy's health gave way at the commencement of the Winter, and she found it necessary to withdraw from the institution for a time, for the purpose of getting medical aid. Her health is greatly improved, and she hopes to return to her work in the Spring.

Miss Anna Ogden and Miss Mary J. F. Thayer were appointed teachers to the school at Wapanucka, and entered upon their duties the latter part of October.

The mission family, including the children of the boarding school, have been favored with excellent health. The only exceptions are the cases of the two teachers just mentioned; and these are to be ascribed more to the excessive fatigue and watchings they had to pass through during the prevailing epidemic of the previous year, than to any existing local cause. Indeed, both the Indians and the Missionaries are now satisfied, that the site of the Seminary is quite as favorable to health, as any that could be found in the country.

The various labors of the station and the school, have been carried on without interruption. After the departure of Miss Shellabarger and Miss Thompson, Mr. Balentine found it necessary to devote a part of his time to teaching, which added much to his ordinary labors, and left him much less time for preaching than he otherwise would have had.

A church was organized at Wapanucka by appointment of Presbytery in May, being constituted of fourteen members; eleven of whom belonged to the mission family, and three are converted Chickasaws.

Mr. James S. Allan was appointed elder, and Mr. Balentine has preached and administered the ordinances since, but without assuming the pastoral care of the church.

The school has been sustained in full operation throughout the year. The number of pupils is one hundred, the number to which is limited. The pupils, with few exceptions, have been regular in their attendance, orderly in their behavior, and have made satisfactory progress in their studies. Those more recently admitted are still in the elementary parts of their education; whilst the majority of those who have been in the institution from its commencement, have made good progress in the study of arithmetic, geography, and composition. Every attention is given to their religious instruction, and they are carefully trained in all those domestic duties which will fit them for usefulness in future life. The following extract from the Report above referred to, will give the writer's views of the character and prospects of this Institution.

"The whole school is arranged into three separate departments of upwards of thirty scholars each. Each one of these departments or schools is under the joint care of two young ladies, one of whom instructs the children in school, and the other has charge of them when they are engaged at their amusements or at work. It affords me great pleasure to testify to the zeal, faithfulness and ability, with which these young ladies have discharged their duties. It is but a short time since these children were placed under their care—most of them were without any previous Christian training—many were poor and badly clad—some were diseased, and gave very little promise of improvement, either in body or mind; but already the most encouraging results begin to show themselves. It would be difficult to find so large an assemblage of girls anywhere, of more pleasant and intelligent countenances, of more orderly deportment, or more decent personal appearance.

"I had less time to examine the children in their studies than I wished, but what time I could spend in the schools gave me a very favorable impression of their progress. All of them, even the least, seemed perfectly familiar with the Children's Catechism, and a very large proportion of them seemed to be quite as familiar with the Shorter Catechism. One of their exercises I was particularly pleased with. The children were required to rise one after the other, and repeat from memory the successive verses of a given chapter of the Bible. In this way they went through several chapters, and could have repeated a half dozen or more. Surely, this storing of their minds with Scripture and with the Catechism, must exert a most important influence, not only upon their own future lives, but upon the whole community to which they belong."

The expenses of the school and station have been much greater than usual, in consequence of the great scarcity of provisions, and the high prices that have been paid for the staple articles of food. The school could not be suspended, however, without the most serious consequences, and the Committee have gone forward in their work, relying upon the liberality of the churches for the means necessary to meet the expenses of this unexpected exigency. The expenses of all the missions in the Indian territory have been increased by the same cause, but not to the same extent with that at Wapanucka.

Mr. Burns was designated to the station at Boggy Depôt, formerly occupied by Mr. Watson. He arrived there the latter part of October, and immediately entered upon his work. Rev C. C. Copeland, of the American Board, occasionally preached in neighborhoods connected with this station, previous to the arrival of Mr. Burns, and with evident tokens of the divine favor. Much seriousness exists among the people at Boggy Depôt, and at another place called the "Cherokee Springs," where Mr. Watson formerly preached; and it is said, that more than twenty persons are anxiously inquiring what they must do to be saved, some of whom, it is hoped, have found the Saviour.

Mr. Burns, since his arrival, has devoted his attention mainly to preaching and studying the language, and he hopes it will not be long before he will be able to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ to the people in their own language. He has been as much with Mr. Copeland as his other engagements would allow, with the view of getting his aid in studying the language, and also for the benefit of his missionary experience among the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

The people at Boggy Depôt are very desirous of having a day school established among them for the benefit of their children, and they are able and willing to bear the expense of such a school, but the Committee as yet know of no suitable person to occupy that station.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

Rev. Alexander Reid; Mr. George Ainslie and Mr. R. J. Burt, teachers, and their wives; Mr. John Reid, assistant teacher; Mr. Joseph S. Betts, carpenter, and Mr. Ed. Evans, farmer, and their wives; Miss Maria Davidson, assistant teacher; Mr. Truman Judson, and Miss Judson, assistants; Mr. Edward Dwight, native, interpreter.

If the past year has been one of special trials to this Mission, it has been of equally special blessings. Our missionary brethren have had seasons alike of sorrow and joy, but they have been enabled, by the good hand of God upon them, to prosecute their labors through all the vicissitudes which they have been called to pass, with a firm and unfaltering reliance upon the care of their Heavenly Father.

Mrs. Elizabeth Reid, the wife of Rev. Alexander Reid, was removed by death on the 6th June, after a severe illness of several weeks. Her end was happy and peaceful, but her loss was most sensibly felt, not only by her sorrowing husband and the mission family, but by the pupils of the Institution, to whose welfare and happiness she had assiduously devoted all her energies, during the four years of her connection with the Mission.

Mr. James Nourse and Miss Elizabeth Morrison have both been released from their connection with the Mission, at their own request, the first on account of family afflictions, and the latter in consequence of failure of health. They were much esteemed by their associates, and their loss to the Mission is sensibly felt. Mr. Judson, accompanied by his sister, returned to the Mission at the commencement of the present session, and has resumed his place in connection with the Steward's Hall. Miss Maria Davidson was appointed assistant teacher, and entered upon her duties early in the Autumn. Mr. A. Campbell Falconer was appointed to take charge of the school left vacant by the departure of Mr. Nourse. He arrived at the station the latter part of October, and entered upon his duties, but was discharged soon after for unworthy conduct.

The corps of teachers having remained incomplete, Mr. Burt has had the care of two schools, with only occasional assistance. His labors, in consequence, have been unusually arduous. It is hoped that an additional teacher will be found before the commencement of the next session, but as yet no one is known to the Committee who is suitable and willing to take that post.

As a general thing, the missionaries and the pupils have enjoyed good health. At one time, dysentery prevailed extensively among the children, but proved fatal in only two cases; which was proportionably less mortality than occurred among the Indians in the surrounding country, who were also afflicted with this disease at the same time.

The Seminary at Spencer has been carried on steadily and energetically during the year, and would, no doubt, if the corps of teachers had been complete, have attained to a greater thoroughness of education than any previous year. The pupils have been more docile, less disposed to run away, and have pursued their studies with more than usual interest and success.

The Choctaws are becoming more generally impressed with the importance of education, and they put forth more decided influence to keep their children in school. Mr. Reid says he might get 500 pupils into the school, in the course of a few days' notice, if the way was open to receive and instruct so many.

The following extract from the Report above mentioned will give a condensed view of the character and prospects of this seminary:

"The mission premises at Spencer consists of four large two-story frame houses, arranged so as to form a quadrangle, with a house for the superintendent between the two on the east, and a chapel directly opposite on the west side, with various outbuildings, standing at some distance. Most of the buildings had recently been painted or whitewashed, and in consequence, the whole establishment presented quite an air of cheerfulness. The four principal buildings are intended each to accommodate a teacher, his family and twenty-five pupils, and they are sufficiently commodious for this. The whole number of pupils in the institution is one hundred, being the number agreed upon in the contract between the Board and the Choctaw Council. Their ages vary from eight to sixteen, and the whole are arranged in three departments or schools, according to their attainments in learning. The more advanced department is under the care of Mr. Ainslie, and both of the others have been under the care of Mr. Burt, since Mr. Nourse left in the Autumn.

"These young brethren have discharged their duties with fidelity, as would readily be seen from the progress which their pupils have made. The scholars under Mr. Burt's care have been at Spencer only for a comparatively short period, and their studies as yet have been confined to the more elementary departments of education. They read, write, commit Scripture to memory, and have made considerable progress both in arithmetic and geography. Those in Mr. Ainslie's department appeared well in reading, arithmetic, geography, composition, and several had acquired a good knowledge of algebra and geometry.

"There are a good many young men in the country who have gone through the ordinary course of study at this institution, who might now be formed into a class for the purpose of studying the languages, and the higher branches of mathematics, as well as the natural sciences. It is of great importance that some provision be made to meet this want of the country, and especially as many of these young men are pious, and might thus be fitted for the Christian ministry.

"The institution at Spencer was never more flourishing than it is at the present time. The Choctaw people themselves are beginning to appreciate its importance more than they ever did before, and the number of pupils might easily be doubled if it were possible to accommodate and instruct so many. This prosperous condition of the institution is to be ascribed, under God, mainly to the judicious and unremitting labors of Mr. Reid. He has his finger upon every wheel in the machine, and taken altogether, he is one of the busiest and most laborious men I have ever met with."

Accounts, more or less extended, have been published in the missionary journals, of the interesting work of grace that has been going on at this station during the year. In view of these, it is scarcely necessary to enter into any minute details connected with its past history.

The first serious impressions which were witnessed among the people, to whom this work of grace has been so much blessed, was at a place called Six Towns, and among a portion of the Choctaw family, who are also known by the same name, the early part of last March.

In view of this state of feeling, a protracted meeting of two days was held in the early part of April, at the close of which thirty individuals, and many of them very aged persons, professed the deepest anxiety about the salvation of their souls. In view of this increased seriousness, another protracted meeting was held after the lapse of a few weeks, at the close of which twenty-one persons were baptized and admitted to the communion of the church. Another similar meeting was held in August, when nineteen adults were baptized and received to the church, and forty-eight children were presented for baptism. Other meetings of a similar character followed, and in no case without important results. In less than one year from the commencement of this work of grace, between ninety and one hundred hopeful converts have been gathered into the Church of Christ, and give the most satisfactory evidence of having been made the subjects of divine grace. Upwards of sixty children have also been brought under the care of the church by the ordinance of baptism. Among these converts were some very aged persons; several are prominent and useful members of society, and four are youths of much promise in the Seminary at Spencer.

These young converts give much pleasing evidence of the sincerity of their professions. Their outward conduct is entirely reformed, especially in the abandonment of habits of idleness and intemperance, and in the strict and scrupulous observance of the Sabbath. One of the first objects that engaged their attention after the beginning of this religious awakening, was the erection of a suitable house of worship, which has been completed with very little aid from abroad. The great mass of them, old as well as young, immediately set to work to learn to read the Bible in their own language and to use their hymn books in religious meetings, and they have already made surprising progress in this self-imposed task.

In consequence of this interesting state of things among these Choctaws, and the amount of ministerial labor necessary to meet the exigencies of their case, the past has been an unusually laborious year to Mr. Reid. Besides attending to the ordinary duties connected with the Seminary at Spencer, which of themselves are quite sufficient to engross the whole of one man's time, he has managed to keep up regular weekly religious meetings at four different places in the neighboring country, and has borne the chief burthen of all the protracted meetings which the wants of the Six-Towns people seemed to demand. At one of these stations just mentioned, a seriousness has recently manifested itself, not unlike that which preceded the great work of grace among the Six-Towns people.

The Committee acknowledge, with devout gratitude, the goodness of Almighty God for so glorious a display of his grace, and would call upon the churches to unite with them in fervent prayer, that this work may go on and spread, until the whole of this people are brought into the fold of Christ.

The Committee have recently received a request from the Superintendent and Trustees of Education in the Choctaw Nation to open a female school at a place called Goodwater, and this they hope to do the present Summer.

GENERAL REMARKS.

It will be noticed, that education forms a more prominent feature in the missionary operations of the Board among the Indians than in most other parts of the heathen world. This is owing, in part, to the fact that most of the funds used in carrying on the schools and seminaries among them, are furnished by the Indians themselves, and partly to the fact, also, that there is a special call for pressing the cause of education among them as fast as possible.

In former years, the money that was due to most of the tribes by Government for their lands, was distributed in the form of annuities. This was found to be a very injurious measure, especially in promoting intemperance and gambling, and in subjecting them to all kinds of imposition on the part of unprincipled white men, who flocked to their country at the time for the purpose of defrauding them of their money.

Some years since, large portions of these funds were devoted by the Indians themselves to the purposes of general education, and especially in the establishment and maintenance of boarding schools. As yet they have not felt competent themselves to manage these schools, and have therefore invoked the aid of missionary associations in promoting this important cause.

At the same time, it is a matter of vital importance to the welfare of these tribes, that the cause of education be put forward as rapidly as possible. It is now obvious to themselves, as well as others, that their existence cannot long be maintained unless they are educated. The tide of white population is every year drawing nearer to them; and they must be put on a footing of equality with the more powerful race, or be trampled under foot and ultimately become extinct.

The first of these, the only one which humanity or religion will entertain, may be realized; but in order to do this, the Indians must be educated, and placed in every respect on a footing of entire equality with the surrounding population, and this can be done only by the diffusion of education and religion, and should be done as speedily as possible.

In reviewing the history, the present condition and prospects of the South-Western Indians, the Committee feel that a most important problem has been solved in relation to the value of Christian missions to the unevangelized nations of the earth. These families already occupy the first place among all the Indian tribes of North America, in point of population, wealth, education, intelligence, religion and general civilization. And, occupying as they do at the present time, a fertile and productive district of country, shielded by the strong arm of government from any immediate aggressions on the part of the more powerful race, devoting their attention to agriculture and the useful arts, forming habits of industry and sobriety, and above all, cherishing the cause of education and religion in their families, there is no reason to doubt that they will soon attain to a degree of respectability, that will place them on a footing of perfect equality with any portion of our own population. They may be regarded as already beyond the danger of extinction—their population is on the increase—every successive year witnesses more marked progress in intelligence, industry, and general improvement, and they are now fairly on the high way to great respectability as a people. And to what is this to be ascribed? Mainly, no doubt, to the fact, that the Gospel has been preached among them steadily, faithfully, and for a good many successive years. To this are they more indebted for their present prosperity, than to all other influences combined.

But if the Gospel has been so efficacious in this particular case, how important is it that it should be applied at once to all the smaller tribes of this same great family, as well as to all the other unevangelized nations of the earth.

Missions in Africa.

LIBERIA MISSION.

Monrovia.—Rev. Amos Herring; Mr. B. V. R. James, teacher; Miss Catherine Strobel, assistant teacher; in this country, Rev. David A. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson.

Kentucky.—Mr. H. W. Erskine, licentiate preacher and teacher; Mr. D. Simpson, assistant teacher.

Harrisonburgh.—Mr. Simon Harrison, licentiate preacher.

Sinou.—Rev. James M. Priest; Mr. Charles Fanshaw, assistant.

Settra Kroo.—Mr. Washington McDonough, teacher.

Mr. Wilson found it necessary last Spring to return to this country for the purpose of recruiting his health, and to meet his family, from whom he had been separated for some time, with the hope of returning to his labors after a short sojourn in this country. His health has been greatly improved since his arrival in this country, and he expects to return with his family to his field of labor this Spring. He has visited a number of the churches in Pennsylvania during the Autumn and Winter, and has done much to promote an interest in the missionary work. Mr. James suffered a good deal from sickness during the forepart of the year, and had to discontinue his school for a few weeks; but his health had been restored at the date of the latest intelligence, and he was engaged in his duties as usual.

Church and Sabbath School.—Mr. Wilson continued to officiate in the church at Monrovia until his departure for this country in April. Since then, the pulpit has been supplied by Rev. Amos Herring, formerly of the Methodist church, but now connected with the Presbyterian body. He was designated to this post at the recommendation of Mr. Wilson, and with the concurrence of the congregation. He has preached regularly on the Sabbath, kept up a weekly lecture, and spent one afternoon every week in catechizing the children of the congregation. His ministrations have been acceptable to the church and congregation, and have not been unattended by the Divine blessing. One member of the church has been removed by death, and ten have been added on examination or certificate of dismission from other churches. Of those received on examination, one is a young man connected with the Alexander High-School, who, it is hoped, will be an ornament to the church, as well as a blessing to the community in which he lives. The whole number of church members is fifty, being ten more than were reported last year. Eighty dollars have been raised by the church during the year; one half of which has been spent in repairing their own church building, and the remainder was appropriated to aid in building the new church at Harrisonburgh. The monthly concert has been observed and collections have been taken up, which have also been appropriated to the use of the new church at Harrisonburgh. The Sabbath school embraces about forty pupils, and has been continued throughout the year without interruption.

The English school under the care of Mr. James, embraces sixty-five pupils, about the same number that was reported the last year. It is arranged into two departments, of about an equal number of pupils; one of which is taught by Mr. James, and the other by Miss Strobel; but both are under his general superintendence. Mr. James speaks of some of the more advanced of his pupils, as fully qualified to be teachers of primary schools in Liberia or anywhere else; and there is reason to hope that the time is not far distant, when the country will be supplied with teachers educated on the ground, and this will supersede the necessity of providing the means of education for them elsewhere.

The Alexander High-School has been placed under the general supervision of Mr. James, during Mr. Wilson's absence. A young man, transiently residing in the country, was engaged to hear the classes in Latin and Greek five days in the week, and Mr. Blyden, one of the more advanced pupils of the schools, hears most of the other recitations. The whole number of pupils is fifteen. The first class are reading Virgil, have studied the Greek Grammar, and are taking their first lessons in the Greak Reader; and have proceeded as far in Algebra as equations of the first degree. The second class are studying Latin, Arithmetic, and Geography; and the whole school receive daily lessons in Scripture. Seven of the fifteen pupils are members of the church, all of whom, with one or two exceptions, have become the subjects of Divine grace since their connection with the school; and thus giving very pleasing evidence that the institution is likely to prove a nursery of piety, as well as the means of promoting a thorough and efficient system of education. The progress of the pupils, it is probable, has not been as rapid as it would have been under Mr. Wilson's immediate instruction; and this shows the great importance of some one being associated with him in this work. The unfavorable nature of the climate will ever make it necessary for white men to resort frequently to this country or somewhere else for a change of climate; and so long as there is only one missionary to bear the heat and burthen of the day in this trying climate, there must be frequent interruptions not only in the progress of this institution, but in almost every other department of missionary labor. There are colored men engaged in the missionary work here, who discharge their duties with commendable fidelity, and are doing much to advance the cause of piety and education among their own people; but the services of faithful white missionaries, according to the acknowledgments of the wiser and more judicious portion of the community themselves, are still indispensable to the welfare of the country; and the Committee ardently hope that the time is not far distant when young men of suitable qualifications will offer their services to sustain and carry on this interesting work.

Kentucky.—This settlement is on the St. Paul river, and about ten miles from its mouth. It is the largest and perhaps the most flourishing of all of the settlements that have been formed by the American colonists at a distance from the sea-coast. The settlers are engaging extensively in agricultural operations, and in consequence they are already beginning to show more unequivocal tokens of real thrift than any other community in the country.

The church and school in this place are under the care of Mr. H. W. Erskine, a licentiate preacher. He is assisted by Mr. D. Simpson, who is also a licentiate preacher. Preaching has been steadily kept up by these two brethren at the four principal settlements on the St. Paul, and at all of them with less or more encouraging tokens of good. The congregation at Kentucky had nearly finished a neat brick church last Autumn, when the roof was taken off and the side walls nearly thrown down by a violent tornado. It was re-built, and has since been dedicated to the worship of God. Several individuals have been added to the church during the year, but no mention has been made of the whole number of members. The number reported last year was thirty-three. Recent intelligence has been received of an interesting work of grace in progress in that congregation, the particulars of which have not been communicated.

There are three Sabbath schools carried on by the members of this church, but no report has been forwarded of the number of pupils in attendance. Nor has any report been received of the attendance of the day school.

Harrisonburgh.—This is a newly-formed colonial settlement on the St. Paul, and distant about thirty miles from the sea-coast. It is the most advanced step that has yet been taken by the colonists in extending their settlements towards the interior, and may do something to solve the question of the comparative healthiness of the interior and the sea-coast. Among the first, and indeed the principal persons who formed this settlement, were thirteen members of the Presbyterian church, who emigrated two years ago from the State of North Carolina. These have been organized into a church, and Simon Harrison, who, it will be remembered, formerly lived among the Choctaws and was liberated by contributions from various Christian friends, with the view of his going to Liberia, has been invited to take the supervision of this little flock. This community is a growing one, and its future character will be determined, in great measure, no doubt, by the religious influence which is brought to bear upon the earlier period of its existence. The Committee have appropriated a small sum to aid the little band in building a church. A colored congregation in Wilmington, North-Carolina, have forwarded forty dollars for the same object, which, with a similar sum from the church in Monrovia, and what they have engaged to do with their own hands, will probably put them in possession of a respectable place of worship before the close of the year.

Sinou is situated on the sea-coast, about half way between Monrovia and Cape Palmas. With the exception of Monrovia, it is the largest and in some respects one of the most flourishing settlements in Liberia. The Presbyterian church in this place was gathered by Mr. Priest, and is still continued under his pastoral care. Five of its members have been removed by death during the year, and three have been dismissed. The present number is forty-three. There was an interesting state of religious feeling in the congregation at the date of the last letters from this place, but no particular information is given in relation to its results.

There is both a day and Sabbath school connected with this station; the attendance at the former is about thirty, and at the latter twenty-five.

The congregation here are greatly in need of a suitable place of worship, without sufficient means of their own to erect one; and they earnestly ask assistance from Christian friends in this country, to enable them to effect this desirable object.

Settra Kroo is one of the largest native settlements on the Liberian coast, and in a commercial point of view is daily becoming more important. A very large proportion of the male population speak intelligible English, and are more or less familiar with the habits and customs of civilized men. Unfortunately, however, their practices and lives do not always correspond with the knowledge they have of the usages of civilized life. The older male members of society remain at home and transact all the commercial and other business of the place, whilst the young men engage as laborers on board of foreign vessels, and are taken to every part of the coast. It is in this way they acquire a knowledge of the English, and become conversant with the habits of civilized life.

No portion of the inhabitants of Western Africa are more extensively known than the Krumen, and none would have greater advantages for doing good, if they were only brought under the influence of Christianity. In this view of the matter, it is greatly to be lamented that the Board have not been able, for years past, to extend their operations among them beyond a single school. They are manifesting a deeper interest in the education of their children than in former years; and it is to be hoped that the efforts that are made to introduce the blessings of education and religion among them, limited as those efforts are, may lead to the most important and enduring results. The school under Mr. McDonough's care embraces fifteen pupils, nine of whom are boarders. Several of these can read in the Testament, and are beginning to write a legible hand. The Sabbath school embraces twenty-five pupils, a few of whom are the children of colonists, residing in that vicinity.

GENERAL REMARKS.

In taking a general view of the state and progress of this Mission during the past year, there is cause alike for gratitude and encouragement. The schools have been carried on with little or no interruption, and, it is believed, with increased efficiency. The Sabbath schools connected with the missions have had a larger attendance than in former years. Most of the churches have had seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and all have had accessions to their numbers.

In view of these results, it is highly important that these labors should be carried on with increased energy and on an enlarged scale. And it is earnestly to be hoped, that the Board may have the means at their disposal to follow up this work, as fast as the providence of God may open the way for enlarged operations.

CORISCO MISSION.

Evangasimba.—Rev. George McQueen, Rev. William Clemens and Mrs. Clemens, Miss Georgiana M. Bliss; in this country, Rev. James L. Mackey and Mrs. Mackey.

Soon after the last annual meeting of the Board, painful intelligence reached the Mission House of a disastrous fire that had occurred at the island of Corisco, on the night of the 3d of April, by which two valuable lives were lost, and almost all of the mission buildings, as well as other property, were entirely consumed.

The persons whose lives were lost, were two colored women from this country in the employment of the Mission, one of whom had been with the missionary brethren there from their first establishment on the island. They were known to have been up and out of the building after the breaking out of the fire, but it is supposed they ventured too far afterwards in trying to rescue property from the flames, and were crushed by the falling roof. Both of them were women of excellent Christian character, and their loss is severely felt and greatly lamented by the missionaries.

This intelligence was rendered still more painful by the fact that Mrs. Clemens was extremely ill at the time of the sailing of the vessel which brought this news, and it was feared that the exposure to which she had been subjected the night of the fire, as well as in being removed to the Gaboon the next day, might be too great a trial of her strength, and lead to a fatal result.

Two months elapsed before any further intelligence was received, and many earnest and heart-felt prayers were offered up during this painful suspense that her life might be spared; to which, the Committee acknowledge with gratitude, a gracious answer was vouchsafed in the complete restoration of her health.

Mrs. Williams' health did not improve on the voyage to Africa, as was thought would be the case by her medical advisers, at the time of her embarcation. On the contrary, the voyage had the effect of developing a more insidious form of the disease with which she had been afflicted; and in view of this, as well as the exposed and destitute condition in which the Mission had been left by the fire, it was thought advisable for Mr. Williams to return with her to this country, and they accordingly took passage in the same vessel which brought the first intelligence of this severe disaster.

They reached New York the 1st of May, in the schooner Cortez; and the Committee acknowledge themselves under great obligations to Messrs. B. A. Mumford & Brothers of New York, not only for the gratuitous passage of Mr. and Mrs. Williams to this country, but also for detaining another of their vessels that was on the point of sailing for Africa, for the purpose of taking out a partial supply of provisions, clothing, medicines, and other necessaries to the brethren at Corisco. They would also acknowledge their obligations to Captain Richard E. Lawlin, of the barque Gem, to the missionaries of the American Board at the Gaboon, and others, for their kindness and aid to our missionary brethren in the time of their destitution. Mr. Williams has spent a part of the winter in presenting the cause of Missions in some of the Southern churches, and no doubt has contributed to promote the interest for Missions wherever he has preached. Mrs. Williams' health is better than it was on her arrival from Africa, but it is not such as will justify their return to their chosen field of labor.

It has never been satisfactorily ascertained how the fire at Corisco was communicated. If by incendiary, it was probably some one from the main land, who was actuated more by a desire of plunder, or by vindictive feelings towards the Corisco people, whom they expected to be responsible for the disaster, or both together, than by any malicious or unkind feelings towards the missionaries. The people of Corisco manifested the strongest sympathy with the missionaries in their trials; did all they could to find out the authors of the mischief; and, no doubt, would have inflicted summary punishment upon them if they had been discovered. They engaged at once to do all they could to assist the missionaries to rebuild their houses, and although they could do but little to repair their extensive losses, they have since faithfully discharged their engagements in this respect; and have thus given the missionaries encouraging evidence that their presence and labors among them are appreciated.

Soon after this disaster was made known in this country, several generous contributions were forwarded to the Mission House from Christian friends in different parts of the country, which enabled the Committee to purchase and send out a small iron house for the Mission, which will serve as a safe depository for their books and other valuable effects for the time to come.

In consequence of the partial suspension of their missionary labors, it was thought advisable for Mr. and Mrs. Mackey to visit this country, partly with the view of recruiting their health, but chiefly to enable Mr. Mackey to superintend the printing of a few elementary books in the native language for the use of the schools as soon as they were resumed. They arrived in New York in November, and since that time Mr. Mackey has devoted his attention mainly to the work which brought him to this country. He has also prepared a grammar of the Benga language, which, when printed, will not only be very useful to future missionaries in acquiring a knowledge of the language, but will be an important acquisition to philological science in general.

The latest intelligence from the Mission is to the 22d of January. At that time all the members of the Mission were in the enjoyment of good health, and had resumed most of their missionary labors.

A neat framed house, forty feet by twenty, and two stories high, built mainly by the natives, under Mr. Clemens' superintendence, had been completed, and was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Clemens, with a few of the girls of the boarding school.

Mr. McQueen had also succeeded in getting a neat bamboo house erected, a part of which he occupied himself, and the remainder was devoted to a few of the boys belonging to the boarding school. The iron house had arrived, and was in process of erection, and no doubt has been completed, and is in use before this time.

Mr. McQueen had resumed the school, and expected to remain in charge of it until Mr. Mackey's return from this country. Mr. Clemens' time has been devoted mainly to the superintending the erection of the necessary buildings for the Mission, but both he and Mr. McQueen have kept up their regular religious meetings during the week and on the Sabbath. There had been less or more seriousness among the pupils of the boarding school previous to their dispersion, and since then the missionaries have reason to believe that several of them have been made the subjects of Divine grace.

Miss Georgiana M. Bliss, of Long Meadow, Massachusetts, has been appointed a teacher to this Mission, and sailed for Africa the 28th of March. It is probable she has reached her destination, and entered upon her labors before the present time.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The trying dispensation of Providence through which the Mission at Corisco has been called to pass during the past year, whilst it is a loud call to themselves, to the Board, and the Church at large, to acknowledge the hand of God in it, and bow with submission to his Divine will, is no real occasion for discouragement in the great work in which they are engaged; but on the other hand, furnishes a strong motive to the exercise of increased faith and renewed activity. If the event itself, however trying it may have been at the time, should lead to the exercise of more implicit and exclusive dependence upon the arm of Divine power, not only to shield them from outward harm, but to give success to their labors in turning men to the Lord Jesus, it will prove a rich blessing, and was no doubt intended by the Great Head of the Church to teach this most important lesson. The missionaries have had opportunity to know that their presence and labors are appreciated by the people among whom they live, and to whose welfare and improvement they have devoted their lives; and the people at the same time have had an opportunity to testify their interest in the happiness of the missionaries, and the sincere desire which they undoubtedly have for the continuance of their labors among them.

And now that they have been permitted to resume their labors, it is a matter of great importance that the Mission should be reinforced as speedily as possible. The island of Corisco has proved itself comparatively healthy, and may hereafter be made the head-quarters of very extensive missionary operations on that part of the continent. The interior regions, as well as the sea-coast, both to the north and south of Corisco, have been explored, and found to be not only populous, but in a condition, to human appearances at least, most favorable for the spread of the Gospel. The Benga language (that spoken by the Corisco people) has been studied out and reduced to writing; and books are now published in it that will be serviceable in promoting the cause of education and religion, not only among the Corisco people themselves, but over an extensive region of the adjoining main land. The missionaries have acquired important knowledge of the character and habits of the people, the nature of the climate, and the best means of promoting health, all of which may be rendered highly important in furthering the cause of truth and religion in that part of the world; and the Committee earnestly hope that there may be no lack of missionary candidates to sustain and enlarge this great work, which has been so auspiciously commenced.

LODIANA MISSION.

LAHOR.—Rev. John H. Morrison and his wife; Rev. Charles W. Forman; Inayat Masih and Abdullah Athim, catechists and candidates for the ministry; Elijah Swift and George Scott, teachers; Isa Das, Scripture reader.*

JALANDAR.—Rev. Golak Nath; John B. Lewis, teacher; Abdullah, Scripture reader.

LODIANA.—Rev. John Newton and his wife; Rev. Levi Janvier; Rev. Adolph Rudolph and his wife; Mrs. Porter and Miss Newton, teachers; Qadir Baksh and William Daniel, Scripture readers.

SABATHU.—Unoccupied at present.

AMBALA.—Rev. Messrs. Jesse M. Jamieson, and James H. Orbison, and their wives; Miss Jamieson, teacher; William Basten, catechist; Matthew, Scripture reader.

SAHARUNPUR.—Rev. Messrs. James R. Campbell and Joseph Caldwell, and their wives; Theodore Wylie and John M'Leod, catechists; H. T. Orr and Issachar, Scripture readers.

DEHRA.—Rev. John S. Woodside and his wife; Gilbert M'Master, catechist; Solomon, teacher.

Stations not yet designated: Rev. George O. Barnes and his wife; Rev. Edward H. Leavitt.

Mr. Newton and his family embarked for India on their return in September last, his health being somewhat improved, though not fully restored. Miss Newton accompanied her parents under appointment as a teacher; and Miss Jamieson, daughter of the Rev. J. M. Jamieson, of Ambala, also went out, under Mr. Newton's care, as a teacher—thus giving the pleasing example of the children of missionaries devoting themselves in the bloom of their youth to the work in which their parents are spending their lives. The Rev. George O. Barnes and his wife, and the Rev. Edward H. Leavitt, embarked for this Mission in the same vessel. Their stations are not yet designated, nor is Mr. Newton's, though his name is reported above at the station formerly occupied by him. In treating of the stations in India, this report follows the order of their geographical position, from north-west to south-east, and not of the time when they were commenced,—with the exception of the minor stations of the Allahabad Mission.

LAHOR.

This station was formed in 1850. Lahor is the political capital of the Punjab, and its population is estimated at from 100,000 to 120,000 souls.

Church and Preaching.—In Hindustani, stated services have been held on the Sabbath at the Mission House and at the Poor House, and also on Thursday evening. The monthly concert meeting of prayer for the spread of the Gospel has also been held in Hindustani. The gates of the city and many other of the most favorable places for preaching have been visited by the missionaries and their assistants, this way of proclaiming the Gospel having received special attention.

"In this part of our work,"—that of bazar preaching,—the missionaries say, "we have sometimes been highly encouraged, and sometimes met with noisy and insolent opposition. The learned Musalmans have been repeatedly challenged to a fair discussion, either oral or written, but these challenges have, with one exception, been declined. On one occasion a discussion was held for four days in succession with a Maulavi, who had repeatedly opposed us in our preaching. Since then we have met with no opposition from him. Questions relating to the points in dispute between Christians and Musalmans have been circulated among their learned men, but without the effect of drawing them into discussion."

* Names of Missionaries and Assistants printed in Italic denote natives of the country.

In addition to preaching to the natives in Hindustani, an English service has been conducted on the Sabbath and on Wednesday evening.

The church at this station has received some tokens of the favor of God. Eight additional members have been received into its communion. One of these had formerly been a member of the church at Lodiana, but had been excommunicated; he gives evidence of repentance. Three of the new members were received from English churches. "Of the seventeen members now in connection with this church, three are engaged in preaching the Gospel to the natives, and five in teaching in the mission schools." The missionaries speak in warm terms of the two candidates for the ministry, as men of worth and influence, who with grace given from on high may be of eminent usefulness in preaching the Gospel to their countrymen. Several persons have come to the missionaries professing to inquire after the truth, and at the date of their report, four of this class were under instruction. Some are spoken of as being intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity, but not as feeling sensible of their condition as sinners.

Itinerating.—On two extended tours the Gospel was daily preached by the missionaries and their assistants. Mr. Morrison's journey extended eastward to Lodiana, and Mr. Forman's north-westward as far as Hazara, near the Indus, different routes being taken in going and returning; and special attention was given to the larger towns and cities. It cannot be doubted that by this means a large amount of Gospel truth has been communicated to the people. The following notices of these labors are quoted from the report of the Mission:

"In Hazara only one day was spent, almost the whole of which was occupied in instructing the people in Christianity. Nothing remarkable was observed at the time in the reception of the truth by the people, except an unusual degree of quiet attention, and a ready assent to the explanations of difficulties suggested; but afterwards we learned through a friend at Attock, and also from another gentleman who passed through the place, that considerable interest had been felt in the new doctrine which had been taught.

"A mela at Nurpur, in the mountains near Rawal Pindi, was also attended. This mela is frequented by large numbers of Pathans from the north, who seemed to differ little from the Musalmans of the Punjab, except in being more fierce, bigoted, and ignorant. They manifested not a little hatred and opposition, frequently threatening violence."

Thus different is the reception given to the messenger of the Gospel in different places, by those who alike for the first time had the opportunity of listening to the sacred message!

Schools.—The school in operation last year has been continued, with instruction in Persian, Sanscrit, Gurmukhi and English. Instruction is given in the usual branches of common school education, most of the scholars being yet in the beginning of their studies. Particular attention is paid to religious instruction. The Scriptures have been taught to all who could read, and the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer to many not yet able to read. In addition to this principal school, several vernacular schools, one of which is for girls, have been commenced in Lahor, and schools at two other cities, Gujuranwala and Rawal Pindi, have been under the general charge of the missionaries; so that the whole number of scholars under their care was about 700 on the 1st of October. Since that time negotiations have been in progress concerning schools in the vicinity of Gujerat, which will probably place several hundreds more of the native youth to some extent under missionary influence.

The three cities of Gujuranwala, Gujerat, and Rawal Pindi are all in a north-west direction from Lahor, at distances respectively of about 40, 75, and 160 miles, and contain in like order 20,000, 12,000 and 15,000 inhabitants. The arrangement by which the schools at these places are placed under the superintendence of the Mission is one that does not involve it in any expense, the funds for their support being provided from local sources. It enables the missionaries to supply Christian teachers, whenever these can be procured; Elisha Swift at Gujuranwala, and George Scott at Rawal Pindi, are examples. Christian books of instruction, including the Sacred Scriptures, are to be introduced, and the missionaries from Lahor will visit them as often as their other duties will permit, on their preaching excursions. In these ways a Christian influence and much Scripture truth, it is believed, will be brought to bear upon the scholars and their families, from which the happiest results may be expected. Towards the success of this general arrangement two conditions were requisite—the consent of the natives, and the co-operation of the English residents. Both of these have been given; and but for the cordial and liberal support of their English friends, the missionaries would have found it impracticable to enter upon this inviting field of labor. Even under the exisiting favorable circumstances, they look on these schools in some measure as an experiment. It may be found difficult to procure suitable teachers, for next to ministers of the Gospel, Christian teachers are the greatest want of the Hindus; and the missionaries may find the superintendence of the schools too heavy a charge for the time and strength at their disposal. Yet, in the view of all the circumstances, it has been considered expedient to embrace this method of trying to remove the gross darkness which prevails, and to substitute for it the light of Christian truth.

The little school for girls in Lahor, under the charge of Mrs. Morrison, met with opposition and discouragement at first; it was a new and strange thing to attempt to teach females to read! But greater success has attended it than was expected, though the number of scholars was only thirteen. They are taught plain needle-work, knitting, and reading; and the Scriptures are read and explained to them daily. A similar school at Rawal Pindi contains about thirty scholars. One of the vernacular schools in Lahor is for the children of the inmates of the Poor House, embracing about twenty-five scholars, whose progress and knowledge of Christian truth are spoken of with warm approval.

Buildings—Poor Fund.—"During the year," it is mentioned in the report of this station, "the mission house has been completed, and two chapels begun in the city, one of which is nearly finished."

About one hundred inmates continue in the Poor House, whose support is provided by the liberality of benevolent persons at Lahor. Religious instruction has been imparted to them, and their attention to it is described as not discouraging.

JALANDAR.

This station was formed in 1847. Jalandar is a city of about 70,000 inhabitants, situated in the Punjab, about thirty miles west of Lodiana, or one hundred and twenty miles eastward from Lahor. In the neighborhood of this city are numerous large towns. The missionary and assistants at this station were born and educated in India, a circumstance which has called forth on their behalf the warm sympathies, not only of their missionary co-laborers at other stations, but of many European friends living at Jalandar, and other places in the Punjab. Two of them were formerly connected with the mission school at Lodiana.

Church and Preaching.—No accessions to the church have been reported; though several persons presented themselves at different times as inquirers, whose subsequent conduct showed that they were not true disciples of Christ. The number of members last reported was seven. A prayer meeting on Sabbath morning for the edification of the little Christian community, an afternoon service on the same day, preaching and distributing books at a room rented for the purpose and at other places in the city, where large and attentive audiences were often collected, have been the means employed for making known the way of life. Concerning these labors, the report of the Mission speaks in these terms:

"Our native brethren are not able, they say, to mention any very striking incident of success; but they think evidence is not wanting to show that they have not been laboring in vain, and that the work of evangelizing the heathen is going on silently but powerfully to its final triumph, to the praise and glory of their Master."

Itinerating.—The minister, teacher, and Scripture reader made together a journey of four weeks, going to Kangra and the neighboring hills. Mr. Golak Nath also visited the fair at Jwala Mukhi, and the fairs held in the vicinity of the station. Many opportunities were enjoyed of disseminating the truth, and these native brethren were not a little encouraged by the attention paid to their message.

School.—The average number of scholars enrolled was 238, with an average attendance of 201—of whom 41 were in the English department, 135 in the Persian, and 25 in the Hindi. The study of the Scriptures, and religious instruction in general, have largely occupied the time of the scholars. Some of the more advanced scholars have studied the evidences of Christianity, geography, history of India, and Euclid; but most of them are still in the earlier stages of education. A more regular attendance of the scholars is reported, and their progress is considered to be satisfactory.

The native chief spoken of in the last report, the Rajah of Kaphurthala, continues to manifest his regard for Mr. Golak Nath, and still expresses his desire to place schools to be established in his territories under his charge. This subject has received the consideration of the Mission, and it was agreed to authorize him to undertake this important trust. His main difficulty will probably be that of finding teachers of suitable qualifications, men who can be intrusted with schools in the absence of the superintendent; but whatever amount of Christian instruction and influence can be introduced into these schools, will be all gain to the spread of the Gospel. This arrangement is prospective, however, and may readily be set aside by unforeseen circumstances or changes. It will not be allowed in any case to interfere with the main work of the Evangelist, but is regarded as an important part of that work. And the desire of the Rajah to have it carried into effect is at once a proof of his own enlightened views, and of the high estimation in which the missionary is held by some of his countrymen.

LODIANA.

The first station established by our Church in India is at this city. It was selected in 1833, and occupied in 1834; ever since that time it has been one of the most important missionary posts in the upper provinces. The population of Lodiana may be estimated at 80,000. It is situated on the main route from Delhi to Lahor, within five miles of the Sutlej, on the eastern side of that river.

A severe affliction fell on the missionaries at this station, in the removal by death of Mrs. Janvier, wife of the Rev. Levi Janvier. She had long been in feeble health, suffering under a hopeless disease, the consumption; but she was able to exert a happy influence over the girls of the orphan school and other native females, to whom, as well as to her associates in the missionary work, her death was a great and painful loss. But their loss was doubtless her gain. After a life of piety, she fell gently asleep in Jesus on the 5th of May. Her bereaved companion was required a few months afterwards to part with his youngest son, who was called after a brief illness to the Saviour's arms. In these bereavements, he will receive the sympathy of many Christian friends, and enjoy the support of divine grace. Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph were also bereaved of their youngest child, and during part of the year, Mrs. Rudolph suffered under severe illness, but she has been in a measure restored.

Church and Preaching.—The church has enjoyed a good measure of favor from the presence of the Lord. Two members under suspension have been restored to church communion, three added on examination, and four received by certificates of dismission from other churches, making the whole number 25. Several persons were under instruction as inquirers when the report of the station was made in October, concerning whom a favorable report is given; of these, four were inmates of the Poor House, and a fifth was the son of a pauper, a youth of fifteen, who gave pleasing evidence of conversion of heart unto Christ. His friends, fearing that he would make a profession of Christianity, removed him from Lodiana and the influence of the missionaries; but the Saviour will keep him, if he is one of his true followers.

Hindustani preaching twice on the Sabbath, and English in the evening, and during part of the year Hindustani preaching on Sabbath afternoon in a chapel at the same hour with the service in the church, two evening meetings during the week, a female prayer-meeting, and an infant school on Sabbath afternoon, under Mrs. Porter's charge, for the native Christian children and the younger orphans, have been the stated services at this station; while many opportunities have been embraced for the daily preaching of the Gospel in the streets of the city. Two preaching places were usually occupied on week evenings, where audiences were readily collected; and "some that came evidently with no other intention than to oppose the truth, have been the means of drawing the attention of the indifferent to the preaching of the divine word." At one time, some of the more influential Mohammedans challenged the missionaries to a public discussion, supposing that they could prove such contradictions in the Scriptures as to render them unworthy of confidence. The brethren declined to discuss these matters with them, knowing how impossible it would be to secure fairness in argument, but proposed to answer at their preaching-places any questions concerning religion that any one might wish to present. This offer the Musalmans accepted, and for a few evenings, "large numbers were present; but having propounded several things which they were quite unable to prove, it was insisted that they should go no further till these points were disposed of; and so the matter ended."

Missionary Tours.—The missionaries express regret that they could not devote more time to journeys for preaching "in the regions beyond." The fairs in the neighborhood of Lodiana were attended by them and by the Scripture readers; three tours were made by one of the latter into different parts of the country; and Mr. Rudolph spent six weeks in this service in the country lying southward from the station, taking several large cities and towns in his way. This tour is thus referred to in the report:

"In the larger places, such as Pail, Patiala, Naba, and Kotla, he stayed for a number of days, to give the people more extensive opportunities to hear. He also made little excursions to villages that were not on the direct road, leaving his tent in the morning and returning to it in the evening. In this way, almost every one of the larger villages of the district was brought within the hearing of the Gospel, including some that must on former tours have been passed over. Not much of the time being taken up in travelling, Mr. Rudolph was able to spend most of the day among the people, and found everywhere ready hearers and many that seemed deeply interested in the discussions. In most of the larger places he observed that the more educated were pretty well informed of the contents of the Gospel; much of it had recommended itself to their understanding, and it is hoped to their consciences. It afforded him great satisfaction to notice that the books distributed on former occasions were more or less read, and in some instances searched with attention. It was painful, however, to think that all those places might not see again the face of a Missionary for years to come. How can the natives under such circumstances be impressed with the idea that the Church is really in earnest about their conversion to Christianity?"

This is truly a solemn and painful inquiry, and the Committee desire to commend it to the hearts of the people of God.

Schools.—The number of pupils in the High School has ranged between 236 and 269—of whom the English department includes about 90, the rest being in the Persian department. No change has been made in the course of instruction, and the scholars are reported as having made good progress. The report of the station thus speaks of the religious aspect of this school, giving a view which might be presented of all the missionary schools, and one which furnishes a strong plea in favor of them as a means of spreading the Gospel among a heathen people:

"As the primary object of the school is to bring as many youth as possible under the influence of Christian instruction, and to place them in circumstances which will best enable them to judge for themselves of the claims of Christianity, we naturally inquire at the close of the year how far we have been successful in this respect. A pretty large number of our pupils, we believe, have acquired a correct knowledge of the plan of salvation as revealed in the Bible, and some among these make no secret of the fact that they do not believe in the religion of their country, and regard Christianity as the only true one. But no one of those now in the school has made a public profession of his faith. Ties of relationship continue to keep these promising youth in connection with heathenism, though they feel that they cannot regard it as the religion of their hearts. In the sudden death of one of the pupils in the first class, some months since, the scholars received a solemn warning, and for a time this event seemed to make a deep impression upon many, and especially on his classmates. The youth, who had been a number of years in the school, was a diligent, steady boy, and expected soon to finish his studies. Whether he was enabled in the last hours of his life to cast his sins on Jesus, and to rely on him for salvation, we are unable to say."

The friends of Missions will have faith to expect the happiest results from the Gospel daily taught in such schools as this. The native missionary and teacher at Jalandar were both formerly in connection with this school; and similar workmen that need not be ashamed will yet bear witness, it may be hoped, to the importance of the Christian lessons here taught.

The orphan girls' school continues under the charge of Mrs. Porter, and contains 23 inmates—of whom five were received during the year. There have also been several day scholars in attendance. Their course of study has been somewhat extended, and the Scriptures and other religious books still form a large part of their instruction. One of the girls was removed by death, of whom this touching and most pleasing account is given:

"Miriam was about fourteen years of age; and though she had not become a member of the visible church, yet there seemed to be cheering evidence that she was indeed a child of God. Her illness was protracted, and at the commencement of it she had many doubts and fears; but gradually the darkness fled away, and she was enabled to lay her load on Jesus. Her Bible and Hymn-book, the Pilgrim's Progress, and the story of Jane, the Young Cottager, were always near her; and when too weak to read herself, she would ask those around to read to her. On being asked why she loved Jesus, she answered, 'Because he bore my sins.' Instead of evincing, as formerly, a reluctance to die, she had a strong desire to depart and be with Christ. And thus she died, trusting in the alone merits of the Crucified One."

The Press has continued to be under the charge of Mr. Janvier. A larger number of pages than usual has been printed, as is shown by the annexed table:

Four Gospels and Acts—in Urdu—	12mo	5000	copies,	4,070,000	pages.
Gospel of John, "	12mo	6000	"	900,000	"
Acts, "	12mo	5000	"	910,000	"
Psalms, in Punjabi,	8vo	8000	"	1 576,000	"
Dictionary, "	4to	600	"	262,800	"
Sundry Job-work,				111,862	"
				7,830,662

The Mission in their report notice with satisfaction the completion of the Punjabi Dictionary. This work has been in progress at intervals for several years, as Messrs. Newton and Janvier, by whom it has been chiefly compiled, could devote attention to it. The cost of printing it will be nearly repaid by its sales. It must prove a very valuable auxiliary to missionaries and others in studying the Gurmukhi language. Several portions of the Scripture and Tracts are in press, which will be particularly reported when finished.

At the Dispensary, 1857 patients have received medicine, though Mr. Rudolph was able to give but a small part of his time to this work of benevolence. In the Poor House, the average number of inmates has been twelve: remained from last year, 8; received, 18; dismissed, 11; died, 3; remaining at the end of the year, 12. The Scripture readers have attended to the instruction of these poor people, and not without encouragement, as has already appeared.

SABATHU.

This station, the Committee report with sincere regret, has not yet been re-occupied. Including the vicinity, Sabathu contains some ten or twelve thousand inhabitants. It is situated in the lower ranges of the Himalaya mountains, at an elevation of 4,000 feet, in a delightful climate; and it is distant from Lodiana about 110 miles, from Ambala about 70, and from the plains, 15. From this place there is access to mountain tribes, whose population is estimated at 250,000 souls. It was occupied first in 1836, and it is hoped that the good work of the Lord may at no distant day be resumed in this interesting field of labor.

AMBALA.

This city was the political capital of the Protected Sikh States, most of the chiefs having their vakils or diplomatic agents there. It is now the principal military station of the British in the Upper Provinces. Its population is estimated at 85,000. It is about equally distant from Lodiana, Sabathu, and Saharunpur, being from 65 to 75 miles from each. As a missionary station, though contemplated as important to be occupied in 1833–4, it was not taken possession of until 1848.

The health of Mrs. Jamieson and Mrs. Orbison has been greatly impaired, and at the latest accounts was such as to cause much solicitude.

The Church and Preaching.—The number of church members reported is fourteen. One member was dismissed to the church at Lodiana upon his removal to that city; and it became a painful duty to excommunicate another member for continued wilful and aggravated immorality. His case was the more distressing, as he had been for years under Christian influence, having formerly been an inmate of the orphan asylum at Futtehgurh, where he was admitted to the church. Two members were received on letters of dismission from another church, but it has not been the privilege of the missionaries to baptize any during the year from among the heathen. Several hopeful inquirers are referred to in the report of the station, two of whom were pupils in the school.

Preaching in Hindustani twice on the Sabbath has been maintained throughout the year, service in the morning being held in the new chapel in the city, and in the afternoon in one of the dwelling-houses of the missionaries. Of these services the missionaries say:

"At the former place we have usually had, besides church-members and nominal Christians, a number of our schoolboys, and others who, attracted chiefly by the singing and the novelty of the scene, have turned aside from the highway to see what these things meant. Some have listened with much apparent interest to the new doctrines, and occasionally showed their assent; others have entered, gazed idly around, and then passed on unconcerned. We hope that when the Lord writeth up the people, it shall be said that this and that man was born there. The afternoon service is attended principally by the native Christians and their families, and sometimes a few others."

In the bazar, the native helpers, accompanied usually by one or both of the missionaries, have attended the chapel or the school-house almost every evening, where their audiences have commonly been of an encouraging kind. Less opposition is encountered now than in former years, particularly from the Musalmans, and a growing desire to become acquainted with the doctrines of the Bible is said to characterize all classes. Many have received the Word of Life and Tracts, to consult them at their own houses.

School.—The new building in the city has been occupied for the greater part of the year, and is found to be of great advantage to the school. The scholars, in the three departments of English, Persian and Urdu, and Sanscrit and Hindi, reached the number of 115. The usual studies have been pursued. The scholars in the Sanscrit and Hindi department, being chiefly of Brahman families, have shown a greater amount of prejudice and bigotry than the others; but it is mentioned of all as remarkable, that more difficulty has been found "in getting the boys to study in the vernaculars our scientific than our religious books,"—a fact to be explained in various ways, and significant of the bearing of science upon the present state of the native mind in India. In no other country do correct knowledge and sound principles of induction go further to effect a radical change in the religious views of the people, and to render their continued attachment to the existing superstition an impossibility. Concerning the religious instruction and influence of the school, the brethren say in their report:

"The grand object has been to make this a thoroughly Christian institution, though it is a matter of regret that we still have to bear with so many heathenish prejudices and practices." "There are on the whole evident signs of improvement in all parts of the school, and we are not left without the encouragement of knowing that impressions of the best kind have been left on the hearts of many of the youth. One of the young men, in connection with the Persian and Urdu department, a Hindu of high caste and respectable connections, has frequently attended our religious meetings and expressed a wish to be baptized. He came at last to live with the native Christians, and broke his caste; but his relatives, having failed by persuasion, carried him off by violence in our absence at church one Sabbath morning. By threats and bribery and various inducements, they so wrought upon his mind that when summoned with his relatives before the civil authorities, and permitted to choose for himself, he made statements which were false and contradictory of what he had told us, and expressed his willingness to go back and remain with his relatives. He has not again returned to us. We hear that he is narrowly watched. If he had been a true disciple of the Lord, he would perhaps have stood the trial; though perhaps he has been allowed to fall only for a time. The Lord knoweth them that are his."

Missionary Tours.—Mr. Orbison, having charge of the school, and being prevented also by the state of his wife's health, was not able to engage in service of this kind; but Mr. Jamieson made a journey in January into the country lying south of the station. He visited the large towns of Pahvi, Kytal, Taneshwar, Ladwa, Shahbad, and many smaller places—all within thirty miles of Ambala. Most favorable opportunities were enjoyed on this tour for the preaching and distribution of the Word of God. Several large fairs were also attended during the year. At these—

"The usual agencies were employed for bringing the Gospel to bear on the hearts of the heathen. The annual fair at Mani Majara, near the base of the mountains on the road from Ambala to Sabathu, was attended by many thousands of people. It is held in honor of the goddess Mansi. It lasts from three to five days, and affords a good opportunity of preaching to many of the Hill people, who cannot easily be reached in their mountain fastnesses. At this fair Mr. Jamieson with the native helpers attended, and met with many of his old hearers from the neighborhood of Sabathu."

SAHARUNPUR.

This station was formed in 1836. The city of Saharunpur is situated on the east side of the Ganges, about 130 miles south-east from Lodiana, and contains a population of about 85,000 souls. The brethren at this place, and also at Dehra, are in ecclesiastical connection with the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, while as missionaries they are under the direction of the Board, in the same manner as the missionaries at other stations.

For the enjoyment of continued health, and the general prosperity of their work throughout the year, the missionaries at Saharunpur begin their report with the expression of devout thanksgiving. They specify among the reasons for gratitude, "that the native Christians, and all others under their care, have conducted themselves with much propriety, and in the spirit of great harmony and good will one towards another."

Church and Preaching.—Four adults have been admitted to the communion of the church, on examination, and four children have been baptized. The whole number of church members is twenty-four, the same as reported last year, some of the members then at Saharunpur having removed to the new station at Dehra.

Public worship on Sabbath morning in Hindustani, and in the afternoon in English, prayer-meetings with lectures or expositions of the Scripture on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and the monthly concert meeting of prayer for the spread of the Gospel, have been the stated or regular services in the church and at the mission premises. The less formal preaching in the verandah of the church and in the bazars is thus described:

"The preaching at the city church and in the bazars has been continued nearly every afternoon throughout the year, and the audiences have usually been much larger than formerly. Sometimes more than two hundred have collected at the verandah of the church; many of these have taken seats and remained all the time of the discourses, and manifested much interest in the discussions that were held as to the relative merits of Christianity and their own systems, and in listening to the leading truths of the Gospel."

"Several religious inquirers have been with us during the past year, but only one has manifested sincerity, and his past experience and present conduct satisfy us that he is an humble believer in Jesus. His baptism, it is expected, will soon take place."

Itinerant Labors.—A tour was made in the cold season, on which more than thirty towns and cities were visited. At each place portions of the Scriptures and tracts were distributed, and the Gospel was preached to many hearers. The fair at Hardwar was visited by the missionaries of Saharunpur and Dehra, with two catechists and some other native helpers. Fairs at two other places were also attended by the missionaries and the native assistants. And a second effort was made in the work of colportage; the catechists in turns for several weeks in succession during the cold season travelled through the district around Saharunpur, visiting more than fifty villages and towns. Some extracts from the report of the station will serve to show the influence of this varied work of evangelization. Of the tour it is said:

"In almost every place serious and respectful attention was paid to the messages of mercy, and in no instance was decided opposition offered. In some of the places visited, one of our number had visited and distributed books nine years previously. The change that had taken place, in consequence of the visits of other missionaries, was strikingly remarkable. Instead of the noisy mob gathering around, when an attempt was made to proclaim the Gospel, now a crowd would patiently assemble and try to learn something about the Gospel plan of salvation." "On several occasions, [the catechists in their colporteur labors] experienced much hospitality and kindness from the head men of the villages, and felt greatly encouraged in their labors. This important work, so well calculated to spread a knowledge of Christianity in our immediate neighborhood, and attended with so little expense, we intend to pursue from year to year."

The fair at Hardwar, where the Ganges is worshipped on its issue from the mountains, was attended by a smaller number of pilgrims than usual. In connection with this remark, we find a notice, which shows how all things are working together against Hinduism:

"A very important event took place this year during the time of the fair. The great Ganges Canal, the largest in the world, having its head at this place, was opened with great demonstrations of interest by the rulers of the land. A considerable portion of the stream, so sacred in the estimation of the Hindus, was diverted into this new channel, and it was feared that some evidence of displeasure on the part of the pilgrims might take place. [Some of the Brahmans had assured them that the goddess would indignantly refuse to leave her usual channels, and that only evil would result from the impious attempt to change her course!] The event will, no doubt, have its influence in destroying the deep feeling of veneration for this river as a goddess which has existed for so many ages."

Schools.—The English school has had about 50 scholars, and the vernacular school about 100. In the orphan boys' institution, 13 pupils are under Christian training. The village school at Pahassu is reported as having but few scholars, and not likely to have more unless an efficient teacher can be obtained. The course of instruction in all these schools has been nearly the same as in former years. Scriptural knowledge and Christian influence, in various forms, constitute the characteristic features, while lessons are given in the common branches of education, and the sure result is already in some degree apparent:

"The youth thus instructed under us are gradually losing respect for the absurdities of heathenism, and becoming better able to comprehend and appreciate scientific and religious truth. Their prejudices against Christianity are being gradually removed; and when released from parental authority and allowed to act for themselves, they will give the Gospel a far more favorable hearing than it has yet received. Indeed, already many of them are found out of school hours in the assemblies that meet daily to hear the Gospel; and whenever we meet them we are treated with respect. Schools are admirably adapted to prepare the way of the Lord in this land, and to spread abroad the glorious Gospel of Christ. We doubt not but that from these institutions much fruit will be reaped in a future day."

The orphan boys still divide their time between English and vernacular lessons, and take their recreation in attending to useful manual employments. Separated from corrupting native society, and receiving the special instructions of the missionaries, they are regarded with deep interest as a class of youths from amongst whom valuable laborers in the Gospel vineyard may be expected. Some of them are communicants, and "the principles and deportment of all seem to be as good as those of lads of the same age in a Christian land." One attainment made by these boys, there is reason to apprehend, could not often be met with amongst boys of the same age in this country.

"They have continued the practice of committing to memory twenty verses of Scripture every week, and their minds are now stored with the contents of the New Testament from the beginning of Matthew to the 3d chapter of 1st Corinthians. In the Shorter Catechism in Hindustani and other epitomes of Scripture truth, they are well instructed; and they are also required to carry home with them from church the substance of the discourses they hear every Sabbath. In general, we are much encouraged by the present state of this interesting institution."

DEHRA.

The town of Dehra is situated in a beautiful valley called the Dhoon, which lies just within the lower Himalaya mountains, and which is separated from the plains by a low range of hills. Dehra is 47 miles distant from Saharunpur, in an easterly direction. Its population is about 15,000. It was occupied as a station in connection with Saharunpur last year, as was mentioned in the last Annual Report of the Committee.

A suitable dwelling house and premises have been obtained, and a spacious and substantial building was nearly completed at the date of the report, which will answer as a church for Hindustani services and a school-house. As a proof of the confidence placed in our missionary brethren, and the sympathy felt for their great work, it is gratifying to the Committee to state, that these buildings have been provided by the liberality of Christian friends, mostly in India, without drawing upon the funds of the Board.

The labors of the missionary have been expended on preaching and teaching, in which the native helpers have rendered useful assistance.

Religious Services have been held at the mission house and premises in Hindustani and in English, and much out-door labor has been performed. A few native Christians, six of them being communicants, mostly from Saharunpur, are at this station; special reference to their welfare has been had in the Hindustani service. Concerning the out-door preaching, the report of the station says:

"The Gospel has been preached in the streets of Dehra, and in all the adjacent villages, from time to time, and many portions of the Word of God and other religious books have been distributed. On all occasions the Word has been listened to with respect, and sometimes with marked attention and seriousness. Some have come to us inquiring the way of salvation, but as yet none have been admitted to the ordinance of baptism. [A visit was made to Hardwar, as reported in connection with Saharunpur,] and during the continuance of the Sikh mela at Dehra in the latter end of March, we were enabled to preach daily to the multitudes that frequented it."

Early in January, Mr. Woodside wrote concerning his congregation in the following terms:

"On Sabbath, while preaching to a large crowd of natives, I had as hearers people from Chinese Tartary—people from hundreds of miles distant, in the mountains. During the cold season, we have a great many such here, who come to trade. . . . This fact shows the importance of this position. Some eight or ten people, all hard-working men, come night after night to inquire the way of salvation, and search into the truth of their own and our religion. . . . I have no doubt that the day of India's redemption is rapidly drawing nigh."

The School was commenced early in January of last year, with but two scholars in the English department, and in February a Persian and Hindi department was opened. At first considerable opposition was shown. False rumors were put in circulation, charging the missionaries with the design of imprisoning and kidnapping the children, and with the purpose of destroying caste. This opposition evinced the rage of the great adversary, who saw that his kingdom, for ages undisturbed, was now in danger of being broken. It was fruitless, however, as the school has steadily gained the confidence of the natives, until at the last dates 120 boys were in daily attendance. A small fee for entrance is charged. From the beginning this school has been conducted on exclusively Christian principles. It is opened daily with prayer, and the Scriptures are in constant use. This instruction, in connection with the ordinary lessons of education, cannot fail in due time to produce salutary results.

In connection with this report of the stations at Saharunpur and Dehra, occupied by brethren of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, it gives the Committee pleasure to mention that the Associate Presbyterian Church have sent a missionary, the Rev. Andrew Gordon, and his wife and sister, to this part of India. At the request of the Board of Missions of the Associate Church, the Committee agreed to transmit the funds provided by that Board for the support of this missionary company; and they hope that other missionaries from this respected branch of the Presbyterian family will soon join the laborers now in the field.

FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

FUTTEHGURH.—Rev. Messrs. John J. Walsh, Julius F. Ullman, and David E. Campbell, and their wives; John Houston, Hanukh, Robert Breckenridge, catechists; Ishwuree Dass, and Dhokal Parshad, teachers.

MYNPURIE.—Rev. John E. Freeman and his wife; Hulassi Roy and William, catechists.

Of the native catechists, John Houston, Hanukh, and Hulassi Roy are candidates for license to preach the Gospel, under the care of the Presbytery of Furrukhabad; and John Houston, Hanukh and William spend part of their time as teachers.

Mr. Seeley's health has not become much, if at all, improved. He continues to suffer from a bronchial disease; and though it was his desire to go back to India, yet as he would not be able to undertake any missionary work but that of teaching, and this with some uncertainty, the Committee considered it to be inexpedient to authorize his return. They hope that in this climate he may be able to be long useful in the service of the Redeemer.

FUTTEHGURH.

The station at this place was formed in 1838. It is on the river Ganges, about 250 miles north-west of Allahabad, and in a part of the country teeming with inhabitants. In the immediate neighborhood is the city of Furrukhabad, containing about 100,000 souls. Some of the mission houses and schools are at Futtehgurh, and others are at the larger city.

The mission families were visited with more than usual sickness during the year; but their lives were graciously spared, and their work, with some drawbacks, was carried forward in the usual methods.

Church and Preaching.—It is with much regret that the missionaries report only one member added to the church, while one was removed by death. During the year, fifteen children were baptized. Of the whole number of members, the report of the station thus speaks:

"From a careful examination of our sessional records, it appears that our whole number is less than formerly reported. This has been owing to the fact that the yearly accessions have been reported, and no notice taken of the deaths of those who had left the station. The number is 91, [instead of 97 as reported last year, of whom 73 are natives. And of these native members, 16 are at other stations.] . . . We who are stronger have been helping the weaker, and our church has been sending out its little streams to fructify and gladden the barren wastes about us."

Most of the sixteen members thus reported at other stations will next year probably be enumerated in the returns of the churches in those places, and thus a further reduction will appear in the membership of the church at Futtehgurh, though its usefulness will thereby have been enlarged. Yet if the Spirit should be poured out from on high, the report of next year might show a large accession of members to this favored church.

On the Sabbath, two Hindustani services and one English at Futtehgurh, a Hindustani service at Barpur, a village between Futtehgurh and Furrukhabad, a Bible class at the same place, and an address to the prisoners in the jail, were the stated public means of grace. A weekly service at Futtehgurh and at Barpur, and the monthly concert of prayer for the spread of the Gospel, have been conducted as in former years. Of the Wednesday evening meeting at Futtehgurh, the station report says, "The attendance has been very pleasing, and the attention remarkably good," which is an index of a satisfactory state of religious feeling in the church.

Itinerating.—The months of January and February were spent by Messrs. Ullman and Campbell in tents, preaching from village to village to those who have no other opportunity of hearing the Word of God. Mr. Walsh accompanied his two oldest children on their way to this country to Dinapore, where they were taken under Mr. Warren's care. On this journey of about 500 miles he had frequent opportunities of holding forth the word of life. The report of the station adds:

"Besides these itinerations, Mr. Ullman has preached a great deal in and about Furrukhabad, though not to the same extent as formerly, on account of his having charge of the city school. He and one of the catechists have generally preached two or three times a week, and distributed a large number of tracts, but without any apparent fruit as yet. Large and attentive audiences have come together, who listen and go away without showing any concern for the salvation of their souls. The catechists have also visited the cantonments of Futtehgurh and the neighboring villages almost daily."

The Schools at this station are reported as all in successful progress. The High School in Furrukhabad under Mr. Ullman's charge numbered 265 pupils, of whom nearly one-third are from Musalman families. A few years ago, through pride and prejudice, hardly any scholars from this class would attend the instructions of a missionary. This prejudice has partly given way, but the rule adopted by the government, of employing in the public offices only such natives as can read and write in Urdu and Hindi, has exerted most influence on their attendance at missionary schools. The grade of instruction in the native languages has been considerably raised in this school, so that the boys in the highest vernacular classes are now studying, with a few exceptions, all that is taught in the highest English classes.

"At the request of three of the oldest pupils, Mr. Ullman delivered a course of public lectures in Hindustani in one of the school-rooms, on the claims of the Bible. They were attended by all the teachers, about 100 of the scholars, and a few strangers. It was pleasing to see the boys of the first class taking copious notes of the lectures when delivered. We trust that good will result from this mode of engaging their attention to the truths of God's word."

The school in the cantonments of Futtehgurh has 107 scholars—of whom 60 were in English and 47 in vernacular classes. Much attention has been paid to their religious instruction. This school is under Mr. Campbell's charge, and as a bronchial complaint renders him less able to preach, he has given the more time to the school. Its current expenses for rooms, native teachers, &c., have been defrayed heretofore by the subscriptions of friends at the station, including that of the Maha Raja, Dhuleep Singh, who is now in England.

In three bazar schools, 110 boys are reported. They are all within the gates of Furrukhabad, and having been removed to more frequented places they are better attended than formerly, and afford better preaching stations. Besides these schools, ten others, supported by the Maha Raja, during his absence have been placed under the superintendence of the missionaries. All these boys study portions of the Bible and Scripture history.

The cantonment girls' school, under the charge of Mrs. Walsh, reports 32 scholars, whose progress has been encouraging. "To teach them to read the Bible, and to store their minds with hymns and the Catechism," is the chief object of this school. The teacher is one of the Christian village women, who gives good satisfaction to her employers, and the school is liberally supported by the European ladies of the station.

The school for the village girls is still under Mrs. Campbell's instruction, and the scholars have made pleasing progress. A school for the younger boys of the Asylum and the village boys is spoken of in favorable terms; and the hope is expressed that these Christian native youth will grow up to reward the labor bestowed on their instruction. The number of scholars in these schools is not reported, but may reach about 35.

The Asylum and Christian Village.—The number of orphans in the asylum on the 1st of October was 22; married during the year, 11; ran away, 1; appointed as a colporteur at another station, 1; received, 4—of whom 3 were boys. The report says:

"The fourth [of the newly received] is a little girl, eight years old. She was in company with her parents, travelling from Lahor, and her mother having died on the way, her father cruelly deserted her about eighteen miles from this place. After being thus deserted and without a single friend, she was taken in charge by the police, and her case reported to the English magistrate, who sent her to the asylum. She is an interesting little girl, and is happy to find a home and friends here."

The younger orphans are making good progress at school. The larger boys are mostly employed in weaving. A number of looms have been put in operation, under the superintendence of a weaver. As compared with tent-making, weaving has some advantages, though it is somewhat doubtful whether it will prove an occupation equally remunerating.

The village of Isaipur was at first an appendage to the Asylum. It is composed of those who were formerly inmates there, but are now men and women acting for themselves. An accession of seven families has been made to the village during the year. Considerable sickness occurred, "owing to the unusual fall of rain, being over fifty inches, and about double the usual quantity." The missionaries say:

"Our village women have reaped some benefit from the new looms, as they have prepared the thread for weaving, and thus added a little to their pecuniary resources. Independently of this, it is always an object to give them employment, as occupation of some kind keeps them dwellers at home, and tends to make everything go on much more harmoniously. The usual Bible classes have been kept up most of the year, . . . with a good deal of encouragement."

The Relief Society has been continued, having Mr. Walsh's services as secretary. Subscriptions amounting to Rs. 2329, or $1,164, were received from benevolent persons, and a large amount of poverty relieved. About 30 inmates are supported in the Poor House, a number of whom are lepers. One of the Christian young men instructs them daily in the Word of God. Some of the native Christians who had been laid aside by sickness have received aid from this source.

The two Candidates for Licensure are still under instruction; one under Mr. Walsh, and the other under Mr. Ullman. The report thus speaks of them:

"It is not designed to give them ordination, but to prepare them to be efficient licensed catechists, that when they go out they may go with the confidence and authority of Presbytery. This will secure fitness and ability, the two great things to be desired for this work."

MYNPURIE.

This station was formed in 1843. The city of Mynpurie is about forty miles distant from Futtehgurh, to the west, on the way to Agra. It contains a population of 18,000, which is largely composed of Brahman families.

Preaching.—The Sabbath morning service in Hindustani has been better attended than in former years. This service is followed by a Sabbath school, and in the afternoon a Bible class is taught. During the week the Gospel has been preached in the towns and villages around, and at the melas or fairs when they have been held. A tour was made in the cold season to the fair at Bateswar, and thence through the territory of the Rajah of Bhurtpore. The people gave a willing attention to the messages spoken to them, expressed sometimes their desire for repeated visits, and in one place requested that one of the catechists might remain with them. As the result of these labors, however, the missionary has not been permitted to receive any converts into the church. Some persons have appeared to be sincere inquirers after the truth. Two of these are thus spoken of by Mr. Freeman:

"We have with us a young man of the farmer caste, and his mother has joined him. They lived near Kanouge, and have relatives there and at Futtehgurh. They went to Muttra on a pilgrimage, and there heard the Gospel, and from that time determined to embrace it. They appear well. Mrs. Freeman instructs the mother, who is about fifty years of age, by reading and explaining to her the Bible. The son attends my class for instruction."

Schools.—These are reported as continuing "the same in number and instruction," as in former years, there being 236 scholars in the English, Hindi, and Urdu classes. Mr. Freeman adds, "both our city school and our branch school have made excellent progress."

The catechist, Hulassi, continues his studies with a view to licensure by the Presbytery, and is reading the Gospel of John in Greek.

Distribution of Books.—Of this method of doing good, the report of the station says:

"The desire for knowledge increases among all classes. We have had many applications for Christian books. One man, living ninety miles from us, applied by letter through the post office for several Christian books. We have sold a few Testaments and other books; but they are taken chiefly by those who have been or still are connected with some school."

AGRA MISSION.

AGRA.—Rev. Messrs. James L. Scott, Rev. Joseph Warren, and Rev. Robert S. Fullerton, and their wives; Rev. Robert E. Williams; Mulsahai and George David, catechists.

The station at Agra was commenced in 1846. The city is situated on the river Jumna, 875 miles from Calcutta, and has a population of about 80,000. It is the seat of Government of the north-western Presidency, and a place of great influence.

Mr. Warren and his family reached this country in August, after an absence of sixteen years. They return for the sake of Mrs. Warren's health, and to make arrangements for the education of their children, but expect to go back to their work in India. Since his return Mr. Warren has been able, to some extent, to plead for the missionary cause among the churches. Mr. Scott and his wife arrived at Agra in August. He has resumed his former labors in connection with the North India Bible Society, preaching and superintending bazar schools.

The Church is again receiving supplies for its pulpit and pastoral service from the Mission. The labors of a respected minister of the Free Church of Scotland were enjoyed for some time, but in the latter part of August he accepted a call to Bombay, and Mr. Fullerton was chosen pastor in his place. This congregation has always been closely connected with the Missions of the Board, its first members having been received at Allahabad under the ministry of the late Mr. McEwen. Most of its members are East Indians; and as two of the schools of this Mission are attended principally by youths of the same class, it has strong claims on the services of our brethren. The number of church members when last reported was forty-five. During the year one native convert has been received by baptism, and "a young man (an East Indian) of a most excellent Christian character has entered upon the study of theology."

In addition to services in English, a Hindustani service is held in the church, which is attended by the native Christians connected with the Mission, the boys of the schools, a number of lower class East Indians, who are but little acquainted with English, and a good many of the servants in families belonging to the English congregation. This Hindustani service is conducted by Mr. Scott, who also preaches in the same language to an interesting congregation of about sixty persons on Thursday evenings, at the house of one of the members of the church. Services in Hindustani have also been conducted by Mr. Fullerton, and the catechists have gone daily to the bazars and neighboring villages to preach.

Schools.—Both the seminaries continue to be conducted with vigor and success. They are spoken of in the report of the Mission in brief but gratifying terms:

"Mr. Williams has confined his labors mainly to the boys' school, of which he is the principal, and in which the energies of one missionary must always be expended to secure the success of the undertaking. The attendance has been good, the number of boys at no time being much under a hundred. They have made good progress in their studies, and the school enjoys the confidence of the community.

"The girls' school, under the care of Mrs. Fullerton, has had its share of public favor, but has suffered to some extent from the removal to another station of its excellent friend, Mrs. Muir, wife of the Secretary to the government, and also from the death of one of the teachers. . . . But notwithstanding its discouragements, the school is in a flourishing condition. The highest number in attendance during the year was fifty, and the lowest thirty."

In the bazar school, which was spoken of in former Reports, thirty scholars have been under Christian instruction; this school was supported by the church at Agra, but has been transferred to the mission. Another bazar school has been set on foot, with from fifty to sixty scholars, which is taught by a native Christian. This example, and that of a private school taught by a female member of the church, and attended by children from Roman Catholic families as well as Protestant, are striking proofs of the benign influence of the Gospel, which makes those who receive it ready to engage in good works.

"In reviewing the past year," the missionaries say in their report, "while we can mention nothing of a marked encouraging nature, we cannot complain of marked discouragements. . . . We have an open field, and our prospects are now brighter than they ever have been since the Mission was established."

To this encouraging general remark may be added the views expressed by Mr. Warren, showing the happy influence of the Mission in reference to particular objects:

It has "developed and directed the efforts of other people. Consider, for example:—1. The almost self-supporting system of our East India schools, important especially as embodying opposition to the Papist institutions at Agra;—2. The church—which nows pays nearly fifty dollars a month to the Mission, which until lately supported a vernacular school, and one of whose female members teaches a school for poor native Christian children, aided by donations from Christian friends;—3. The fund raised by the English to aid poor scholars in our East India schools;—4. The course of lectures that was got up by our Mission, which brought others out to help to enlighten the public—lectures decidedly Christian, and attended by a good many natives who had learned English;—5. The hope that some persons may be brought into the ministry, and the certainty that many will be trained to aid the missionary work."

These are important auxiliaries to the great object of the missionary, that of making known the unsearchable riches of Christ among the heathen.

ALLAHABAD MISSION.

ALLAHABAD.—Rev. Messrs. Joseph Owen, Robert M. Munnis, Lawrence G. Hay, and Horatio W. Shaw, and their wives; Mirza Jan Beg, Simeon, George Douglas, Yunas Singh, Bhagwandas, catechists.

FUTTEHPORE.—Rev. Gopeenath Nundy; Kasim Ali, catechist; Henry Trissler, Scripture reader.

BANDA.—Paul Qaim Khan, catechist and teacher.

ALLAHABAD.

This city is situated at the junction of the rivers Ganges and Jumna, and contains a population of some 70,000 souls. It is accounted by the natives as one of the holy places of India; large numbers of people, amounting sometimes to hundreds of thousands, resort to this city during some weeks every year, to obtain purification from their sins by ablutions in the Ganges. The Mission was commenced here in 1836.

The Committee report with regret that the native licentiate preacher, Babu John Hari, has been released from his connection with the Mission. Under the influence of bereavement in his family, and his own somewhat impaired health, he became desirous to remove for a time to a station in one of the upper missions; and arrangements for this purpose were resolved upon. Afterwards he yielded to the proposal of an English missionary, made without consultation with the brethren at Allahabad, to remove to his station lower down the river. Regretting not only his removal but his transfer, the missionaries affectionately commended him to the grace and blessing of God.

In the absence of reports from Messrs. Owen and Shaw, some parts of the work at this station must be imperfectly presented. Besides their duties in preaching the Gospel, Mr. Owen has given a part of his time to the work of translation, and has visited the sub-stations of Futtehpore and Banda, and Mr. Shaw has been largely occupied with the school. The labors of Messrs. Munnis and Hay will be seen in the following accounts—the former being engaged chiefly in the work of bazar preaching, and the latter having charge of the press, in addition to his work in orally making known the way of life.

Church and Religious Services.—The statistics of the church are as follows: baptized, infants, fourteen; admitted to the communion, on examination, two; restored, one; dismissed to form a church at Futtehpore, six; died, three; now in communion, forty-eight.

Of Ganesh, one of the departed church members, who was formerly employed on the press, Mr. Hay writes: "His general walk and attendance at worship, indicated an intelligent and living faith. I hope he is among the ransomed of our Lord." And of Rebecca, wife of George Douglas, the other church member whose death is reported, Mr. Owen says: "When the fatal nature of the disease of which she died became known, she received the intelligence with entire calmness, saying it was better to depart and be with Christ. I visited her frequently, and believe she was ready to meet her Lord." A man was also called away by death who had been a teacher in connection with one of the mission schools, though not a Christian by public profession—of whom Mr. Munnis says: "We hope he is now enjoying the rest which remaineth to the people of God."

Besides the stated services in the church, conducted by the missionaries in turn, Mr. Hay reports two services on the Sabbath in the chapel connected with the press, one on Wednesday evening, and morning worship with the people in his employ. In these services he was aided by John Hari, the licentiate preacher, "who performed a large part of these preaching duties with his customary faithfulness." One of the members admitted to the communion of the church was from this congregation, the daughter of a former foreman of the press. Mr. Munnis also maintained two services on the Sabbath at his own premises, the second being conducted chiefly by the catechists. All these services are held in Hindustani, except the evening service on Sabbath in the church, which is in English, and they are described as well attended. It is greatly desired by the brethren, that the Spirit of God would accompany, with demonstration and power, the word thus statedly preached.

Itinerating—Bazar Preaching.—Journeys were made by most of the missionaries, at different times, accompanied by some of the catechists, to make known the way of salvation among the people. Accounts or notices of these tours have been published in the Record and Foreign Missionary. Concerning these journeys, the brethren write as follows:

"It is a great pity," says, Mr. Munnis, "that we cannot itinerate more. According to the present plan, our visits are few and far between. The country people are everywhere ready to hear."

"I wish it were possible," Mr. Hay writes, "to travel cheaper, so that we might visit frequently a fixed number of preaching places in this district. The missionary's visits are so few, and repeated at such long intervals, that much of the efficacy of his preaching is neutralized. The people are everywhere ready and willing to hear, and only need the steady ministration of the truth in order to usher in the day when idolatry and superstition shall perish forever."

In the bazars and at the fairs, a large amount of labor has been performed. Mr. Munnis devotes his time chiefly to this kind of work—of which he thus writes:

"I have been assisted by the catechists, Simeon and Bhagwandas. We have usually gone out twice a day to the bazars and villages within visiting distance. We have also attended almost all the melas held throughout the year, . . . and generally had good and attentive audiences. Every three months pensioners come from all quarters, and chiefly from the kingdom of Oude, to receive their pensions. The concourse lasts for nearly a month each time. On these occasions we have had particularly attentive and orderly hearers. . . . We have also done something in the way of visiting respectable men at their houses, and uniformly met with kind and respectful treatment."

Mr. Hay says of this branch of his work:

"In the bazar Mirza has as usual been well received. In the chapel verandah, we have sometimes obtained good audiences and attentive hearers. We have often been visited by natives living in the city to converse about religion. . . . There are a number of melas held in this vicinity annually, at which I always try to attend with my catechists."

Schools.—The attendance in the college or principal school of the Mission has largely increased. The term closed on the 1st of December, with 635 scholars; the average daily attendance for three months before having been 550. The usual report of this school has not been received. In four bazar schools, under the superintendence of Mr. Munnis, from 140 to 160 boys are taught reading, writing, &c., and receive constant religious instruction. They are visited daily, and their verandahs make excellent preaching stations. Of the girls' vernacular school, no report has been received; last year it contained thirty scholars. In the orphan girls' school, eighteen scholars are reported. Their deportment and progress in study are spoken of as encouraging. Most of them are very young. Of the orphan boys' school, the usual report has not been received.

The Press.—"The amount of printing reported exceeds that of last year," Mr. Hay writes, "and there is a larger number of Tract publications. One of these, the History of the Jews, was translated in Hindi by Mirza Jan Beg. This is a very good book, and is so much in demand that a second edition of 2,000 copies is already begun." Among the issues of the press during the year ending October 1, the following works are specified:

	Pages	Copies.	Pages.
Sanscrit Hymns,	21	800	16,800
Refutation of Mahommedanism, in Urdu,	356	1,500	534,000
Hindu Pilgrim, in Hindi,	243	2,000	486,000
Praise and Prayer to Christ, in Hindi,	24	5,000	120,000
Deliverance from Sin, "	12	5,000	60,000
Short Sermon, "	12	5,000	60,000
History of the Jews, "	322	800	257,600
Hymns, in English,	10	200	2,000
Instructor, No. 2, "	106	1,600	169,600

Nothing more could be desired in the efficiency with which the press is conducted by its superintendent. The only thing to be feared is that his health, Mr. Hay, being subject to attacks of disease, may render it necessary for him to remove from Allahabad, in which event he would go to one of the stations in the Lodiana Mission, where the climate is somewhat colder.

An increasing knowledge of Christian truth, and great remaining indifference to its value, are thus indicated by Mr. Hay:

"I have given away and sold more Bibles than ever before, and some of them have been read, I know. . . . . From all that I have observed, I am led to think there is a a good deal of discussion between the Hindus and Mohammedans about their respective errors. Young men have applied to me for arguments—Hindus for those against Musalmanism, and vice versa. Both find the Bible the best treasury of argument against the errors of their opponents. And in this way, among others, divine truth is becoming more and more known among the people. On the other hand, it is much to be lamented that the taste for religious literature among the natives of this city is as yet scarcely formed. It is very difficult to sell a religious book, and there seems to be but little comparative desire to know what our religion is."

Miscellaneous Work.—Under this title, Mr. Munnis reports the preparation of a Tract in Urdu, on the authenticity of the Scriptures and the Prophecies respecting the Messiah; and also his teaching an interesting class:

"It is composed of the catechists and a few inquirers,—the text-book, our Confession of Faith in Urdu. We have read and examined the first twenty chapters, and studied the proofs in their connection. This has been a profitable lesson to us all."

FUTTEHPORE.

This city is situated about seventy miles above Allabahad, on the main road to the north-west. It presents a door of entrance to a district of country containing more than half a million of inhabitants. The mission station was commenced here in 1853. Like Jalandar, it is occupied only by native brethren, and will therefore be regarded with peculiar interest by the friends of Missions.

The family of the native minister, the Rev. Gopeenath Nundy, have been called to suffer sickness and bereavement; but the support and consolation of the Gospel were found to be precious in their time of need. The work of the Mission has been marked with tokens of the divine favor.

Preaching — Church Organized. — Hindustani services are held statedly twice on the Sabbath and on Wednesday evening, in a small chapel on the mission premises; and the Gospel is preached more or less extensively almost every day in the Futtehpore bazar, or in some of the neighboring villages. To the prisoners in the jail, religious instruction is given every Sabbath morning. Two evenings in the week are spent in visiting and preaching to respectable natives in their houses—a method of doing good for which native evangelists have peculiar advantages. These visits are thus spoken of by the missionary:

"Pundits and Maulwis, as well as wealthy people, are like the old Pharisees; they think it a degradation to their high rank, to stand along with common people in a bazar, or in a street, to hear the Gospel, but they make little or no objection, if such were done in their houses; and I think every preacher of the Gospel should devote a portion of his time in visiting the respectable class of people, as they have very great influence over the common people. I have done so as much as time permitted, and am glad to say, that I always found a ready audience, with apparent respect to the religion I preached."

These varied labors have not been in vain. Some inquirers have sought the instruction of the missionary, one of them a prisoner; and a woman of the Chetri caste, giving satisfactory evidence of conversion, was baptized in August. A church has been organized, consisting of nine members, most of whom were formerly connected with the churches at Futtehgurh and Allahabad. May this little one become a thousand! The Christian eye rests on no more beautiful sight in this dark land, than a church composed of native bishop, elders, and communicants, with their baptized infant offspring.

Itinerating.—Mr. Nundy says of this branch of missionary work: "We have also visited several melahs, and itinerated in different villages in the last cold season."

Schools.—In the school for instruction in English, Urdu, and Hindi, 187 scholars were enrolled, with an average attendance of 140. Of these, 61 were learning English, and 64 were Putwaris, or village record keepers. These are persons appointed by government to keep their respective village accounts, collect revenues, bear witness in cases of dispute between landholders and their tenants, &c.

"They are grown up men," Mr. Nundy writes, "some of them as old as fifty years. They are paid out of the revenue collected. Each of them has under his charge about three villages. There are 13 Purganahs or chief divisions of Futtehpore, and 1,613 villages; so there are about 538 Putwaris. These men have a great deal of authority over their respective villages, and I may say, without their knowledge scarcely anything is done in villages. According to one of the late orders of Government, all these men have to learn to read, write, and conduct all their business in the Hindi language of Nagri character, to which they were altogether unaccustomed, and consequently in each of the six Tasildaries (places where the revenues are kept under the care of a native officer) schools were established. Here I must say that our good government, when it took the country, pledged itself that it would not interfere directly with the religion of the country; yet this order will have a great tendency to facilitate the cause of our blessed religion; for hitherto there were no less than half a dozen of different characters for this Hindi language, and our Scriptures and tracts, which were principally published of Nagri characters, were not read without much difficulty; but now, as this will be the court language, our books will have free course. Praise be to God!"

The manner in which these scholars came under the charge of the missionary was described in the Record of November. Each Putwari receives a copy of the New Testament on passing his examination. Lessons are given also three times a week to many of the prisoners in the jail, the New Testament, the Shorter Catechism, and different Tracts being employed for instruction, besides the government books. A native Christian assists the missionary in this good work. In a school for girls 36 names are on the roll, with an average attendance of 28. A native Christian woman is the teacher and Mrs. Nundy the superintendent. Much of the success of this school must be ascribed to the generous interest in its welfare of Mrs. Edmestone, its patroness, the wife of the English magistrate of the station. It is proposed to form vernacular schools for boys in each of six districts, at the chief town where the revenues are collected—placing "a teacher and catechist at each; the one to teach, the other to preach the Gospel in all the adjoining villages." One of these schools has been opened; the others wait for suitable teachers. Concerning these, Mr. Nundy says:

"Mr. Edmonstone, our good friend, has very generously promised to provide the salary of teachers, and the Mission has very kindly agreed to support the catechists. By establishing schools in all prominent places, and placing in each of them a catechist, we may have every hope of making known the will and the Word of God, both to the young and to the old. And may our heavenly Father hasten the day when churches may be built alongside of these schools; and all those who are now sitting in darkness may see the great light as it is in Jesus Christ, and worship the Father, who is a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. Our labors will avail nothing, except the prayers of the churches at home accompany them, and therefore my humble request to the good people is, that they will not fail to pray for the conversion of this benighted country, that He may bless our labors and establish His kingdom in this dark land."

BANDA.

This city is about ninety miles west of Allahabad, and contains 33,000 inhabitants, and the district of the same name, 552,000. It was first occupied as a sub-station of the Mission in 1853.

The school at this place contained 144 scholars at the end of October, of whom about one-fourth were in English classes. The number of scholars had been larger at one time, but it became necessary to dismiss a teacher for bad conduct, and through his efforts the attendance was diminished. It was expected that the highest number would soon be regained. A suitable building is wanted, and it is hoped will be provided by the liberality of the European friends, who have defrayed all the expenses of the school. It will be noticed that only one of the native assistants mentioned in the report of last year is now at this station; of the other, no account has been received. Mr. Owen has devoted much time to the superintendence of matters at Banda, and has made it a preaching station on his visits to the school. It is important that a missionary should be stationed at this city, as it gives access to a densely-inhabited part of the country, called Bundelkhund, which has heretofore been neglected by the Christian Church.

The influence of the science and knowledge of western nations, in overturning the peculiar system of idolatry that prevails in India, has been pointed out in former Reports of the Committee. A lesson in a common day school, showing the true figure of the earth and its movements on its axis and in its orbit, will subvert some of the sacred books of the Hindus and disperse a host of popular superstitions. The Christian school at once becomes a missionary agency for the overthrow of Hinduism and for the diffusion of Christianity. Schools not under Christian influence, but in which correct knowledge is imparted, become in a less degree, yet in an important sense, auxiliaries to the missionary in his work. Agencies of a similar kind are the Railroads now building; the Telegraph wires now connecting the remotest parts of the country; the great Canal lately opened, turning a part of the river worshipped for ages by idolaters to the purposes of commerce and the irrigation of the farmers' fields; and especially the recently adopted Minute on Education, casting the immense influence of the Government on the side of knowledge, and giving an impulse to the cause of true progress over all the land. Beyond these visible movements of Providence, are the truths of the Gospel now widely diffused in India, and especially the influences of the Holy Spirit, making the reading, and especially the preaching of the Word, effectual unto salvation. The foregoing narrative has borne witness to the presence of Christ with his servants in these missions. Their labors have not been in vain; the first-fruits of harvest have been gathered.

The smallness of the missionary force is, however, a great discouragement. What are 400 or 500 ministers of the Gospel amongst 150,000,000 of a heathen people! The brethren at Agra thus speak of this matter:

"When we look at India as a mission field, when we think of its extent, and of its teeming millions—sunk in sin, blinded by superstition, and living without any well-grounded hope and without God in the world, and when we see how few, how very few the laborers are, we cannot help drawing the contrast between the conduct of Christians, in matters in which their worldly interests are concerned, and in those matters in which the dearest interests of the Redeemer's kingdom are concerned. In the former the means which they adopt bear some proportion to the end; but in the latter, while believing that India and the world are to be converted to God through human instrumentality, the means which they adopt bear no proportion to the work. A Christian government sends us regiments of soldiers, and a multitude of officers, both civil and military, to subdue and govern this heathen people. Expense is not thought of; no one refuses to come who can get an appointment, and parents do not withhold their children from such a service. The Church sends us but a little band of missionaries, who are but as a drop to the bucket, to perform a much harder task—to civilize and to Christianize them; and then Christians at home wonder at the want of success! May the day soon come when the cause of Missions will hold its proper place in the minds of God's people."

Mission in Siam.

BANGKOK.—Rev. Messrs. Stephen Mattoon and Marcus M. Carleton, and their wives; Samuel R. House, M.D., licentiate preacher; Quakieng, Chinese assistant.

The Rev. S. Bush has felt constrained reluctantly to dissolve his connection with this Mission by the state of his health, which does not permit him to live in a tropical climate; and he has engaged in the work of the ministry in this country. Mr. and Mrs. Carleton embarked for Siam on the 4th of October, and had arrived at Singapore. The mission family in Bangkok gratefully acknowledge the goodness of God in sparing their lives and granting to them a good measure of health.

[Letters received at the Mission House, April 23, as this Report is passing through the press, dated at Bangkok, January 22, 1855, represent the work of the missionaries as suffering considerable embarrassment from certain measures of the government. This embarrassment, it is hoped, will soon be removed.] The following report of the Mission describes its progress to the 1st of October, under the usual arrangement:

Religious Services.—Concerning these the brethren make the following statement:

"A daily service in Siamese, consisting of reading and exposition of the Scriptures, singing and prayer, has been held every morning with the pupils of the school, teachers, and others in our employ; and a service in the evening in Chinese and English, for those who understand these languages especially. On the Sabbath in addition to the morning service we have preaching and a Bible-class in Siamese, one service in Chinese conducted by the assistant, and one service for the Hainan-Chinese. This latter service consists of reading a portion of Scripture with notes by a Chinese reader, followed by some remarks on the same passage by the missionary present—these remarks being interpreted by our Hainan church member, he also engaging in prayer in his own dialect. Mrs. Mattoon also meets with a few females, the girls in the school and the wives of some of the men in our employ, for religious instruction. The Sabbath services are attended by the pupils of the school, all in the employ of the Mission, and a few in the employ of one of our church-members, making a regular congregation of about forty. As casual hearers we have one, two, three, four, sometimes none. The service for the Hainan-Chinese is usually attended by eight or nine persons, and sometimes fourteen or fifteen different individuals have received instruction, most of whom could have received little in any other way."

The missionaries are not yet permitted to reap the fruit of the seed thus sown. Some apparently sincere inquirers have sought instruction in the way of life; but their not persevering in the search after truth makes it doubtful whether they were really under the influence of the Holy Spirit. The two Chinese church-members are "well reported of for good works." The missionaries write concerning them, that they "still continue to afford us comfortable evidence of being the true children of God. The one engaged as an assistant has been chiefly employed in the school. The other is engaged in business on his own account, but resides on the mission premises, and thus enjoys opportunities of receiving instruction daily. We meet with them once a week, for prayer and instruction specially adapted to their circumstances."

Books Distributed—Colportage.—In this kind of labor Dr. House has been unwearied, as the report of the Mission clearly shows:

"The daily distribution of books, accompanied by oral instruction, on the mission premises has been continued by Dr. House throughout the year, a fixed hour being given to this work. The numbers calling for books have been large, and have increased towards the close of the year. It has not been uncommon to have thirty or forty present at one time, and in a few instances the number calling in one day has nearly or quite reached a hundred. The books and tracts distributed in a single month, the last, reached 1,395 including 203 copies of one of the Gospels. Those calling for books are from nearly all classes, and often from different and distant parts of the country. Numbers repeat their calls till they have gone through our catalogue of books. As far as practicable we act upon the rule of not giving a second time without evidence that the book previously furnished has been read.

"Something has been done in carrying the Gospel from house to house, but less than we desired, owing to our weakness and to the multiplicity of other duties."

Missionary Tours.—The important work of disseminating the Gospel on journeys undertaken for this purpose, has received a large share of the time of the missionaries:

"Mr. Mattoon spent over a month in this way, and Dr. House nearly two months, during which he visited Korat, an inland provincial town in the eastern part of the kingdom, near the border of Cambodia. As a part of the journey had to be performed on foot, with bearers for his baggage and supplies, he could carry but few books. What he had were eagerly received, and he had the opportunity of publishing the name of the true God and Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of sinners over a wide region hitherto unvisited by the missionary. As one result of this tour a number of persons from the same region of country have called at our houses for books. Two shorter tours of a week or more have been made to Bangplasoi and other villages on the eastern side of the Gulf, in which books were distributed and opportunities improved to make known the Gospel orally. While we are not permitted to see these Colporteur labors resulting in the present conversion of any, we are persuaded that by this instrumentality the knowledge of one Ever-living and Almighty God, and of the only way of salvation through one Mediator, Jesus Christ, is spreading more and more widely among the people. It is the prerogative of God himself to make this knowledge effectual to the salvation of men."

Education.—Schools have not heretofore formed a prominent part of missionary labor in Siam. Many of the people obtain without expense at the Buddhist wats, a very limited education, which satisfies their desires at present. Before the accession of the present king, moreover, a connection with foreigners was viewed with apprehension by most persons, so that they were unwilling to place their children under the charge of missionaries. There is now less difficulty in obtaining scholars, though day schools are hardly yet practicable. The brethren have formed a small boarding school, which has been in operation about two years. It contains twenty-six scholars. Three of these scholars are girls, two of whom are directly under Mrs. Mattoon's care, and the other lives with her parents on the mission premises, her father being the Chinese assistant. Their studies are thus reported:

"In addition to other branches the girls are instructed in needle-work. The boys of Chinese origin attend to that language in the morning; others, to Siamese and English; the afternoon all devote to Siamese. In addition to reading and writing, they have had instruction in mental arithmetic, geography with the use of maps and globes, and by familiar lectures in the elementary truths of natural philosophy and and astronomy. A select class is studying English, most of the time being given to the elements of the language." [Lessons in vocal music are still kindly given by Mrs. Bradley, and good proficiency has been made.] . . . "They have all the bad habits common to children in a heathen land, and exhibit many traits which try our faith and patience, but their general conduct has been as good as could have been expected in such a class of children. They present some variety in natural ability and application, but in quickness and retentiveness of memory many of them would compare favorably with children in our native land. In steady application to any subject the native mind is proverbially deficient, and our only hope is to improve them in this respect by a course of discipline. Though not without much anxiety as to the future of these children, we are not discouraged in this experiment of a school, and hope that God may bless it to the good of many."

On the religious instruction of these scholars much care has been bestowed. Besides attending on the means of grace with others, they enjoy the great advantage of Christian training. Christian text books are employed in teaching them to read. They have frequent lessons in biblical history, and commit a verse for recitation at daily morning worship. From this little company of youths may be raised up Christian ministers and teachers, to be instruments of the greatest good to their own people.

Visits to the King's Palace, for the instruction of female members of the royal family, have been continued by Mrs. Mattoon and the wives of other missionaries.

"These labors," it is stated in the report of the Mission, "have continued to become more and more interesting, and to embrace an increasing number in their influence. Very little has been done in the English language during the year, instruction having been chiefly imparted through the Siamese. Many religious books have been distributed and read, and oral instruction has been given in biblical history and geography, as well as in the more evangelical truths of the Word of God. Opportunity has also been taken to give some general idea of common geography, astronomy, and some of the other modern sciences. Some of those under instruction have read the entire New Testament and most of the other Christian books in print; and some of them profess to yield an assent to the truths contained in these books. Whether this assent is sincere, or will result in the final good of any, the future alone can determine."

Later accounts mention the suspension of these visits, though it is hoped that they will be resumed.

Translating the Scriptures—Printing.—The Gospels and the Acts have been translated by Mr. Mattoon; and two more numbers, the second and seventh of a series on Old Testament History, have been completed, embracing the history of Joseph and narratives from the book of Judges. These are now in press, and Mr. Mattoon hopes to continue the series without interruption until it is finished. The printing executed for the Mission is shown by the following table:

		Pages.	Copies.	Whole No. pp.
Gospel of Luke,	8vo	96	2,000	192,000
History of Creation,	8vo	62	3,000	186,000
Old Testament History, No. 5,	8vo	50	2,000	100,000
Old Testament History, No. 6,	8vo	67	2,000	134,000
Child's Catechism,	32mo	32	3,000	96,000
				708,000

It is considered important to increase the variety of Christian books in the Siamese language. Many readers go through the whole list at present within their reach in a few weeks. In regard to the distribution of books and tracts, an open door is set before the missionaries, and their views concerning this branch of their work are thus expressed:

"We would not advocate an indiscriminate and over-profuse distribution of books; but yet we think that in such a country as this, the influence of the press in the work of evangelization can scarcely be overrated. The great mass of the male population can read, and many are fond of reading. And as native works are only in manuscript, and are obtained with much labor and expense, the people are glad to procure the books we have to offer. We know, indeed, that many read them with little thought, yet as we have frequent opportunities of questioning them as to what they read, we hope in time to cultivate in some at least habits of attention and reflection. We are aware of the difficulty of expressing evangelical ideas as clearly and forcibly in this language as in our own or other western languages, and the consequent importance of having the living teacher to go with the printed page; still, we believe that books can be made and have been in the language of this people the means of conveying in an intelligible form an amount of Gospel truth sufficient, with the blessing of God, to save the soul without the aid of oral instruction. The influence of the Spirit is necessary here, as in all our labors, to awaken the soul to earnest inquiry, and to apply the truth to its instruction."

The Missionary field in Siam.—The preceding accounts show that in Siam "The field is white unto the harvest." The door is open; the people are accessible; the missionary enjoys protection and liberty to engage in the usual methods of making the Gospel known, both in the capital of the country and in its remoter districts. "But the laborers are few;" not a dozen of ordained ministers are employed by the whole Christian Church in preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom to this people.

This supply of laborers would be quite inadequate to the work before them, even were the inhabitants of Siam a people of one race and the same tongue. But, as has been mentioned in former Reports, it is one of the striking peculiarities of this field of labor that it affords access to people differing greatly from the Siamese. There are now living in that country Chinese, Cochin-Chinese, Cambodians, Laos,—not to enumerate still others. Some of these are of nations not yet accessible in their native land by the missionary. Their language and customs may be learned in Bangkok; the Scriptures and religious books may be prepared for them in that city; the Gospel may be there preached to some who will carry it to their native country; and acquaintances may be formed with many that will prepare the way for the future visit or residence of the missionary in these unevangelized lands.

The Chinese are the most numerous of the foreigners living in Siam; they are estimated at several hundred thousand, and amongst them some six Chinese dialects are spoken. Special attention was called in the last Report of the Committee to the Chinese from the island of Hainan, of whom many thousands live in Bangkok, and who keep up a constant intercourse with their native island. This island contains about 1,500,000 inhabitants, speaking a dialect of their own. It is not yet open for the residence of missionaries, and nothing has been done by Protestants for its evangelization; but at Bangkok it is quite practicable now to commence missionary labors amongst the Hainanese, the influence of which would be soon felt amongst the inhabitants of that island. The time may shortly come when the seat of these labors can be transferred to the island itself. In connection with these general statements, the fact deserves special consideration that one of the members of the mission church at Bangkok is a native of Hainan, and with his aid as an interpreter, a little service for the Hainan-Chinese is already conducted by our missionary brethren, as is mentioned in a previous part of this report. The Committee would express their conviction that at least one missionary should be sent to Bangkok without delay, to be employed in the service of this people. Mr. Mattoon says of them, "I am persuaded that there are few more hopeful fields of labor . . . and it is wholly unoccupied. Who will come and enter into this harvest?"

The Cambodians in Siam number from 10,000 to 15,000. Their native country, lying just east of Siam, has never enjoyed the labors of Protestant missionaries. It has been distracted and wasted by wars, waged by the Siamese on the west, and the Cochin-Chinese on the east, who have wrested whole provinces from Cambodia; and the dreadful evils of war have been in no degree mitigated by the paganism of all the conflicting parties. The king of Cambodia spent some years in exile at Bangkok, and one of his sons still lives at that city, with whom our missionaries frequently meet. They have been called upon several times by the tribute-bearers who annually visit Bangkok, and have been invited by them to visit their country, assured of a cordial reception by their sovereign. Mr. Mattoon, in communicating these and other particulars, adds, "I have no doubt that the country is accessible to Protestant missionaries, and open to their labors. Romanists are already in the field, and from the reports of the bishop which I have seen, their movements there are more unrestrained than here in Siam. European merchants who have visited the capital have found the king friendly, and anxious to cultivate intercourse with Europeans." Who will go and be the first to publish among this people the way of salvation through Christ?

The Cochin-Chinese are also represented in Siam by some 10,000 to 15,000 souls. Their native country is at present closed against foreigners of every class. It contains a population estimated at from 10,000,000 to 16,000,000, who in many respects resemble the Chinese. The Roman Catholics have conducted missions in this country for more than two hundred years, and count some 400,000 converts, who cannot, however, be regarded as triumphs of Christianity. The Romanist missionaries have been "persecuted, imprisoned, and banished from the country," Mr. Mattoon says, "but have as constantly returned, exposing themselves to new trials, new imprisonment, and even death. There are now a few priests in the country, concealed among their numerous followers." The zeal of these men is worthy of a purer faith, and it should stimulate the true followers of Christ to use all practicable means for giving the Gospel to this people. In the shaking of the nations now so manifest, it may not be long before a peaceful entrance into Cochin-China will be given to the servants of Christ. In the meantime, a mission for their benefit might be commenced in Siam.

The Shans or Laos must not be overlooked in this brief enumeration of unevangelized people, who are accessible to missionaries in Siam. They are found in large numbers in the country lying north of Burmah, Siam, and Cambodia, and about a million of them live in Siam and its dependencies. They are mostly of Buddhist faith, and speak a language similar to the Siamese. Dr. House met with many of them on his tour, and says that he "learned to admire many of their traits of character. A braver, hardier, more industrious, less deceitful people than the Siamese, speaking comparatively; with modes of thought, customs and religion, similar to the Siamese; and their language, letters and all, so little differing that one familiar with the Siamese could acquire the Laos in a few weeks, and be at home in it; and then with their country all but inaccessible to foreigners before, but doubtless open to the missionary now, under the reign of the present liberal king of Siam, to whom these States are tributary—it would be a reproach to the enterprise of the Christian Church, if she leaves the moral darkness of the regions where hundreds of thousands of such a people dwell, much longer uncheered by a single taper of divine truth." Again, the question must be asked, "Who will go for us?" Is it not the Lord of the harvest himself who puts this question to the Church? May the answer soon be heard from many a well-furnished laborer: "Here am I, send me."

Missions in China.

CANTON MISSION.

Canton.—Rev. Messrs. Andrew P. Happer, M. D., John B. French, and Charles F. Preston, and their wives; Joseph G. Kerr, M. D., and his wife: Leung Awo, Scripture reader.

Mr. Preston and Dr. and Mrs. Kerr arrived at Canton in May, after a long but pleasant voyage. Mr. Preston was married to Mrs. Brewster, of the American Board Mission at Canton, on the 19th of December. The health of Mrs. Happer has become so seriously impaired that it is considered necessary for her to return to this country for a season, accompanied by Mr. Happer. Their absence will be a great loss to the Mission, though they hope to go back at an early day to their chosen work.

Public affairs have been and still are in a very disturbed state at Canton. In July, attacks were made on the city by the insurgents, and conflicts between the Tartar troops and the besiegers have since been of frequent occurrence, with no decided result except that of great suffering to the people. In the country around confusion and anarchy prevail in a large degree. This state of things has proved unfavorable to some of the branches of the missionary work, as will appear in the report of the schools and dispensary. It is a cause of thankfulness that the preaching of the Gospel had not been interrupted, to the end of the missionary year in November. The mission families have been kept in safety. In case of sudden danger, the foreign vessels in the river would afford a retreat; and the islands of Macao and Hong Kong are within a few hours' sail of Canton. If it were necessary, a part of the work of the Mission could be transferred to these places for a time; but this measure is not contemplated as one likely to be considered advisable. The missionaries, it is believed, will be permitted to continue unmolested in their Master's work at Canton.

The various kinds of labor have been carried on with vigor. Dr. Kerr, writing two months after his arrival, thus refers to the duties and engagements of the two older members of the Mission:

"I have now become somewhat acquainted with the operations of the Mission, and I have been much gratified to see so many evidences of prosperity, and of the assiduity with which our associates have been engaged in the good work. The instruction and superintendence of thirty boys in the boarding school, and as many in the day school; preaching every other day, and twice on the Sabbath, prescribing on every week day for from 30 to 150 patients, &c., imposed on Mr. Happer a labor for which few men would be equal, but which his desire for the welfare of this people has enabled him to perform willingly and zealously. Mr. French has also been faithfully engaged in preaching on alternate days, and twice on the Sabbath, besides superintending a day school of twenty-four scholars. Mrs. Happer's girls' school is doing very well. The girls are much attached to her, and engage in their studies and work with zeal and pleasure. I look upon this as one of the most important and interesting departments of the Mission."

Religious Services have been conducted in both the chapels twice on the Sabbath, and three times during the week, making ten services in each week. The attendance and apparent interest of the hearers have been such as to encourage the brethren in this part of their work, though they have not been permitted to report more than one conversion to the truth as it is in Jesus. There is reason to hope that one of the young men employed as an assistant, is a true follower of the Saviour; he was admitted to the church by baptism in December. He was educated in the boarding school of the Mission, and it is hoped that he will become a useful laborer for Christ. It is gratifying, as already intimated, to find that the political commotions at Canton have not had the effect of keeping the people from hearing the Gospel. Mr. French wrote near the end of October, three months after the first attack on the city, that his chapel still continued to be well attended, and he was quite encouraged in his work.

Schools.—In the day schools about sixty boys were under instruction in the earlier half of the year; the conflicts between the troops and the insurgents have diminished this number, and will probably cause these schools to be closed for a time. The vacation of the boys' boarding school occurred just at the commencement of these conflicts; the number of scholars previously in attendance was about thirty. In October twenty-four of them were under instruction. The same order of studies and of religious exercises in this school has been followed as in former years. Though requiring much care and labor, it is regarded as an important means of promoting the Gospel. In answer to the prayers of the churches, it is hoped that many of the youth here receiving Christian education, will become themselves teachers and preachers of the way of life. Mr. Preston took the charge of this school when Mr. Happer left Canton on his return to this country. The girls' school under Mrs. Happer's charge, though small in number of scholars, has proved to be a very interesting and encouraging department of missionary work. Nine scholars have been received, who are taught to work as well as study, and their improvement is spoken of as very satisfactory. On the outbreak of the war at Canton, these girls were taken to Macao, where they remained with Mrs. Happer and Mrs. Kerr for some weeks. The fact that their parents were willing to let them go so far from home with foreigners, shows how completely their confidence has been gained. Mrs. French took the charge of this school, when her sister, Mrs. Happer, embarked for this country.

Dispensary.—The dispensing of medicines has been continued as in former years, accompanied with religious instruction whenever practicable. The fears of the people, caused by the presence of hostile forces, have hindered the resort of patients from the neighboring towns and villages, as well as of the more respectable class of females; but a large amount of suffering has been relieved, and many precious lessons of Gospel truth imparted. This important branch of the missionary work has heretofore been under the charge of Mr. Happer, but it will hereafter be in the hands of Dr. Kerr, who has already entered efficiently on its duties.

Distribution of Tracts.—As in former years, tracts have been extensively distributed, chiefly at the dispensaries; and in connection with the chapel services 5,000 copies of the Christian Almanac were sent forth. Also, "The Ten Commandments; a tract dissuading from opium smoking; another tract, containing a statement of Twelve Doctrines of Christianity. Beside these, there have been distributed several thousands of the most approved tracts, The Two Friends, &c."

NINGPO MISSION.

Ningpo.—D. B. McCartee, M. D., Rev. Messrs. Richard Q. Way, Henry V. Rankin, Samuel N. Martin, William P. Martin, and John L. Nevius, and their wives; Rev. John W. Quarterman.

Mr. and Mrs. Nevius arrived at Ningpo in March, and Mrs. Way on her return from a visit to this country in June of last year. Mrs. Coulter arrived in this country with her children in July. The state of her health will not permit her to continue longer in the work of the Mission, and she has returned to her father's house with the warm sympathy and respect of her missionary friends in China, as well as of the Executive Committee. The mission families at Ningpo have enjoyed better health than usual during the year. Some anxiety was felt for Mr. S. Martin, who was attacked with hemorrhage from the throat, but at the latest dates he was regaining his health, and able to resume most of his labors. In their report the missionaries acknowledge with gratitude to God their not having been hindered in their work by those "civil commotions and revolutionary movements which exist in other parts of this empire, and by which missionary operations have in some places been much cramped or entirely suspended. Although rumors have been afloat of attempts about to be made by insurgent bands to take possession of the city, it remains till this day in the hands of its Tartar governors, and our ingress and egress have been as free, and our labors as quiet and uninterrupted, as in past years."

The Church.—The Sabbath services have been maintained as in former years, with the exception of administering the sacraments alternately in the church in the city, and in the chapel on the north bank of the river—a change which suits the native members and attendants living within the walls of the city. The monthly concert prayer-meeting, a service preparatory to the communion, and during part of the year a weekly prayer-meeting, have been held. The rich blessing of God has manifestly rested on this little church during the last year. From among the natives, eight adults and two children were received as members of the church by baptism. An interesting account is given of these new members in the report of the Mission:

"One of the children is the son of the teacher, Lu-kae-dzing, who having with his partner first given themselves unto the Lord, made a free-will offering of their only son, eight years of age, on the afternoon of the same day in which his mother was baptized. Of the eight adults admitted, four were young females, who were just about finishing or had already finished their course of study in Miss Aldersey's school, two of whom have recently been married with Christian ceremonies. And here we cannot fail to notice the distinguished honor which the Head of the Church is conferring upon this his faithful handmaid, in bringing so many of her adopted children into the visible fold of the Saviour. Of the remaining four, two were also females—one, the wife of Lu-kae-dzing, and the other her grand-mother, seventy years of age, whose case was one of much interest to us. She evinced great apparent sincerity, and her earnest desire to receive instruction prompted her to acquire a sufficient knowledge of the Romanized colloquial to read the Scriptures understandingly. The remaining two were teachers—one, formerly in the boys' boarding school, who has returned to his family in the country, where we hope he may be able to exert a happy Christian influence; and the other, the teacher of one of our day schools recently opened in the city.

"In reference to these converts, one circumstance may be remarked—they have been gathered from all ages and both sexes. Another thing is worthy of notice, that a large proportion of them are of the respectable and literary class of the community. Our present number of native adult members is twenty. So far as we can ascertain, all of them have been enabled to maintain a consistent Christian course of conduct, and we trust we can perceive in many a growing spirituality. One of them is a young married female, has been removed by her friends to a distant city, and she is consequently entirely cut off from the privilege of Christian intercourse, except through an occasional letter; we feel much for her in her isolated and trying position, and would urge her claims upon the sympathies and prayers of God's people."

To these accounts, the missionaries add the remark:

"Thus the vine, which was ten years ago planted as a feeble branch, has been watered as we trust by showers of heavenly grace, protected and nurtured by the hand of the great Husbandman, and made to strengthen and increase, yea, to bear fruit also; but while we see much in this to encourage and rejoice our hearts, we would rejoice tremblingly, lest the vine should after all "yield sour grapes," or lest "the boar out of the wood should waste it, and the wild beast of the field should devour it."

Preaching.—The public holding forth of the word of life has continued to form a large part of the labors of the missionaries. In four different places of worship, stated services are held on the Sabbath; and besides a service during the week at one of the chapels, the doors of another have been opened almost every day, and the people have been addressed and conversed with in a familiar and informal way. The missionaries say of this chapel:

"Here, as in all our chapels open to promiscuous assemblies, the audience fluctuates very much, sometimes as few as ten or twenty, at other times increased to a hundred or more. . . . We are sometimes disposed to mourn that the attendance at our different chapels is so small, and the interest manifested so little; viewed in a certain light it is a discouraging feature in our missionary operations, but we believe it will not always continue so. The time may be near when from a numerous people, made willing in the day of God's power, the cry shall be heard: 'Come, let us go unto the house of the Lord,' 'to give thanks unto the name of the Lord.'"

The services conducted in the chapel on the north bank of the river, near the dwelling houses of most of the missionaries and the boarding schools, and those also at the chapel connected with Miss Aldersey's school, have been attended by the scholars, most of the converts, and some other natives, who form congregations marked by pleasing deportment and interest in the instructions addressed to them.

Schools.—The average number of scholars reported in the year ending September 30, was as follows: in the boys' boarding school 30; in the girls' boarding school 28; in a day school on the North Bank, [number not specified;] in a day school at a chapel in the city, 20.

Mr. S. N. Martin has had the charge of the boys' boarding school, and he has been aided, as is gratefully acknowledged, by native Christian teachers for the greater part of the year. The boys are described as being "upon the whole, well disposed, commendably diligent, and successful in their studies." Their religious condition, and the course of those who have lately left the school, are spoken of in the following terms:

"In a few a degree of seriousness and a disposition to attend to the interests of their souls have been noticed, though none have made a public profession of religion. Four have finished their course of study, one of whom, a convert of a year's standing, is now pursuing a course of study with some others as a candidate for the office of native assistant. It is pleasing to see that most of the graduates of this school manifest a desire to be afterwards connected with us. The printing press now affords the opportunity of retaining quite a number of them in our employ, who are kept within reach of Christian instruction."

The girls' boarding school has continued under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Rankin, aided by Mrs. McCartee. A marked degree of improvement has been apparent both in knowledge and deportment. In their instruction, "the chief prominence has been given to the Scriptures, with the historical parts of which the older pupils are quite familiar, and with the doctrinal also." Their kind instructors are not yet permitted to see them becoming disciples of Christ, but "the seed sown in hope and with many prayers will yet yield a large harvest." Considerable sickness prevailed for two or three of the summer months, adding much to the cares of the superintendents, but none of the scholars were removed by death.

Concerning both these schools the missionaries give this encouraging testimony in their report: "Every year's experience serves to strengthen our faith in their efficiency as a means of evangelizing this people. We have abundant evidence of this in the fact, that out of our twenty adult members of the church, eleven are the fruits of instructions imparted in these schools."

One of the day schools is a new one, and enjoys the advantage of having a native Christian teacher. In both, the instruction given is elementary, and care is taken to exert a Christian influence over the scholars.

No great enlargement of effort in the line of day schools is deemed expedient at present. From the report of the Mission, it appears that while "a difference of opinion may exist as to their importance, they are conducted at a comparatively small expense, do not occupy much of the Superintendent's time, impart much useful and religious knowledge, and eventually may prove valuable nurseries to the boarding schools."

The Press—Distribution of Books.—The work of the press has been continued as in former years. Eight workmen have been employed, and an increased amount of printing has been executed. One of the presses was employed entirely in printing the Old Testament Scriptures; and the other was used for tracts and miscellaneous works. The following table gives a detailed statement of the issues of the press:

"As usual," the missionaries say, "the workmen in the printing office have attended daily prayers and preaching on the Sabbath, and their behavior has been commendable."

The Medico-Missionary department of the work, under the charge of Dr. McCartee, has been carried forward with his accustomed energy and skill. The number of patients prescribed for is stated to be "much the same as in the preceding year [over 6,000]. The number of those suffering from gun-shot wounds has been much greater, owing to the greater number of pirates on the coast." The influence of these benevolent labors on the Chinese mind must be of the happiest kind. Confidence and kindness of feelings towards their foreign neighbors are thereby implanted in hundreds of families, and many precious opportunities are enjoyed of pointing the perishing heathen to the great Physician. Compared with these, the suffering relieved among the natives, and the services of the physician to the other members of the Mission, appear to be matters of minor importance.

Itinerating.—Visits have been made to some extent to cities and villages in the neighborhood of Ningpo for the purpose of preaching and distributing religious books. Of these journeys, the mission report mentions in general that in this way "many thousands of pages have been distributed and eagerly received among the people, and the Gospel preached to many who would not otherwise have heard it."

Sub-Station at Chinhai.—The dispensary and chapel at this place have been opened at stated times, and an encouraging degree of interest in both has been manifested by the inhabitants.

"The number of patients has much increased during the past twelve months, so that at times it was found difficult to prescribe for all who came. The chapel has always been open on prescribing days, and sometimes on other days, when the brethren in rotation, accompanied generally by the two native assistants, have been permitted to address large audiences, composed partly of those who came for medical aid, and partly of those desirous of seeing and hearing the foreign visitors. Our congregations there have kept up very well, and we are encouraged to continue our present arrangements, even should no further efforts be made more fully to occupy the field."

In concluding their report of the past year, the brethren give a brief review of the preceding history of this mission:

"Since the establishing of the Mission in June, 1844, thirteen male and eleven female missionaries have been connected with it. Of this number, two have been removed by death, and three have returned to the United States; one family had its connection with the Mission dissolved, and two other families have been removed to another station; the rest are still in the field. Of the natives, twenty-four adults have been received into the church by baptism, twelve males and twelve females; of these, two have been cut off from the communion of the church, two have been removed by death, and twenty remain. Of the whole number admitted, three-fourths have been received within the last four years. Two boarding schools for boys and girls are in a flourishing condition; two printing presses are in constant use; three substantial houses of worship have been erected, in which three or four services each are conducted every week, besides other places for regular preaching; and an immense amount of relief has been rendered to the sick by the medical missionary . . . We consider this brief review of the past and our prospects for the future full of encouragement; and though conscious of many imperfections in the discharge of our Master's work, we humbly thank God and take courage."

SHANGHAI MISSION.

SHANGHAI.—Rev. Messrs. M. Simpson Culbertson, Joseph K. Wight, and Reuben Lowrie, and their wives.

The failing health of Mr. Wight was mentioned in the report of last year. His return to this country was reluctantly resolved upon, under the advice of his medical adviser, but with faint hopes of his reaching his native land. The voyage, however, proved highly beneficial to his health; and since his arrival in July, he has continued to gain strength. He has been able to preach in a number of churches on the subject of missions, and it is his hope now to be able to return in a short time to his field of labor. Mr. and Mrs. Lowrie arrived at their station on the 30th of September. During most of the year under review, Mr. Culbertson was the only missionary of the Board at Shanghai; towards the end of the year, his health became seriously impaired, but he derived benefit from a voyage to Canton, which he had the opportunity of making in a public vessel through the courtesy of the United States' Commissioner to China.

The state of public affairs has continued to be unfavorable to some kinds of missionary work, and has involved the inhabitants in the greatest suffering and distress. The Insurgents have kept possession of the city, while the Imperialists have maintained the siege. Continual conflicts have been taking place between the two parties, attended with the greatest barbarities, and with lamentable loss of life. The people of the city have been greatly oppressed by the miscreant force in possession of their streets and walls, while the people outside of the walls, and the villagers in the country around, have been in like manner plundered and reduced to poverty by the wretches who constitute a large part of the besieging army. This state of affairs has continued through the year, and the end is not yet.

Several times collisions occurred between the Imperialists and the little community of foreigners, who live by themselves in a settlement near the city. It became necessary in April to attack and drive from their camps a part of the Imperialist force in the neighborhood of the settlement. This foreign community is chiefly composed of Europeans and Americans engaged in commerce or in the missionary work. Their safety from the large number of rapacious men little under the control of their officers, may be ascribed in no small measure to the presence of armed English, American, and French vessels in the harbor. It is a reason for thankfulness to God that the missionary families at this city have been preserved from danger. To them, as to other foreigners, the existing state of things is attended with no small inconvenience, especially as it restricts their residence to one quarter. This restriction may continue until one or the other of the belligerent parties gain the victory.

Missionary Work in the City and Villages.—After referring to these conflicts, Mr. Culbertson says:

"In this state of things all missionary work in the city was for a considerable time interrupted. In the neighboring villages, however, there was no obstacle to the preaching of the gospel. Such of them as could be conveniently reached were accordingly visited on the Sabbath, and religious instruction communicated by the way-side to all who were willing to listen. During the latter half of the year the city has again been accessible, and regular services have been held in the small room occupied as a chapel. The audiences have not usually been so large as they were during a state of peace, but were quite attentive; and the desire to learn something of Christianity seems to be more general than formerly. None, however, have evinced sufficient interest to be regarded as inquirers after truth for the truth's sake."

Translating the Scriptures.—"Mr. Culbertson's time has been devoted," says the report of the Mission, "chiefly to the translation of the Scriptures. The confusion attending the attack on the city by the Imperialist forces, and the necessity of removing his residence under such circumstances, occasioned some loss of time during the early months of the year, but the work has since been prosecuted without serious interruption. The New Testament has been in hand since the completion of the Pentateuch. The gospels of Matthew and John and all the Pauline epistles have been translated, and the printing of these portions will be commenced in a few weeks."

Visit to Nankin—Views of the Chinese War.—In company with Mr. McLane, the United States' Commissioner, Mr. Culbertson made a visit to the city of Nankin in the month of May. His account of this journey was published in the Record. It did not furnish an opportunity of communicating with the highest rank of the Insurgent leaders, though with the inferior officers, stationed outside of the city, there was no obstacle to free intercourse. As a result of this visit, Mr. Culbertson says:

"Some new light was thrown upon the character of this remarkable movement. It is evident, as was before known, that with a considerable knowledge of the Scriptures, the Insurgents have fallen into many serious errors,—errors which threaten to lead to disastrous consequences. The reception given to their foreign visitors was by no means favorable. They were evidently annoyed by the visit, either through suspicion of some evil design, or from their hereditary prejudices against foreign intercourse. They laid claim to universal sovereignty, and demanded submission to forms and ceremonies no less inadmissible than those which have been demanded of foreigners by the Tartar emperors of China.

"As yet the progress of the Insurgents has not equalled the expectations excited by their rapid successes immediately before and after the capture of Nankin. There is little prospect, however, that the present dynasty will be able to restore order to the country, and there is now much reason to fear that anarchy and confusion will prevail in China for many years. We cannot but believe that all these evils will result in rich blessings to China. We rejoice in the overthrow of idolatry and the abandonment of superstitions by large numbers who submit to the rule of Tae-ping-wang, and especially are we thankful that the Insurgents, with all their errors, are publishing the Bible, and giving it out to their followers, without note or comment, as the pure Word of God. This feature of the movement of itself entitles it to our prayers and our sympathies. Vast and momentous results are depending on the direction which may be given to the events now going on in China. We would again earnestly commend this land at the present time to the prayers of God's people."

MISSION TO JAPAN CONTEMPLATED.

In connection with the foregoing narrative of the missions in China, the Committee would report that the question of forming a mission in the Japanese Islands has received their consideration. The large population of these Islands, their advanced state of civilization and yet their sad ignorance and wretchedness as pagans, their former acquaintance with a corrupt form of Christianity, with their rejection and banishment of its priests and persecution of its followers, their long seclusion from the rest of the nations, and the unexpected opening of two of their harbors to our countrymen during the last year, are among the causes which should lead the Christian Church to regard with deep interest the great work of sending the pure Gospel to this people.

To obtain definite information, the Committee, in September last, requested Dr. McCartee, of the Ningpo mission, to visit Japan. He is believed to be peculiarly qualified for the important pioneer work thus entrusted to his charge; and the Committee hope, on receiving favorable accounts, to send forth laborers to this long inaccessible field without delay.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco.—Rev. William Speer and his wife; Lai Sam, colporteur; Lam Chuen, teacher.

In commencing his report, Mr. Speer expresses his gratitude to God for the continued enjoyment of health and strength for the work of the mission during another year.

Religious Services—Church.—On the Sabbath a Bible class in the morning, and public worship in the forenoon and evening, have been conducted. A monthly concert meeting in English is held on Sabbath afternoon, and Mr. Speer has preached frequently in English in different churches, by which he hopes that "good has been accomplished for the missionary cause, and for religion." One instance is mentioned, of a respectable mercantile gentleman, who attributed his religious awakening to a discourse on Christ the only foundation. The attendance of the Chinese has not been large—"on a few occasions, there have been about thirty persons present; but much oftener, a dozen; and these, patients, or particular friends." While the Chinese have manifested friendship and respect to the missionary personally, they often express great dislike to the Christian religion, and this feeling has been increased by the harsh treatment which they have received from those who are its professors in name, though yielding little subjection to its laws and spirit. This general state of feeling explains in part the small attendance on Christian worship. Owing, moreover, to the removals of Chinese establishments, and the diminished intercourse, it is found to be more difficult to obtain a good attendance at the Mission House. This is a somewhat discouraging matter, but it is hoped that the revival of commerce will bring more of the Chinese into the vicinity.

It is with regret that the missionary is not able to report any converts received during the year into the church. Of the attention paid to the word preached, and of the church, he says:

"Some often listen thoughtfully, but we know of no deep convictions of sin. One of the four original members of the church is absent on mercantile business at the Sandwich Islands. The missionaries there give a very pleasing account of his consistency and exemplary conduct, though exposed to temptations. We celebrate the communion on the second Sabbath of January, and of each quarter subsequently. The Presbytery admitted our church and gave its elder, Lai Sam, a seat in their body, on the 14th of August. A prayer meeting is maintained on Wednesday evening. This is the most comforting exercise in my missionary work."

School—Dispensary.—A school was again commenced in June, which has had the promise of about thirty scholars, though for various causes their attendance has been irregular and limited. Their desire of knowledge does not extend beyond the mere rudiments of English. It is kept open on three evenings of the week, and affords opportunities of religious instruction.

The Dispensary has been open since July, and a large number of applicants have received medicines. The valuable services of two physicians, Drs. Coon and Ayres, have been rendered without charge. Mr. Speer thus speaks of the influence of these benevolent labors:

"We have seen the good effects of our attention to the sick, in the increased respect paid to our missionary labors, in the frequent presence of patients at preaching, in the perusal of tracts, and in the expressions of gratitude accompanied by promises to visit the chapel when they should come down to the city. To every patient tracts were given, and packages were freqnently sent by them to various mining districts."

Tract Distribution—Newspaper.—The Colporteur has faithfully performed his work, going daily among his countrymen, and distributing several thousand copies of different publications. His work was somewhat restricted by the want of tracts and Testaments, which it is hoped will soon be received from China. He is treated with kindness by his people, and "is generally known among them," the report of the Mission says, "as Uncle Sam, a title he merits by his genuine Christian sincerity and benevolence of character."

A newspaper in Chinese and English was commenced by Mr. Speer in the Winter, to give to the Chinese "information in regard to our customs, religion, laws, and general news," and to explain to our own people "many things in regard to the acts, habits, customs, sentiments, and wants of the Chinese." In the Chinese department, an intelligent young man, educated at a mission school at Hong Kong, gives much assistance; and the cost of publishing the paper was generously undertaken by a respectable printing firm, who look to subscriptions and advertisements to repay its expense. The Chinese are said to manifest considerable interest in this newspaper. If the Committee had been consulted before it was commenced, they would have expressed their doubts as to the expediency of entering on a measure, which will make such large demands on the time of the missionary, and leave to him so much less strength for personal labors in making known the gospel to the Chinese. Their views thus indicated have not been changed, but they do not regret to see the experiment practically tested as to its success. The English department of the paper has contained some articles of much value.

In concluding his report, Mr. Speer adverts to some encouraging things in the intercourse of the Chinese with himself personally: they sometimes make little presents to him; they often come to ask counsel in difficulties. What is chiefly encouraging is the open door for preaching to them Christ and him crucified. Here precisely is the main hope of the usefulness of the Mission—it is in the opportunity set before the Christian minister of freely talking with these poor heathen about the way of eternal life through the Redeemer. The message thus delivered may become effectual to their salvation by the power of the Spirit of God.

In most other respects, the last year has been one of discouragement to the Chinese. Mr. Speer says:

"Many of their most enterprising merchants have failed. . . . The few who would engage in agricultural pursuits have been deterred by the bad titles and high rents of land. The miners live in the fire; they scarcely know at what time they may be driven from any of their settlements and claims, though to the honor of our people it should be told that native Americans generally treat them more justly, and less rarely insult and harass them, than any others. . . . There does not appear to be so much gambling as formerly. The amount of vice has greatly increased, however, by the introduction of several hundred infamous women from the boats on the Canton river, and by the large importation of opium. Opium has been reported at the Custom-house as having been brought on forty-five vessels to the amount of 242,059 taels, or 322,745 ounces."

These are dark shades in the picture. Hardly less discouraging is the state of feeling towards these foreign emigrants, on the part of our own citizens. It is stated that—

"Bills will be brought before the Legislature to banish them from the mines, or degrade them to the position of laborers upon the claims of white men, not allowing Chinese to hold them in their own right. . . . They have been irritated, also, beyond expression by the decision of the Supreme Court, that, under the laws excluding Indians and negroes from being witnesses against white men, they are to be driven from our courts, laid open to much injury, and humiliated as a nation. They are kept sore, moreover, by the unceasing and bitter attacks of the political press, which incessantly reiterates, as truths, the unfounded stories that they are imported by wealthy capitalists, and that they are a degraded class, "coolies"—a Bengalee word inapplicable to the Chinese, among whom no bans are laid upon races or employments."

"Among whom no bans are laid upon races or employments"—amongst this heathen people in their own empire, overcrowded, overworked, ignorant, and the greater part struggling for mere subsistence! It will be a dark day for the people of this land, when their conviction of what is just and merciful to their fellow men shall prove to be resting on a lower standard than that of the poor Chinese. This proscriptive spirit surely cannot last long. Great and acknowledged evils now accompany the immigration of the Chinese. Some of these may be ascribed in part to the peculiar state of things in a new country like California, where the common modes of labor, the work of the farmer and of the mechanic, are thrown into the shade by the shining and exciting products of the mines. Other evils will disappear on the arrival of a better class of Chinese, and such judicious legislation should be adopted as will lead to this result, and especially to their bringing their families with them—a measure for which the existing conflicts in their mother country may prepare the way. All the evils referred to, moreover, may be kept under control by Christian treatment. On the other hand, the labor of this multitude of workmen will prove invaluable, not in the mines as at present, but on the public works which are indispensable to the permanent welfare of this young State, and eventually in agriculture and the mechanic arts. In the meantime, and at all times, the course of Christian duty towards these heathen, led by Providence to our shores, is a very plain one. It is to deal with them as immortal beings, having the same Creator, the same Protector, the same Judge, and blessed be his grace! the same Saviour as ourselves. We must teach them, we must set before them a good example, we must try to prepare them for a better world. Nothing less than this will satisfy our own views of Christian duty; all of this does God require at our hands; and our faithful endeavors to do this, attended though at present they no doubt are by serious discouragement, in the end shall be crowned with success, and graciously rewarded from on high.

It is under these impressions of duty, and with this hope of eventual success, that the Committee would commend this Mission to the special prayers of the people of God.

Missions among Romanists.

EUROPEAN MISSIONS.

A full statement was made in the last Annual Report, as well as in the Reports of previous years, of the general course pursued by the Committee in promoting the cause of Evangelical religion in Papal Europe.

No material changes have been made in those plans during the past year. The Committee have remitted through the ordinary channels for missionary purposes the sum of $7,583,88, inclusive of $466, the interest due on the investment for the Waldensian Seminary at La Tour. In addition to this, $4,827 25 have been received towards completing that endowment, making the whole sum contributed for Papal Europe $12,411 13.

The entire sum now invested for the Theological Seminary at La Tour is $12,613 98, leaving $7,387 02 yet to be raised for its completion. The Committee earnestly hope that this may be done during the coming year. The whole sum asked was $20,000, a very small matter compared with the great resources of our beloved Church; and it is earnestly hoped, that this pledge given by the General Assembly two years ago, may be redeemed during the coming year.

The following extracts from the correspondence of the Committee will show the progress evangelical religion is making in connection with the labors of those Christian brethren who have received aid from the funds of the Board:

Belgium.—Our Belgian correspondent gives the following account of the condition and prospects of Evangelical religion in that kingdom. After mentioning the death of the Marquis d'Aoust, who had for a long time proved himself a firm and steady friend of the Evangelical Church, he remarks:

"We have occasion, also, to rejoice and give thanks, that amidst much distress and great temptations, our young churches are growing in faith, hope and love—not so much, certainly, as we could desire, but sufficient to prove to us that we do not labor in vain. We consider it, also, a great favor from God, that the Evangelical Society comprises at this moment, in its ecclesiastical body, all the independent or free Churches of Belgium. The number is small, it is true, but their unity is not the less interesting; and we pray the Lord to preserve it to us. Our work of colportage, though restricted, is going on well and extending itself, especially in Flanders. In many places the colporteurs have the opportunity of being true missionaries. The dissemination of tracts and religious books has been greater than in preceding years; and we have reason to hope that it will be much more abundant. An association has been formed in our churches in Brussels, which has for its object to unite all Christians to take a part in the distribution of tracts, and it has already obtained a degree of success which seems to be a pledge of the divine benediction. Our book depository continues to render great service to the cause of Evangelization in this country. In a commercial point of view, the result is of little importance; but it is its religious and moral influence which is the essential point with us. Our week-day and Sunday schools go on very well. They are improving both in number and character, and already begin to bear good fruit."

The communication closes with the following earnest appeal to the Christian Churches in America to aid them by their prayers, sympathies and contributions:

"Pray for the work which the Lord has entrusted to us, Christian brethren of America. Beseech him with us to make steadfast and sanctify what has already been built up, to mark with the blessed seal of his approval what we are undertaking anew, and to grant us faith and the various means necessary to supply the wants of the country. If we had men and money our operations could be greatly extended. Be mindful, we beseech you, of our necessities. Give us, in the first place, the aid of your prayers, which we prize above all things. Help us, then, with your temporal wealth. The supplies you have already sent us have been very valuable; and at this moment, when we are on the eve of our quarterly payment, without any money on hand, we commend ourselves specially and earnestly to your Christian liberality, praying that it may please the Father of all grace to return to you a hundred-fold what you are disposed to do for poor Belgium."

France.—In France, evangelical religion is making more decided progress, perhaps, than in any other portion of Papal Europe. The following extracts from a recent letter received from one of our correspondents, will show what success has attended the labors of the Central Protestant Society of Evangelization:

"You will learn with pleasure, that, with the blessing of God, all our evangelical labors are going on as well as could be expected in existing circumstances. In spite of many political and other pre-occupations, the souls of many in our country are thirsting after the light of the gospel and the apostolical faith, of which the Church of Rome has so long deprived them. This is true of France in general, but more so in the fields upon which our labors have been more particularly bestowed. In the north, the remarkable revival which took place some years ago at F——, and last year at G——, F——, and other neighboring villages, is continually gaining ground and extending among Roman Catholic populations. Last summer, two new chapels were erected in these new localities, one of which has already been dedicated to the Lord.

"In Normandy, our new brethren in the faith, of St—— (embracing almost all the inhabitants of the commune), although much tried and persecuted, remain faithful, and are making great progress in spiritual life. In a neighboring village named F——, a chapel has lately been built by a number of converted people, who, some years ago, scarcely knew what Protestantism meant. At E——, a very important manufacturing town, hundreds of workmen have been awakened to their spiritual wants, and follow the religious instructions given by our agent, the Rev. C., a faithful and active servant of the Lord, who has been himself a priest of Rome. There are also three very prosperous schools at this place, one of which is for adults, and is attended by 150 men, all workmen, sixty of whom have declared openly their new faith, and in some the heavenly grace has undoubtedly produced a new life in the Lord.

"At E——, where, some years ago, four or five hundred persons had separated themselves from the Romish Church, these new disciples of Christ underwent many trials and discouragements; but, in spite of all, the great body of them have persisted in their profession of true Christianity. Last autumn, a member of our Committee visited them, and came back much edified by all he had seen and heard among them. Last January we sent a clever young minister of the gospel there, and are now waiting to hear good news from that place.

"We did the same, a few months ago, for our new brethren of F——, where two or three hundred persons have also seceded from the Papal Church. As the chapel they built has not been allowed to be opened, our agent there (a young minister brought up in the theological school in Paris), is going from house to house, teaching and exhorting his flock.

"In another part of the country, near A——, in a village named S——, two hundred and fifty persons, of whom seventy or eighty are heads of families, last year seceded from their native church, and now receive evangelical teaching from a Protestant minister. A church has been built for them, and from these the work of life is spreading in the vicinity.

"One of our most constant cares is to provide the means of grace for our ancient Protestant brethren, scattered through many parts of the country. If you have received our Annual Report for 1854, you will see how much good has been done, by the grace of God, for that truly interesting class. The last reports from our agents in that department of labor, are also of a very encouraging character.

"You see, then, with the gracious assistance of our God, we are making some progress; but if we had the pecuniary means of undertaking more, for the advancement of the kingdom of God in this country, opportunities are not wanting. New applications are constantly made to us, but, in too many cases, we are compelled to decline them because we are too poor. We say, then, to all the friends of the gospel, Come and help us."

The Evangelical Society of Geneva has prosecuted its work of evangelization as in former years. No little opposition has been encountered, but its efforts have nevertheless been crowned with the most encouraging success.

There are, according to the Annual Report, twenty-six different missionary stations, the greater part of them in Southern France. Connected with these stations there are thirteen ministers of the Gospel, eight evangelists, twelve teachers, who also act as evangelists, and four female teachers, all engaged in the foreign work of evangelization. Thirty-seven colporteurs have also been employed for several months in thirteen departments in France, in Algeria, and Switzerland.

This society also has twenty-eight students under its care, of whom seventeen are connected with the school of theology, and five are in the preparatory school. Of these pupils nine are Waldensians, seven French, five Swiss, four Genevese, one German, and one English.

A school for the education of young ladies is also under the care of this society, and embraces at the present time thirty-five pupils.

For many interesting details connected with the operations of this society, the readers of the Report are referred to articles published in the missionary journals of the Board during the year, and particularly to the April number of the Home and Foreign Record.

Waldensian Synod.—No formal Report has been received of the labors of this body of Christian brethren during the past year, except what has been published in connection with their general meeting at La Tour in May and June.

The Waldensian Synod is composed of all the pastors of the churches and a corresponding number of laymen. It meets once in three years, and has supreme control over all the ecclesiastical affairs of the community. During the interval in its meetings, the Table acts somewhat in the capacity of an Executive Committee. It is composed of three clergymen and two laymen, and reports all its proceedings to the Synod for its approval. The Synod itself is virtually a Board of Missions, and is charged with the duty of promoting the cause of evangelical religion among their own people, and, so far as they are able, among the Roman Catholic population of the neighboring States. The Waldensian population is something upwards of twenty-three thousand, among whom are fifteen parishes, each presided over by a pastor, and a consistory or session of from four to twelve elders. They have sixteen principal male schools, and fourteen principal female schools, and also one hundred and forty-five schools in hamlets, during the four winter months. The whole number of pupils in these schools, according to the latest reports, is four thousand seven hundred and ninety-two. They have a college at La Tour, connected with which are eight professors and eighty-four pupils. The lower classes are engaged in the study of the French, Italian and Latin languages; and the higher in mathematics, natural sciences, and moral and mental philosophy. They have also a normal school of twenty-four pupils, the object of which is to train teachers, colporteurs and evangelists. They have likewise a similar school for training female teachers, a hospital for the sick poor, and an orphan asylum.

Their principal field of foreign missionary labor has been in the kingdom of Sardinia, and their success during the very short period that has intervened since they have been permitted to disseminate their principles, has been most wonderful, and calls for the acknowledgments of gratitude to Almighty God for the bestowment of such distinguished favors. It is only about eight years since they have been permitted to proclaim the pure Gospel in the kingdom of Sardinia, and already they have established seven important stations in the principal cities and towns of the country, viz., at Turin, the capital of the state, at Genoa, at Pignerol, at Cazale, at Genes, at Favale, and at Nice. At all these places their labors have been accompanied by many rich and encouraging tokens of the Divine favor. At Turin, the capital of the state, and the head quarters of the papal power in the kingdom, they have succeeded in completing a large and commodious church edifice, not only without any serious opposition from the Roman Catholic party, but apparently with the general favor of a community, who have heretofore witnessed no other forms of religious worship than those practiced in the Church of Rome.

At Pignerol they have nearly completed a neat house of worship, and it will be interesting to many to know, that important aid has been extended to them in accomplishing this work by generous members of the Presbyterian Church in this country.

At Genoa they have undertaken a similar enterprise, and their prospects for carrying it through are encouraging.

In the prosecution of the great work of evangelization, the Waldenses have enjoyed much more favor and toleration at the hands of the Sardinian government, than could naturally have been expected, especially when it is remembered that in its previous history it has been distinguished alike for its subserviency to the cause of Rome, and the bitter hatred which it has heretofore cherished towards this people. But this is from God, and our brethren there recognize it as such. The government of Sardinia deserves all praise for the decided stand it has taken in favor of religious toleration; and there is reason to believe that the cause of evangelical religion, which the Waldenses are now laboring to promote with so much fidelity and zeal, will soon strike its roots so deep in the hearts of men, that no future changes in the civil condition of the country will ever be able to eradicate it. Towards them, and the government that extends to them this unrestricted liberty to preach the Gospel, many of the Romanists party, and especially the Jesuits, entertain the bitterest hostility, and would, no doubt, be glad to renew the persecutions of former ages. But the same Almighty arm which has heretofore protected them, and preserved them and their religion from extinction, will, no doubt, sustain them in this aggressive movement against the powers of darkness.

Some little discord has arisen in one or two of their newly-formed churches, among the Italian population, but it has not resulted in any very serious consequences, and may be overruled for the advancement of vital godliness.

At their last general meeting, the Waldensian Synod resolved to locate their Theological Seminary at La Tour, and appointed a faculty of professors to take charge of it. In the success of this institution are involved the highest and best interests, not only of the Waldenses themselves, but of all the Italian States. With the blessing of God, it will prove a fountain, whose refreshing streams shall gladden many a parched and arid spot on the face of our earth; and it will always be a source of commendable pride, that this institution has been endowed by our own beloved Church.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONS.

Buenos Ayres.—The last Annual Report mentioned that measures had been taken for the establishment of a mission in Buenos Ayres, and that Rev. Thomas L'Hombral, of the Presbytery of New York, had been appointed to that Mission, and sailed for his field of labor the early part of April. It was expected that his attention would be given in the first instance to the French population of that city—of whom there are more than ten thousand—but that the labors of the Mission would ultimately be extended to all classes of the population.

Mr. L'Hombral arrived at Buenos Ayres the early part of May, was cordially received both by the civil authorities and such of the foreign population as felt an interest in the cause of evangelical religion, and immediately entered upon his labors. Since then, he has been formally and officially recognized by the government as a regular minister of the Gospel, and missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, and is thus placed on a footing of perfect equality with all other clergymen in the country, and may perform all the functions pertaining to the ministerial office.

Mr. L'Hombral found a small Protestant French population in this city, of some thirty or forty persons, who gave him a hearty welcome, and immediately placed themselves under his spiritual instruction. They had no suitable place of worship of their own, but have been kindly favored with the use of the North American Chapel, belonging to the Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for the purpose of holding one service in French on the Sabbath.

This service has been continued throughout the year with little or no interruption, and has been attended with important results. The attendance has varied from forty to eighty persons; showing that nearly as many Catholics as Protestants attend these meetings. The unrestricted liberty they have enjoyed, of performing their religious worship according to their own views of propriety, has given the Catholic population a different and more favorable impression of the cause of Protestantism, than anything they had previously entertained.

Mr. L'Hombral had not continued these labors very long before he had the great satisfaction of receiving to the communion of the church a young lady who had been brought up in the Catholic Church, and who now gives pleasing evidence of being a true child of God.

The latest intelligence from this station mentions that this little body of Christians had organized themselves into a regular church, and had elected a consistory of four elders, of which Mr. L'Hombral gives the following account:

"One of them is a blacksmith, much respected in the town; another is a watch maker, who seems to be a very pious man; the third one exercises great influence over the Gauchos (the native peasantry) of the environs of Buenos Ayres; the fourth one is a most amiable and excellent diplomatic man, and is a particular friend of the United States Consul. These four gentlemen and the pastor form the consistory of the church."

At their first meeting, which took place the week after, it was resolved to take up a monthly collection, for the purpose of paying the chorister, and meeting other expenses connected with their meetings. Something was also said about getting a place of worship of their own, but as yet they have not the means to do this.

The Committee feel greatly encouraged by the development of such important results so early in the history of this Mission; and it is earnestly hoped that they may be enabled to strengthen and enlarge this Mission before any very distant day.

New Granada.—Measures have been adopted quite recently to commence a new mission at Bogota, the capital of New Granada.

A licentiate preacher, at present a student of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, has been appointed to commence this station; and it is expected that he will embark for his field of labor some time in the coming Summer.

This new mission is commended to the prayers of the people of God.

Mission to the Jews.

New York.—Rev. John Neander, Mr. Julius Strauss, licentiate preacher.
Baltimore.—Rev. Frederick J. Neuhaus.

The Rev. Bernard Steinthal, whose station was in Philadelphia, has ceased to be connected with the Board. It was not found to be practicable for him to engage in preaching to the Germans with the recommendation of the Presbytery, and his labors among the Jews were not attended with much encouragement. The Committee express their kind feelings for him personally, and their hope that he may be very useful in some other place or work as a minister of the Gospel.

In connection with this, it may be stated that the labors among the Germans of Messrs. Strauss and Neuhaus have not been marked with much progress. Attempts were made by them to preach in German, but thus far with little success; though Mr. Neuhaus still hopes to succeed in obtaining a place of worship, through the help of his co-presbyters. They have both engaged to some extent in colporteur work among the Germans. Mr. Neander's labors among the Germans in Williamsburgh have continued to enjoy tokens of the divine blessing, as will appear from his own statement in another part of this report. Most of the Jews in our cities live intermingled with the Germans and speak the German language, while the missionaries themselves are acquainted with this language; hence the propriety, as was stated in the last report of the Board, of their devoting a part of their time to this increasingly numerous and too often irreligious portion of our people. The Committee regret that more favorable accounts cannot be given of their success; while yet the example of the German church, planted and prospering in Williamsburgh, shows the practicability of doing great good in this way.

In the labors of these brethren among the Jews, no new feature is perceived. As has been stated in former reports, it is not practicable to collect the Jews into congregations and preach to them in stated services. What is done for them must be done mainly in private intercourse with them, on the general plan of colporteur labors, as was described in the report of last year. The nature and encouragement of these labors will more fully appear from some extracts from the reports of the missionaries. Mr. Neander says:

"Daily on week days, with a few exceptions, I have met or called upon Jews in New York, and opportunities have thus been given to me to declare unto them the truths of the Bible . . . A young earnest Jewish lady has for some months expressed her desire to be baptized and to join the Church of Christ. I see her from time to time, but defer baptizing her, hoping to be more certain that the love of Jesus constrains her to follow him and his word.

"In the German church, the services have been well attended; sometimes the house could not contain all who came to hear the sermon. Sixteen members have been added during the year. Some of the members were formerly infidels or Roman Catholics; they are now faithful Christians. The Sabbath school is in a healthy and flourishing condition."

Mr. Strauss refers to the difficulty of convincing the Jews that the Messiah has already come, the gospel being to this day a stumbling block to them. He thinks, however, that their confidence in the Talmud is shaken, but fears that—

"A spirit of indifferentism has taken hold of the Jewish mind, by reason of which they neither care whether the Messiah has already come nor whether he is to come at all." Yet "not a few are examining the teachings of Christ and his apostles. Some, perhaps, are reading the New Testament in order to find discrepancies, contradictions, or objections; while others read it with a view to know those things of which their fathers kept them ignorant. Thus, whatever motive actuates them, the New Testament is read"—which, by the blessing of God, may make its readers wise unto salvation.

As to the fruits of his labors, Mr. Strauss says:

"Seven Jews have been admitted into different churches by baptism. One young man who formerly studied to become a Rabbi, and who has lately devoted himself to the Lord, will shortly enter upon his studies with a view to become a minister of the Gospel. Another Jew and his wife are still under instruction . . . Besides these who have boldly declared their faith in the Lord Jesus, there are others who are seeking the way Zionward."

Mr. Neuhaus reports that he was enabled to do more among the Jews than he expected, finding "the door open to many hearts" of his brethren according to the flesh. He adds:

"I have visited in the last year 145 different Jewish families, and there is a great number among them with whom I am more acquainted, to whom I often repeat my visits. I have called at eighty-six stores, and have spoken in the streets with 275 Jews. I have been visited by sixty-seven Jews and two Rabbies. Nine Jews have received a regular course of religious instruction, for the purpose of being baptized, and among these are the two Rabbies. The most of these inquirers, having no means of supporting themselves, were obliged to leave the city, but went away in an interesting and promising state of mind."

All the missionaries have continued to distribute Bibles and Tracts, chiefly in the German language. These are sometimes received with a degree of interest that awakens the hope of their doing special good.

In these missionary labors, faith and patience are still required. With these, prayer and hope should be united. The appointed measure of success will in due time be granted. The gospel is made known daily in our cities to the Jew as well as the Gentile. God only by his Spirit can make the word spoken effectual to the salvation of those who hear it. May the set time to favor Zion soon come!

The facts embodied in the foregoing narrative should awaken feelings of sincere gratitude to Almighty God for the distinguished favors he has bestowed on the missionary work during the past year.

The receipts of the Treasury have not, in all respects, been fully adequate to the wants of the missionary work; and some important departments of labor, in consequence, have been permitted to suffer. But in view of the commercial difficulties which have existed during the greater part of the year, and in view of the fact, too, that the Board has not a single agent among the churches, the receipts have been quite as large could reasonably have been expected, and the steadiness with which the friends of Christ have adhered to this cause, notwithstanding the pressure of the times, not only furnishes pleasing evidence of their sincere love for it, but induces the hope, that under the more favorable circumstances that are now taking place, they will cheerfully furnish the means, not only to retrieve what has been lost, so far as it is possible to do so, but to prosecute the whole work on a more enlarged scale of operation.

The missionaries generally have enjoyed good health, and, with unmportant exceptions, have been permitted to prosecute their various missionary labors, without material interruption from any cause. The various departments of education, translation, distribution of the Scriptures and religious tracts, visiting from house to house, and especially the great work of preaching, both at the regular missionary stations and in the adjacent country, have all been carried on with increased efficiency, and in many cases with marked tokens of the Divine approval. Each successive year of our missionary labors is developing many new and most important results. Fruits from the labors of past years are beginning to be gathered, and many precious earnests of still greater blessings have been given during the year. Accessions have been made to almost all of the mission churches, and the additions in some cases have been quite considerable. The number of inquirers after the truth is greater than in former years. Superstition and idolatry, in all their multiplied forms, are losing their hold upon the minds of the people, and especially those of them who have been brought in contact with the Gospel; and there is increasing evidence on all hands, that the reign of Satan in many parts of the heathen world, must soon give place to the mild and blessed reign of king Emmanuel.

In view of this state of things, the missionaries are calling loudly and earnestly to the Church for help in waging this war of aggression against the powers of darkness, and their cry ought not to be unheeded. They have borne the heat and burthen of the day, and now that the harvest season is approaching, they ask for help to gather the rich sheaves for which they have toiled and labored so faithfully. And not only is the Church called upon to strengthen and enlarge the missionary stations which have already been formed, but new fields are to be entered, and this the Committee, with the help of God, propose to do the coming year. But the most difficult task is to determine among the very many fields that have been thrown open to missionary labor by Providence. Northern, Central, and Eastern Africa, Central and Western Asia, large portions of the Chinese Empire, the Japannese and Loo Chooan Islands, and certain portions of South America, are not only accessible at the present time, but the great masses of their population are yet to receive their first rudiments in the knowledge of the Christian salvation. In view of these immense destitutions, it is the purpose of the Committee, as it has been in times past, to embrace every providential opening that shall offer itself, to extend the knowledge of the Redeemer among men; and in acting upon this great principle, they feel assured of the approval of Him who commanded that his Gospel be preached to every creature, and not less the sanction and approval of that great body of Christians, on whose behalf and by whose authority they act. The great work of the Church will not have been done until every human being on the face of the earth has heard of the name of the Saviour, and this she ought to aim to accomplish as speedily as possible.

THE CHRISTIAN.

The Christian, like sweet summer's sun,
Advancing in the path of duty,
Delights his glorious race to run,
Still shining with the brighter beauty,
Till, reaching his meridian blaze,
He all his light and heat displays.

In grief or joy, in storm or calm,
A cheering hope inspires his bosom,
And he, like to the beauteous palm,
On Judah's verdant hills shall blossom;
His boughs shall wave with holy fruit,
While firm and sure he strikes his root.

With child-like faith and fearless soul,
While others sink oppress with sadness,
He presses onward to the goal—
His final home—the world of gladness;
And steadfast looks unto the prize—
A glorious crown above the skies.

Though vexing cares and clouds of gloom,
With threatening aspect round him gather,
And racking pain his strength consume,
He firmly hopes his heavenly Father
Will still direct, sustain, defend,
And prove a comforter and friend.

The Christian, in that trying hour,
When every earthly prop is failing,
When round his head death's shadows lower,
And human love is unavailing,
Finds pure religion can impart
Sweet solace to the sinking heart.

THE ELDERSHIP.

(From Ordination Address by Rev. Dr. Smyth, Charleston, S. C.)

The recent history of our own church, and that also of our sister churches in Scotland and in Ireland, will prove to you how potent is the influence which an enlightened and devoted eldership can exert, in withstanding the attacks of both external and internal foes; in arousing a sleeping church to a due sense of its danger, and to a full exercise of its power; and in thus lifting up a standard against the enemy, when he rushes in like a flood, either in the form of heresy, or error, or cold Laodicean formalism, or in Erastian conspiracy with the powers of this world, to betray into their hands the crown and prerogatives of the only King and Head of the church. And, in other days too, as you retrace the footsteps of the flock, upon the bleak and barren moors, and by the deep and secluded valleys, or the midnight gathering, by the light of lantern or torch, under heaven's open canopy, you will find that had not the pastors of the church been aided by bold and fearless under-shepherds, they never could have preserved through such bloody and fiendish persecutions, and against such fearful odds, that little flock whom God has preserved upon the mountains of Piedmont, in Scotland, in Ireland, and in this wide empire, and to whom he has yet purposed "to give them the kingdom."

To you, then, ye elders of the church, are committed the oracles of God. You, too, are set like ministers, for the defence of the truth, and purity, and liberty of the gospel. And upon you, in no inconsiderable measure, hangs the destinies of the church. Estimate then, as you ought, the privilege of occupying your place when delegated to it, on the high field of our ecclesiastical legislatures and General Assemblies, the exalted councils of the church. Be ye ready to meet every such opening by any reasonable sacrifice of time and expense. Interest your hearts in all the business and proceedings of the church. Study thoroughly its doctrines, its history, its polity, and its welfare. And whenever the war-cry of danger is heard upon its borders, be ye ready to come up as standard-bearers of the cross to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

DUTIES OF MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH TO THE ELDERSHIP.

Give to your elders the honour which is their due. Hold their persons, because you hold their office, in reverence. Treat them with that deference and submission which will show your high estimate of those spiritual functions which they sustain, as office-bearers in the holiest and most exalted society which exists among men. In honour prefer them above others, and esteem them very highly. Consider them through the light thrown over them by the office to which you yourselves have elevated them. Cultivate, therefore, towards them, in your own minds, and in the minds of your children, the feelings of love and respect, and ever treat them with a correspondent deference and regard. Thus will you exalt their office; elevate your own conceptions of the dignity of your Christian citizenship; and ennoble the character of our common Christianity.

But you are not only to give them honour, but encouragement also. And how can you encourage them? You can do this, first, and above all other ways, by constantly commending them to Him who can give them courage, who can take away their fearful and timid hearts, and give them great boldness and confidence through the strength and power of his almighty grace. You can do this by giving, in your kind and respectful treatment, in your willing co-operation, and in your readiness, to overlook any deficiencies, increased confidence of success and greater zeal in aiming at higher attainments. And by your Christian humility, consistency, and growth in holiness, and your steadfast attendance upon every means of grace, you can inspire them with courage, spirit, and strength of mind. You can, in these and other ways, by your union and co-operation, your concurrence in their decisions, and your support when opposition would be made against the enforcements of the truth and order of God's house, embolden and animate their hearts and inspirit them to go forward with untiring zeal.

He that hath a good book in his hand, but not a lesson of it in his heart or life, is like an ass that carrieth a rich burden, and feeds on thistles.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

WHY SHOULD I GIVE?

It may not be amiss to address a few words to the professed followers of Jesus Christ on this subject. Christians should give,

1st. Because it is a plain matter of duty. Self-denial for the good of others is most fully enjoined upon us, and is of the essence of our holy religion; and in proportion as this trait of character prevails, other things being equal, is the evidence of consistent and vigorous piety, and its total absence is fatal to the least claim to Christian consistency. One of the most obvious and practicable forms of this virtue, is the giving of our substance for objects of true benevolence; such, for instance, as the cause of missions.

2d. I should give, because, according to the constitution of things, pecuniary offerings are needed to carry forward the conquests of the gospel, at home and abroad—needed, not in relation to God's power, but in view of his ordinary and settled plan of procedure. "How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard; and how shall they hear without a preacher; and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

3d. I should give, not only out of regard to duty, and the necessity of the case, but because it is a privilege—yes, a privilege; for he that gives to God, from proper motives, is making an infinitely better investment of his substance than the most successful speculator, who is a mere man of the world. Again, is it not a privilege to be accepted as humble co-workers, as it were, with God himself, in the noblest work ever carried on in our sin-blighted world? Passing strange, no doubt, it sounds to those who solely mind earthly things, to be told of the privilege of giving away their idolized treasures; but that is owing to their sad blindness of mind and hardness of heart.

4th. I should give, if it were simply to express my gratitude to Him who gave himself for me. Think, O Christian, of the amazing sacrifice! Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold—but with the precious blood of Christ. All the treasures of this world are not to be once named in comparison with the redemption price that Christ paid. Yet he is pleased to accept the smallest service on our part, when the motive is right; and shall we decline the trifling sacrifice? Where then is our sympathy with Christ? We profess to be his friends; but what is naked profession worth, in the absence of corresponding actions?—a question to be pondered.

Many other cogent reasons might be offered, but let these suffice. But why must there be this pleading with Christians, that they may show some little consistency. I have sometimes thought these appeals, obviously needed as facts prove, convey an oblique satire upon the church. We live in the sunlight of the new dispensation—when shall we begin to equal the liberality of the church in the wilderness! Ex. xxxv. 21—29. W. P. V.

EFFECT OF DELINQUENCY.

We publish the following extract from a letter received by one of our clerical friends, in order that our missionaries who neglect to forward their Statistical Reports to the Board, may see what effect their delinquency produces upon the active and liberal friends of the cause.

The Board have done all in their power to correct the evil complained of, but in vain. They have again and again called the attention of the General Assembly to the subject, but no action has been taken upon it by our supreme judicatory. If the Assembly would authorize and direct the Board to suspend the salaries of delinquents until they complied with their obvious duty, the evil might in a great degree at least be reformed. But in the absence of such authorization and direction by the General Assembly, the Board do not feel justified in applying such a remedy. It would, however, be much better if the missionaries would themselves freely and cheerfully comply with the rule requiring such reports, and we hope they will do so.

Dear Brother—I have been corresponding with Dr. Musgrave for the purpose of getting the name of some home missionary for whose family our ladies may make up a box of clothing. I have written twice, but we do not feel quite satisfied.

The first name given was of a gentleman for whom our ladies have already made a box. The second, Rev. ———, our objections to him are that his children are all large, and our ladies feel more interest in working for small children, and he has neglected to make his reports to his Presbytery and to the Board of Missions, according to the Annual Report of the Board of Missions and the Minutes of Assembly. Now it may be unjust, but we cannot feel the same interest in a man who seems to neglect such common obvious duties. Our ladies want to work for a man who gives fair evidence that he is labouring faithfully and diligently in the Master's cause. Now I want to ask you to take the trouble to go for me to the Missionary Rooms and learn the name of some good missionary, a faithful man; if he has a large number of small children so much the better.

I remain truly yours, in Christian affection.

INTERESTING CONVERSIONS.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Brother—Another quarter of service as Missionary of the Board on this field expired some two weeks since. Permit me, in the first place, to tender you my profound thanks for the tender interest you have manifested in me and my work. Nothing can be more encouraging to the heart of the missionary, whether in this or the foreign field, than a consciousness of the sympathy of those under whose direction he labours, and who assist in his support. And if "home missions" are so important as the great plea of the venerable Dr. Spring makes them, their friends and supporters may well bless God for being called to so precious a work, and they and their missionaries may well sympathize with each, in faith, in labours, and in hope that the city of their God shall be made glad through their instrumentality.

In addition to the good attendance upon the various means of grace and the earnest manner in which the truth is listened to, God has granted us the privilege of rejoicing over the hopeful conversion of an interesting youth about 21, and nearly fitted for college. He was brought up an Episcopalian, but has been under my ministry for two or three years, and is now thoroughly Presbyterian in his views and preferences, and hopes by the grace of God to prepare himself for the gospel ministry instead of the profession of law, as he had designed before he obtained hope in Christ. He is a young man of high integrity, of much energy, and of good gifts.

Soon after my last report, our communion season occurred; at which time a lovely young lady was received into the Church and partook of the emblems of her Saviour's death for the first and last time here on earth. She died about the middle of last month, firm in hope and peace, to the end. Thus you see our mingled lights and shades. Thus we have sorrow in our joy, and joy in our sorrow.

I remain truly yours in Christ, G. W. L.

A JOYFUL DEDICATION.

Dear Brother—My commission from the Board expired on the 15th inst. and my quarterly report should have been made at that time. The reasons for delay will appear as I proceed. The Lord had indeed been merciful to us, and I trust we feel it. Sickness has scourged our village very much during the season, and my own family has not escaped. For near a week I had the whole care of my household upon myself, and was permitted to sleep but about two hours at a time. And what seemed more trying, was the fact, that I had the pastoral care of two congregations. The minister of our sister church here, died, and I have until recently been the only minister in the place. But with all the labour and the sickness, in which I did not escape entirely, my labour has not been interrupted for a single Sabbath. Our attendance upon public ordinances has been quite encouraging, and our cause on the advance. Our prayer meeting has been very poorly sustained, although there seem to be apparent reasons for that. The spiritual state of the Church is and has been far from what it ought to be, but there seem now to be indications that God has not given us up to hardness of heart.

But I hasten to announce the completion of our work of edification. After a long and trying struggle, in the midst of every discouragement, and manifold hinderances, we at last completed our house of worship, and on the 23d inst. dedicated it to the worship of God. We feel almost childish over our success, and hope you will enjoy it as much as circumstances will allow. It is four years to-day since I came on a mission of the Board to this place, and found a church organization with nine members. God seemed to prosper the enterprise from the beginning, and about two years since we made a decided effort to build. We raised a subscription of $1500, and I gave my own note for $500, and we let the contract immediately for $1,900. But in October the contractor died, leaving the building but partly enclosed. In this condition it was kept out of our hands until the following March. During that period prices advanced so much that a contract for finishing the work could not be made at a less cost than the original one to do the whole work, and hence the great cost of our undertaking. The work was finished about the first of August last, and from that time to this, has been spent in furnishing and fitting up the house for occupation. Its size is 56 by 40 feet, with a projecting tower, making a vestibule of 14 feet. Its style is mixed, the Gothic predominating, and its finish "singularly tasteful," as all visitors have assured us. It will accommodate about 400 persons. It is to be heated by a furnace and lighted by ten globe lamps—carpeted throughout. The body and gallery with neat doubleply woollen carpet, and the pulpit platform with a rich tapestry. The internal arrangement is airy and convenient, and the taste manifested in the pulpit arrangements is striking. The day the house was dedicated we had a large attendance of interested worshippers, and we felt well paid for our labour and self-denial by the vision of happy faces. There was a debt of $250 over us for the furniture etc., and this was our only drawback. Our people had struggled so hard that we felt it impossible at present to make another effort. But the day following, the Presbytery met for my installation, and at the close of the services two of the brethren, urged on by others, determined to clear all debts. Brother ——— let loose a platoon of anecdotes which was perfectly irresistible, and in the course of fifteen minutes the whole debt was paid, and we all went home with light hearts and laughing faces. We have everything now save a bell, and we owe not a cent. By the kindness of personal friends, I was enabled to meet all of my own liabilities, though I had given half of my years' living towards the object, all that I expect for the last three months' labour is the amount from the Board, which you will please remit as soon as convenient.

REPORT FROM TENNESSEE.

Rev. and dear Brother—On the 5th inst., the first quarter of my present missionary year was filled up. The various, multiplied, and solemn duties of my station, as a minister and watchman on Zion's walls, have prevented me from making out my report until now. Although there is no epidemical disease among the people, yet there has been, for two months or more, a great deal of sickness in our midst. This sickness is of various types and character. I have been much employed in visiting. As well as I can recollect, I have been but one whole day at home in more than two months. One of our elders was confined nine weeks and then died. Two others of the eldership are ill at this time. Neither of them were able to attend our communion meeting on last Sabbath. I am endeavouring to improve these strokes of the Divine rod for good, telling the people that the Lord has just cause to plead a controversy with us, for our ingratitude, and unfaithfulness; that it becomes us to humble ourselves under his mighty hand. I trust that I see some evidences that a blessing is growing out of these afflictions.

I am still endeavouring to fulfil all the duties of a Pastor to the people of B——, as well as I can. I am giving all my time to them, generally preaching every Sabbath at B——. But I will occasionally preach round in the outskirts of the congregation. On last Sabbath I administered the Lord's supper there. The exercises, as usual with me, were continued four days. I enjoyed the assistance of a good brother two days, on the occasion. It pleased the Head of the Church to visit us with very heavy rains, on the Sabbath, which made the attendance very small. Yet, I trust and believe, the Lord was in our midst to bless. There was but one addition to the church, and that by certificate, but I hope the believers' graces were revived, and that they went to their several duties in life determined to be more faithful and consistent hereafter. I also hope there were deep, and lasting impressions made on the minds of non-professors. One evidence of this was, there were many more than usual returned to the house of the Lord on Monday. We had a crowded, solemn assembly. May the Lord pour out his Spirit in large measure upon us, and revive his work! I hope we feel our need of this, in some degree. In two days from this, I set off to R——, my former field of labour, to assist the brother now occupying that ground, with a sacramental meeting. I hope it may be a good time. There is there, as well as here, a serious drawback to contend with. A railroad is building close to each church, and in the midst of the people. I find it a heavy clog on the wheels of the gospel car. The facilities for money-making too much engages the attention of many. Nevertheless I put my trust in God, and am resolved to press forward. This state of things will pass off, in a year or two. It is matter of encouragement to know that He who is with us, the God of the church, is greater than the god of this world.

May the Lord continue to smile on the Board, and all its efforts to build up his kingdom!

Yours, in gospel bonds, H. M. K.

EXTRACTED FROM THE REPORT OF A MISSIONARY IN THE WEST.

A commission kindly granted to me by the Board of Domestic Missions came to hand lately, in due order by mail. The beneficent action of this Board is felt to a vast extent. It is the minister of good to the young and the old; to the poor and the wealthy; to the ignorant and the intelligent; to the deluded and the discerning; the thoughtless and the inquiring; the bold transgressor and the confirmed believer. As the clouds full of rain empty themselves upon the earth, so are individual gifts collected by its agency, to be distributed anew in double blessings upon givers and receivers. "Now, he that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness."

A REFRESHING FROM ON HIGH.

Dear Brother—The third quarter of the current missionary year was filled up on the 5th inst.; and in compliance with the wise requisition of the Board I am called on to make a report of my labours. As heretofore, I am endeavouring to perform the duties of a pastor to the people of B——, as well as I can. I preach every Sabbath in the church, and frequently, in the evening, at some private house, where there are sick, or infirm persons; and sometimes in destitute corners, where they have no regular preaching. There has been nothing specially encouraging amongst us during the summer. Rather a discouraging state of things. But at our late sacramental meeting, which was continued for six days, we had, as we rejoice to believe, a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. It pleased the Head of the Church to own and bless his own word, preached in plainness and faithfulness to many. Professors had their graces revived. They were much quickened and comforted, and seemed to be filled with new life and zeal. Some twenty or more of the unconverted were deeply impressed with a sense of their sins, and their need of a Saviour. Five or six professed to find peace by trusting in Christ. I received none into the communion of the church, as I am not, in general, in favour of hasty admissions. Our meeting was, on the whole, encouraging, and I hope profitable.

Our little Sabbath-school is still kept up, and pretty well attended. I hope it will do much good, though it is but small. Several of the scholars were among the anxious, inquiring what they must do to be saved; and three of them amongst those who professed a hope in the Saviour. H. M. K.

SUCCESS OF AN IMPORTANT MISSION.

Rev. and Dear Brother—This day terminates another quarter of labour, and also another year of labour under the appointment of the Board. Your first commission was given to me three years ago. I am constrained to look back over those three years. To me they have been years of toil and anxiety, peculiar to such an enterprise as that in which I have been engaged. At the call of the Board, I came to ————, not to take charge of a congregation already gathered, but to gather a congregation and organize a church. I landed here, a stranger to all the people, with but one man to sympathize with the object of my mission. You may imagine the difficulties attending an enterprise under such circumstances. Whilst labouring to preach the gospel fully, and minister to the little flock gathered, my main efforts have been directed to the erection of a good house of worship. Some six months of my time, in all, have been spent in collecting means from abroad for this purpose. I have been enabled to raise about $4000, and a like amount has been raised here. Our church is now built, and we are worshiping in it. It has cost more, and is a better church than any other in ———, and is paid for as far as finished. Our congregation is more than double what it was three months ago, and is increasing every week. The number of members is gradually increasing, though we have as yet but twenty-three.

Thus the foundation is laid, and a permanent and important beginning secured in this growing city. When I review these things, I am filled with thanksgiving, in the midst of all my discouragements, and bless the Great Head of the Church that he ever directed my steps hither.

Although worldliness abounds among professors of religion here, and wickedness stalks abroad in our midst, I am enabled to believe that God has better things in store for us, and that he will yet own our poor efforts for the promotion of his own cause, and the salvation of souls. Since my last report we have had one communion. Three were added to the church; two by letter and one on profession of faith. Our next communion will be on next Sabbath.

Praying that the Lord may prosper you in all the field under your care, and lay bountifully to your hands both men and means, I am yours, in Him,

J. G. R.

ATTENTION TO THE YOUNG.

Dear Brother—I have just been brought, in the good providence of my heavenly Father, to the close of the first quarter as a missionary acting under the care of the Board of Missions of our Church; and according to directions, seat myself for the purpose of writing the report of my labours in the churches of ——.

I have been engaged in preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to the people of these two churches for six months past, and these, together with the church of, —— combine my field of labours. Constituted as this field is of three churches, and lying at some distance from each other, it requires much labour, and frequent absence from home; yet I have the pleasure of reporting that my health has been quite good, and, if anything, much better by the experience of travelling, than when I was settled over but one congregation.

E—— church had been vacant for about three years, and the Presbytery found a difficulty in getting a man to occupy the field.

During the period that it remained vacant, many members left its bounds for other parts of the far West, others became discouraged, and for a time abandoned all hope of securing the services of a minister to break unto them the bread of life.

I commenced my labours last fall; the prospect was very dark, and I felt like looking out for a more inviting field. But persuaded by a few brethren I consented to remain until spring. I entered into the work praying for the Divine blessing; and feeling that God was able to cause light to shine out of darkness, and to water the little vine by his Holy Spirit.

The church edifice was in an unfinished condition, being without pews, and otherwise out of repair. Other denominations had the spirit of enterprise about them, and had erected beautiful and tasty houses, with excellent interior accommodations. I felt that without something being done to complete our church edifice, and to arrrange it with some taste, so as to contribute to the comfort of the people, other churches would draw the masses, and thus leave us to pine and die away.

After some months had passed away, I pressed upon the members the great necessity of repairing and remodeling the house. Without any hesitation they coincided with me, and without any difficulty the money was raised, the work let, and now we have a large, comfortable, neat and well-seated house to worship our God and Saviour in.

I also established a Bible class, which is composed of 20 young ladies and gentlemen. We spend one hour upon Saturday afternoon in our examination of the Scriptures. The class takes some interest, but not as much as I should desire. On Sabbath, during intermission, I meet with the children, and question them in the Shorter Catechism—and the smaller ones in the Introduction to the Shorter Catechism. After which I spend a short time in lecturing to them upon the importance of seeking religion.

I have already seen the first fruits of my attention to the children. A little girl only 12 years of age, was impressed, she became exceedingly concerned; she gave herself to prayer, and asked her parents to pray with her. We conversed with her, prayed with and for her, and at our last communion, she giving evidence of a change of heart, we admitted her upon profession of faith to the communion of the church. She gives evidence of a deep-toned piety, and her walk is very exemplary.

I am now more than ever convinced of the great necessity of attending faithfully to catechetical instruction. I fear that in this age of progress, we who minister at the altar of God, are too apt to forget the "lambs of the flock," and depart in a great measure from one of the earlier practices of the church, in failing to impart instruction to the young from our Catechism.

Since I entered upon this field I have admitted seven by examination and one by certificate.

My congregation on Sabbath, since our house has been repaired has nearly doubled itself. My prayer is that God would visit us with his mercy drops. May I not ask your prayers for the outpouring of the Spirit upon this field.

With sentiments of regard, I remain yours in Christ. L. A. B.

REPORT OF A MISSIONARY IN VIRGINIA.

Rev. and Dear Sir—As to my work in my field of labour I must make a report barren of incidents that are peculiarly interesting. The preaching of the gospel at the regular times and places has been kept up, and the attendance—generally speaking, has been good. In addition to the preaching by the minister from the word, God by his providence has been speaking loudly in the bounds of the congregation. The people in that congregation have been greatly afflicted by the prevalence of a disease which has been unusually fatal; many families have been called to mourn over the removal from time to eternity of more than one of the beloved inmates of their families. One, two, three in a family, and in one family as many as four within a few weeks have been torn from the embrace of affection to rest in the house appointed for all living. In the case of one—a wife and mother—who had long been contemplating attaching herself to our beloved branch of Zion, the pale monster death, though he came arrayed with much terror, yet was deprived of his sting. She was enabled even in the grasp of the "king of terrors" to triumph. She expressed herself as desiring to live, only that she might serve God upon earth, and by a godly walk and conversation recommend the religion of Christ to others—but said that she was entirely reconciled to die. She was very anxious, I was told, but a short time preceding her death, to have a minister sent for, that she might connect herself with the church, and have an opportunity of partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; but I was absent at that time at the meeting of the Presbytery, and she was unwilling that any preacher but a Presbyterian should be called in. I had conversed with her some time previous to her death, and she seemed to give evidence of having passed from "death unto life." She seemed to be harassed with doubts—she said that she had not lived up to her privileges—that her life had been very unprofitable, and that she had slighted the Saviour. I endeavoured to convince her of the willingness as well as ability of the Saviour to receive even great sinners, and that his voice even to her was "come unto me, labouring and heavy laden as you are, and I will give you rest." I tried to tell her what faith was—that it was trusting Christ, that it was believing the promises of Christ. I hope by the grace of God that I was enabled to remove her doubts, in pointing out to her the free grace of Christ. I feel grateful to God that I was in any way of service in preparing her for her last conflict. And if, as I humbly hope, she is now enjoying the reward of the righteous, and has entered upon the "rest that remaineth for the people of God," and I have been in any way even the most humble instrument in preparing her for so exalted a destiny, to God I would ascribe all the praise. I think that God's voice, with which by his providence He is speaking to this congregation, has in some instances at least been heard. We hope that some have heard "the rod and Him who hath appointed it," and been led to think seriously of "preparing to meet their God."

As this report closes the account of one year's labour among this people, I will say, in looking back, I hope that our cause has been somewhat prospered. We have had no special outpouring of the Spirit of God, yet I cannot but hope his influences has been felt upon the hearts of many of the young in our bounds. We have no very great encouragement to hope that our churches will speedily become self-sustaining churches; but there is I think a very slight improvement manifesting itself in this respect. Our people need very much to be trained to the "grace of giving." We expect to have a sacramental meeting at ——— shortly, when I hope to present the claims of Domestic Missions, and take up a collection for that Board. How we shall succeed remains to be seen. I hope by the assistance of the Board to continue to labour here, and by God's grace endure patiently our discouragements, and in the faithful discharge of duty, leave it to his sovereign pleasure to grant us immediate success or not, as seemeth good in his sight. That he may grant me, whether successful or not, grace to be "faithful unto death," is my humble prayer for Christ's sake. S. H.

REPORT OF A MISSIONARY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

I have so recently sent you a report of the state of things during the past ecclesiastical year, that little remains to be said in this my second quarterly report.

Since my last quarterly report, we have had a sacramental meeting and a series of evening services connected with it, which were not only interesting and pleasant, but, as I sincerely believe, resulted in good and lasting impressions. Two were received into the church, one on certificate, the other a young lady, the daughter of pious parents, and a very faithful and efficient helper in the Sabbath-school, on the profession of her faith in Christ. A number with whom I had special conversations, freely acknowledged their sinfulness, and expressed earnest desires after the salvation of the gospel; and at our inquiry-meeting, held the day previous to our communion, a young gentleman, the head of a family, one of our most respectable and prominent merchants, and who has uniformly manifested the deepest interest in the external prosperity of the church at least, and has been a constant and attentive hearer of the preached word, came to seek instruction and guidance in the things pertaining to his peace. He has since taken a class in the Sabbath-school, which he could not before be persuaded to do, and a change of views and feelings seem to have passed over him. His wife has long been interested for herself, and other members of the same family have shown tenderness and earnestness in religious duties; and we have every reason to believe that God by his grace will incline and prepare them for a full consecration of themselves to his service. The work of building up a Presbyterian church here is necessarily slow, but I think it is sure, under the administration of a faithful and prudent man of God. The greatest difficulties have been mastered; the church may be said to be out of debt; and there is a permanency and kind feeling which argues well for the future, provided the services of the sanctuary and Sabbath-school, and social meeting, are not broken in upon for too long a period. The church will require the assistance of the Board for a year or two; after that, unless all reasonable calculations shall prove groundless, they will be prepared to become self-sustaining.

I have felt it my duty to visit the church to which I have been called in ———, with a view to settlement. I desire therefore that my connection with the Board should terminate after this report. I hope, however, to secure a successor before I leave, and trust the Board will be as liberal to him as they have been to myself.

With fraternal regards, and earnest wishes for the greatly increased prosperity and success of the cause of our common Lord and Saviour,

I am yours, &c. J. O. S.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE BEST SIGN OF A CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

"William Jay mentions the case of a young man who thought he was called to the ministry. The thought originated with himself; neither his pastor nor the church knew anything about it. The young man, however, must needs consult somebody, and calling upon Mr. Jay, he was directed to an 'older authority.' This was a man of blunt, straightforward manner. The young man sought an interview with him; told him that he had been for some time satisfied of his call to the ministry, and asked his aged adviser what he deemed the best sign or evidence of a divine call to the work. 'Sir,' said the sage, 'what I should deem the best sign or evidence would be a man's not thinking of it, but considering himself the last person in the world God would select for this purpose; and who, if God came for him, would be found, like Saul, "hid among the stuff," and requiring an effort to draw him out.' We commend this incident to the attention of those who imagine themselves called to the ministry, while no corresponding conviction seems to be wrought in the church."

Such a case as is presented above, though it sometimes happens, is comparatively rare. Where it occurs, the course here indicated is the proper one. A call to the ministry is not miraculous, but through the church. Hence, however strong may be a young man's impression that he ought to preach the gospel, if his religious acquaintances think otherwise, he has reason to hesitate; and if his Presbytery discourage him, the evidence would, in general, be conclusive that he has been labouring under a mistake with regard to his duty in this particular.

But there is another side to this question. As a general thing there is less occasion practically, for the Church to rebuke the officious and self-conceited forwardness of young men who offer themselves uncalled to the sacred office, than to seek out those who are "hid among the stuff," and are indisposed to engage in a work for which they possess the requisite qualifications. Some are diffident and unassuming, and for this reason are not inclined to take the first step toward entering an office, the responsibilities of which weighed so heavily even on the Apostle Paul, as to draw from him the solemn interrogatory, "Who is sufficient for these things." The church is not to wait for such to offer themselves, but must propose the question to them, and remove from their minds those objections which a mistaken humility has interposed to prevent them from performing their duty in this respect.

Others again are "hid among the stuff" from secular considerations, and need to be addressed faithfully and earnestly by their Christian brethren, on the claims of the gospel ministry, as compared with secular avocations. One needs instruction; a second to have his conscience aroused; a third a more fervent and elevated tone of piety; and the want of some one of these may be the main obstacle in the way of their seeking the gospel ministry. Parents, elders, pastors, teachers and professors, are the persons whose positions are peculiarly favourable for reaching these cases, and if through their neglect such young men are not brought into the ministry, will not the Head of the Church hold them responsible for the deficiency of the ministerial supply which may result from this omission of duty. While therefore we ought to caution those who without sufficient reason think themselves called, we must remember that those who are called, are usually brought forward by the agency of religious advisers, and that advice if not sought for by them should be volunteered by us, accompanied by such encouragement as the circumstances may require.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

The Free Church of Scotland has adopted the policy of a plurality of Theological Halls by a large majority. In addition to the "New College" at Edinburgh, provision has been made for a Theological Hall at Aberdeen, and a large sum of money has been offered by an individual, and accepted by the Assembly, towards establishing a Theological Hall at Glasgow. It would seem that Aberdeen and Glasgow, or the North and the West, had united in carrying these measures against the efforts of the advocates of an opposite policy. Considerable excitement has prevailed in the Free Church for the last three or four years, on the subject. Dr. Cunningham has resisted the attempt to establish new theological institutions, chiefly on the ground of depreciating the standard of Theological education.

The following are the reasons of dissent, entered upon the Minutes of the last General Assembly, on the part of Dr. Cunningham and his party.

We, the undersigned members of the General Assembly, dissent from its deliverance of the 30th May 1855, converting the overture anent theological education at Aberdeen into a standing law of the Church, for the following reasons:—

First, Because the whole of the discussion to which the overture, now converted into a standing law, has been subjected, has contributed to make it clear and certain, that the overture involves a violation of the spirit of the adjustment of 1850, and a declension from the right standard of theological education.

Second, Because the history of the proceedings which have now terminated in the passing of this law, affords sufficient evidence that the questions involved in it, connected with theological education have been determined, not by an impartial examination of their own proper intrinsic merits, but by a regard to collateral and adventitious considerations, and thus furnishes good ground to apprehend that the retrograde movement in this department now commenced will continue to advance and to inflict increasing injury upon the Free Church.

NEW CANDIDATES.

The number of new candidates received by the Board of Education for the months of May and June is 17. The number received during the corresponding months of the previous year, was 12.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

Fixed Ministrations.—The system of every well regulated Church is a system of fixed ministrations. For the lighter services of the pulpit; for social prayer and exhortation; generally, for the more public exercises of religion, an itinerant ministry, although with the exception of missionaries, far inferior in labour, in care, in self-denial, in responsibility, may get along and be popular. But for sound exposition of the Scriptures; for "giving to every one his portion of meat in due season;" for training up the youth; for coercive and preventive discipline; for carrying both the law and the gospel home to every man's business and bosom; briefly, for binding up and consolidating the invaluable interests of a Christian community, there is no adequate and no appointed means but a stated ministry. Without it, there may be preachers in abundance, pastors there can be none.

This broad and obvious distinction is recognized in the form of a call, customary in our churches, which, taking for granted that a minister is to preach, lays the principal stress upon his pastoral character. True it is, that no man can be a scriptural pastor, who does not "feed his flock with knowledge and with understanding;" but he may provide their weekly food, plenty and good, and yet lamentably fail in his pastoral work.

For my own part, the longer I consider the nature and design of the Christian ministry, the more does the importance of those functions which are termed parochial duty rise to my view. I am persuaded that, without them, no congregation can permanently flourish, nor any pastor be permanently comfortable. There are a thousand avenues to conviction, which no public instruction can enter, a thousand difficulties to be solved, which the pulpit cannot reach. There is an adaptation of general truth to particular circumstances, fit only for the private walk or the fireside. There is a correspondence between doctrine preached and exemplified, which forces its way silently, but most effectually, to the heart. By pastoral vigilance and prudence, abuses are to be checked and scandals prevented, which when permitted to ripen for judicial cognizance, are often beyond remedy.

It is of unutterable moment to couple, in the early associations of children, the idea of their minister with that of a spiritual father, and of their own relation and duties to the Church of God, which is impossible without frequent and affectionate intercourse. The want of this is the most fertile secondary cause of that absurd contradiction which reigns among the Churches, treating our baptized youth as if they were mere heathens. The feeble are to be strengthened, the lame to be healed, the wanderers to be hunted up and brought back; the drooping spirit is to be cheered, the thoughtless spirit admonished, the impetuous spirit restrained. The presence of a faithful pastor refreshes the soul of labour, and sweetens the crust of poverty. His voice smoothes the bed of sickness, and mitigates the rigour of death. In short, his people expect from him numerous attentions which allow of no substitute. They furnish an irresistible argument for rich preparation before he begins. He will find it a hard effort to make up deficiency afterward, and not withhold them. Yet, withhold them, and affection, the basis of confidence and of usefulness, gradually wears away. Talent may inspire admiration; it will certainly command respect; but it cannot extort love. On the other hand, there is nothing which men resent more promptly, forgive more reluctantly, and forget more slowly, than neglect. You may deny their requests; you may expose their errors; you may reprove their faults; but neglect them you may not. The civilities of life and the friendly exterior may remain, but you shall find, on the first decisive experiment, that the power of their affection is gone. They always feel themselves neglected when the parish services of their minister are not rendered. Whether the neglect be real, or only apparent; whether there be just cause or not for the omission, are questions which may have some influence on the progress of things toward this result, but will very slightly, if at all, vary the result itself. The services are not rendered, and that is enough. This night does my own experience seal the truth of my remark.—Dr. J. M. Mason.

Making the most of Time.—The excellent author of "Life in Earnest" gives four expedients by which we may make the most of time.

The first he mentions is Economy, that is, collecting the scattered fragments of time; this he calls "gleaning up its golden dust—those raspings and parings of precious duration, those leavings of days and remnants of hours which so many sweep out of existence." Perhaps few are aware, unless they are among those who thus redeem time, of the extreme value of these smaller proportions of our "life's short day." I have known some persons who have acquired a language, in the intervals of time that others were wasting without a thought; and it is recorded of Dr. Burney that he made himself master of both the French and Italian languages during the short journeys he was called to make when giving his instructions as a professor of music.

The second expedient mentioned by Hamilton is Punctuality. Of the importance of this few persons are unaware, and yet how many are satisfied to come short of the requirements! To be a few minutes too late for any important appointment, or to fulfil some onerous duty, has often occasioned distress and sorrow, afterwards irremediable.

Method is the third expedient, and is one of the most important things to cultivate, if you hope for success in your studies, or in your path through life.

As I shall have occasion again to refer to these subjects in connection with their bearing upon your studies, I shall at present only mention the fourth requisite, which is Promptitude, as opposed to procrastination. This is a quality essentially belonging to an earnest person, and upon your cultivation of it will materially depend your decision of character. To act at once when our duty calls us forth, is sometimes difficult, but necessary; and it is not only in undertakings of magnitude that you are to exercise promptitude, it is important you should bring it to bear upon all parts of your daily life.—Mrs. Frison's Hints for the Earnest Student.

Opposition.—"A certain amount of opposition," says John Neal, "is a great help to a man. Kites rise against and not with the wind. Even a head wind is better than none. No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm. Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants, and must have to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-reliance. He that cannot abide the storm without flinching or quailing, strips himself in the sunshine, and lies down by the wayside, to be overlooked and forgotten. He who but braces himself to the struggle when the wind blows, gives up when they have done, and falls asleep in the stillness that follows."

"They shall mount up with wings, as eagles."—'Tis said the eagle, when clouds betoken a storm, rises into the upper air, and resting on its wings, looks calmly down upon the warring elements. This beautiful fact is referred to by our Heavenly Father. Why has he told us this story? Has it a moral? O child of God, have thy cherished plans been crossed—thy loved ones taken from thee—"the friend, as thine own soul," become estranged? Have thy motives been misjudged, and those who should befriend thee become thine enemies? Read again. "They shall mount up with wings, as eagles!" Does that smothered sigh say, "O, that I had wings?" Ah! little one of Christ, thy wings are folded, and these disturbing influences are but to make thee stretch them. What hast thou to do with despondency? Rise heavenward, and resting on the "wings of faith," look calmly down upon conflicting elements!

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE COMPARATIVE SAFETY OF COLLEGE LIFE.

A great deal has been said and written on the temptations and dangers of college life, and many parents, in consequence, have been deterred from giving their sons a liberal education. It is no part of this communication to deny that serious dangers do exist, but to show that students, especially in our religious colleges, are comparatively safe. I say comparatively safe, because in all situations and employments in life, there are temptations and dangers. We live in a fallen world. We are ourselves fallen and sinful beings, and our only hope and security is in the pardoning mercy and preventing grace of God.

1. Students in colleges are comparatively safe, because of the habits of industry, regularity and system which the system of college life is calculated to induce. They are required to rise at an early hour n the morning, and be present at prayers and reading of the Holy Scriptures in the chapel; to prepare and recite, at least three lessons daily from approved text books, and to be present again in the evening at the chapel for prayers and reading of the Scriptures. There is something definite to be done every day, and at stated times, in accordance with the most wise and established methods. The process gone through is a system of education sanctioned by the highest intelligence, wisdom, and piety of the country; and if the student fails to acquire habits of industry, regularity and system, during the four years he is in college, it may be seriously questioned if he would have acquired these anywhere else.

2. The character and influence of their teachers render the condition of students in college comparatively safe. Our presidents and professors in colleges are generally graduates themselves. They have passed through the temptations and dangers to which the students are exposed, and have known from experience and immediate observation the trials and difficulties which beset their path. This is an important consideration; and when we add to it, that the presidents and professors are also generally Christian men, who not only know the dangers to which their pupils are exposed, but who will be moved by the highest motive to guard and protect them, we feel that here is a great source of security. There are times when the heart of the student seems to be laid open to his instructor, and he is almost permitted to place on it the stamp of virtue and piety. The constant exhibition of kindness and consistent piety by his instructors cannot fail to make a deep and permanent impression on the mind of the pupil. Where can a parent have greater security for the morals of his son away from home, than in the character and influence of our own presidents and professors in college? They are there to watch over him, to counsel him, to guard him from evil, to discipline and incline him to good, and, if possible, to establish his mind in virtue and inspire him with a love of holiness. They have the very best opportunities and qualifications for doing this work. They are daily with the students, and constantly watching for their souls as they who must give account.

3. The character and influence of their fellow-students render their condition in college comparatively safe. I do not deny that there are some in all colleges whose influence on others is decidedly bad; but I think it may safely be affirmed as a general thing that their morals were corrupt before they entered college. They may succeed in ruining some; but in all probability they would have ruined more elsewhere. Besides, being under the constant watch and discipline of wise and good men, if there be not a prospect of reformation, they will not permit them to remain in college.

What I mean to affirm is, that the studies and pursuits and objects of young men in college are higher and nobler and safer than they are in most other conditions and pursuits in life. It is stated by Professor Tyler in his excellent work on "Prayer for Colleges," that about one-third of the students in the New England colleges are professors of religion. Now, where can a father send his son into any business community in which one-third of all who compose it are professors of religion? and where most of the remainder are intelligent, high-minded and virtuous? and where vice and immorality are so carefully watched and so generally expelled?

4. The frequent and powerful revivals of religion render the condition of the students in college comparatively safe. In some colleges they are much more frequent than in others; but on an average, they are said to occur at least as often as once in four years. Hence a young man in a New England college will probably pass through one, at least, of these seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. And when we reflect on the impulsive and sympathetic feelings of young men thus associated, we do not wonder that these revivals are often attended with great power and lasting results. A young man who can pass through one of these seasons in college and not yield his heart and life to the Lord Jesus Christ, can have but little hope of ever being reached by the Divine Spirit elsewhere. We would not limit the Spirit of the Lord; but we confess that we have but very little expectation that a young man who has passed through his college course, who has resisted the Holy Spirit, the counsels and prayers of his instructors and pious associates, will ever be placed in so favourable circumstances again, for experiencing the regenerating grace of God. It is possible, all things are possible with God; instances have occurred; but the probabilities are all the other way; there is almost a moral certainty that the young man will lose his soul.

In view of this subject, we think that no father should be deterred from sending his son to college through any apprehension of its dangers and temptations; and that he should consider it one of the safest and most desirable places to which he can send his son away from home.—Independent.

PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMIES.

PRESBYTERY OF PADUCAH.

The Presbytery of Paducah met at Salem on the 12th of April.

The establishment and endowment of a Presbyterial Academy was a subject which engaged the attention of Presbytery at its first meeting, twelve months ago, and a committee was appointed to take the matter under advisement, and report at the next meeting. Accordingly, in September last, the committee reported that the establishment of such an institution was not only "desirable but practicable." Whereupon a committee was appointed to receive proposals from such places as might desire to secure its location; and when we met at Salem, it was finally determined to locate the school at that point.

To this conclusion we were brought, from the fact that the inhabitants of that place, and the entire county of Livingston, had manifested a zeal and displayed a liberality which were worthy of all praise.

Another consideration, and that by no means an insignificant one, which determined the action of Presbytery, was, that Salem is a quiet village, freed from all those sources of temptation which prove the ruin of so many of our youth. The removal of the county-seat from that place to Smithland, took away coffee-houses and groceries, and all the noise and rioting usually attending elections. Besides, the surrounding country is fertile, and the people intelligent, liberal, and devoted to the cause of education.

The following Board of Directors were chosen by the Presbytery, viz.

To serve one year—Chas. A. Campbell, J. G. Hamilton, and J. Wheeler.

To serve two years—J. P. Riddle, Jas. Nash, and H. M. Witherspoon.

To serve three years—J. Hawthorn, Joseph Watts, and S. R. Campbell.

To the Academy belongs a large brick building which has been used as a tavern, with between 160 and 170 acres of excellent land. These premises, together with the farm, can be occupied and used by the Principal of the Institution.—Presbyterian Herald.

PRESBYTERY OF KASKASKIA.

This Presbytery met at the Galum church, Perry County, Illinois, on Friday, 13th of April, 1855, and adjourned at noon on the following Monday. An act passed by the last Legislature incorporating the Nashville Academy, under the care of the Presbytery, was read, approved and accepted. This academy is located at Nashville, the county-town of Washington county, has a most beautiful, healthy and pleasant location—is 10 miles from the Illinois Central Railroad; an academy building to cost nearly $3000, is to be finished in May; a principal, (Prof. A. C. Knox) has been chosen, and the academy is expected to begin its great educational work during the present summer.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

CHOICE OF PURSUIT IN LIFE.

There is a genuine good sense and right feeling expressed in the following paragraphs, from a late work by Mrs. Sedgwick. The sentiments expressed are in harmony with just views of nobility, and with the spirit of our republican institutions.

"I shall be governed by circumstances; I do not intend or wish Anthon to crowd my boys into the learned professions. If any among them have particular talent or taste for them, they may follow them. They must decide for themselves in a matter more important to them than any one else. But my boys know that I should be mortified if they selected these professions from the vulgar notion that they were more genteel—a vulgar word that ought to be banished from the American vocabulary—more genteel than agriculture or the mechanic arts. I have laboured hard to convince my boys, that there is nothing vulgar in the mechanic's profession—no particular reason for envying the lawyer or the doctor. They, as much as the farmer and mechanic, are working men. And I should like to know what there is particularly elevating in sitting over a table and writing prescribed forms, or in inquring into the particulars of disease, and doling out physic for them.

"It is certainly a false notion in a democratic republic, that a lawyer has any higher claim to respectability—gentility if you please—than a tanner, a blacksmith, a painter, or a builder. It is the fault of the mechanic, if he takes the place not assigned to him by the government and institutions of his country. He is of the lower orders only when he is self-degraded by the ignorance and coarse manners which are associated with manual labour in countries where society is divided into castes, and have, therefore, come to be considered inseparable from it. Rely upon it, it is not so.—The old barriers are down. The time has come when being mechanics, we may appear on labouring days, as well as holidays, without the sign of our profession. Talent and worth are the only eternal ground of distinction. To these the Almighty has affixed his everlasting patent of nobility, and these it is which make bright the immortal name to which our children may aspire as well as others. It will be our own fault, Anthon, if, in our land, society as well as government, is not organized upon a new foundation. But we must secure by our own efforts, the elevations that are now accessible to all."

THE BAPTIZED CHILDREN OF THE CHURCH.

While the attention of Christians and philanthropists is directed to relieving the wants of the destitute and saving their children from vice; while every one who loves the Saviour is becoming a Home Missionary, and "the poor have the gospel preached unto them," what shall be done for the children of our own households who are still unconverted, and for whose salvation the church individually and collectively are in a great measure responsible? Alas, how many of the little ones who are as olive plants around our tables, and who have been given to God in the baptismal covenant, are yet unregenerated, unsaved.

What is the difficulty? Where is the fault?

We know that ours is a covenant-keeping God; and that with him "Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation."

The fault, then, if there be any, must be found with the other parties in the covenant.

The thought has often occurred to me, that perhaps the reason why the children of the church live on for years in sin, bringing reproach upon parental instruction and faithfulness, and laying up for themselves bitter repentings and painful memories, is because parents and teachers do not realize at how early an age the child becomes a responsible being, and subject to the wrath of God.

Said a superintendent of a Sabbath-school to an infant-class teacher, "To be sure you cannot expect children as young as the members of your class to be converted now, but the seed you sow will hereafter spring up and bring forth fruit abundantly."

But, is it true that a little child who can understand the story of Bethlehem, Gethsemane, and Calvary, has not sufficient intelligence to love the Saviour. Did not Jesus say, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise." Have we not all known instances of such early conversion, as to encourage even infant-class teachers to pray for the immediate regeneration of their scholars; and with every year added to the child's life how much greater the necessity for unceasing prayer and effort. It surely is a mistake to suppose that there must be years of responsible action before there is sufficient maturity of judgment to choose the "better part." It cannot be necessary that the process of gospel-hardening should go on for years, till at last, the baptized child is converted (if converted at all) as by a miracle. In this nineteenth century, what Sabbath-school teacher does not know that a well-instructed child of ten or twelve years of age, understands the way of salvation as well, and will as effectually ward off appeals to his conscience as the less favoured youth of twenty. How important, then, that the first dawnings of intelligence should be seized upon as the "now" in which God is ready to grant salvation.

It may be that Christian parents and Sabbath-school teachers receive not an answer to their prayers because they do not expect it. They ask that God will convert the children of their care in his own good time, without remembering that his time is NOW.

What can be done for the immediate conversion of the BAPTIZED CHILDREN OF THE CHURCH? E. M. S.

YOUTHFUL NEGLECT.

Walter Scott, in a narrative of his personal history, gives the following caution to youth:

"If it should ever fall to the lot of youth to peruse these pages, let such readers remember that it is with the deepest regret, that I recollect in my manhood the opportunities of learning which I neglected in my youth; that through every part of my literary career I have felt pinched and hampered by my own ignorance; and I would this moment give half the reputation I have had the good fortune to acquire, if, by doing so, I could rest the remaining part upon a sound foundation of learning and science."

MUSIC IN THE FAMILY.

A clergyman possessing much knowledge of human nature, instructed his large family of daughters in the ordinary practice of music. They were all observed to be amiable and happy. A friend inquired if there was any secret in his mode of education. He replied, "when anything disturbs their tempers, I say to them, sing; and if I hear them speaking against any person, I call them to sing to me; and they sing away all causes of discontent, and every disposition to scandal." Such a use of this accomplishment might seem to fit a family for the company of angels. Young voices around the domestic altar, breathing sacred music at the hour of the morning and evening devotions are a sweet and touching accompaniment.

THE GRAIN OF CORN AND THE PENNY.

A grain of corn an infant's hand
May plant upon an inch of land,
Whence twenty stalks may spring, and yield
Enough to stock a little field.
The harvest of that field might then
Be multiplied to ten times ten,
Which, sown thrice more, would furnish bread,
Wherewith an army might be fed.

A penny is a little thing,
Which e'en a poor man's child may fling
Into the treasury of Heaven,
And make it worth as much as seven.
As seven! nay, worth its weight in gold,
And that increased a million fold;
For, lo! a penny tract, if well
Applied, may save a soul from hell.
That soul can scarce be saved alone;
It must, it will, its bliss make known.
"Come," it will cry, "and you shall see What great things God hath done for me!"
Hundreds that joyful sound may hear—
Hear with the heart as well as ear;
And these to thousands more proclaim
Salvation in the "only name;"
Till every tongue and tribe shall call
On "Jesus" as the Lord of all!

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

MISSION HOUSE, NEW YORK, July, 1855.

INDIA.—Since our last, letters have been received from Lahor, May 1st; Futtehgurh, May 2d; Mynpurie, May 2d; Furrukhabad, April 18th; and Allahabad, May 2d.

Several of these letters speak of the prevalence of the hot winds, but most of the mission families from which we have heard were favoured with good health. Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson, chiefly on account of her health, had removed from Ambala to Sabathu, which, it is probable, will become their permanent station.

Some facts of special interest to the missionary work have been reported in these letters. Mr. Walsh makes the following statement in relation to the firmness and Christian fortitude of a recent convert from Mohammedanism. "You will be sorry to learn that the Munshi, baptized on the 18th ult., has returned from Lucknow, whither he went to bring with him his wife and family, without accomplishing his object. His wife and children, his brothers and sisters, and even his old mother, all united in cursing him for becoming a Christian, and entreated him in the most affecting manner to return to Islamism. But he met the trial bravely, and though greatly tried, did not waver. He is comforted with the promise of Christ, that he should receive a hundred-fold and more, for forsaking all for his sake." Mr. Ullmann, writing from Furrukhabad, says, "last Sabbath we had the greatest joy to receive to the church two persons, a Hindoo and Mohammedan. The latter may, I hope, become by and by a preacher of the gospel, whilst the former will be employed by a Christian gentleman as a teacher in a Bazar school which he supports himself."

Mr. Campbell, under date of April 18th, gives the following account of the united labours of the missionary brethren at a great mela held at Hardwar. "At Hardwar we had Messrs. Rudolph, Freeman, Caldwell, Woodside and myself as speakers, and Barnes, Leavitt, and Gordon as spectators and learners. They also assisted by their presence and prayers. They saw what was calculated to arouse and encourage them in their work. They could not have witnessed anything more useful at the commencement of their labours. During the forepart of the mela, we kept up preaching at three or four places, but the last four or five days, we had to give all our strength to the work at the large preaching tent, where hundreds remained from dawn till dusk, eager to listen to the glorious truths of the gospel, and when dismissed, gathered around the street-door to hear more about the salvation of Christ. They would not even be put off for an hour, for us to breakfast or dine; but we were compelled to take the stand in turns of a half hour or an hour, some being engaged in this way, while others were eating their usual meals. It was the most interesting time I have ever seen in India. Several purpose to join us at our stations."

CHINA.—Letters have been received at the Mission House from Shanghai, April 13th; Ningpo, April 2d; and from Canton, April 5th. At Shanghai everything was quiet and the missionaries were pursuing their labours as usual. The house formerly occupied by Mr. Wight and family was nearly repaired and would be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Lowrie.

In relation to the general affairs of the country, Mr. Culbertson remarks, "since the city has been retaken we have been quiet here. The armies of the Tae-ping insurgents seemed to have had some considerable success of late in the neighbouring provinces, and the indications now are that a long time must elapse before we can hope for permanent order. Hwing-chow, an important city directly west of Ningpo, has been taken, and Wuchang also has been occupied by the rebels."

At Ningpo, our missionary brethren had been permitted to witness some very encouraging tokens of the divine blessing. At their last communion, three natives of great promise had been baptized and received to the church. Much seriousness was manifested among the pupils of the female school, and also among those of Mrs. Aldersey's school, who attend the preaching of our brethren. The following remarks by one of our missionary brethren here, can scarcely fail to elicit the sympathy of all who feel an interest in this great work.

"God still preserves and permits us to labour without hinderance. We need very much the prayers of the church in our responsible position. At times I feel worn out, and long for rest. But such feelings arise from physical causes and are always brief. Thanks be to God, I love the missionary work more and more, and though trials are more and more evident year by year, no less evident are the increasing strength and relish for the work. How amazing it is that so few are disposed to join us in the missionary work!"

We quote the following interesting extract from one of our letters from Canton.

"I am glad to be able again to report the goodness of God in continuing our health and lives another month, and permitting us to labour uninterruptedly in our work here. Our two-day schools have opened very prosperously this year. Each school has already thirty pupils, and the teachers are unusually attentive to their duties. The boarding-schools, both male and female, are doing well. Our chapel services are well attended, and every day there is no lack of patients at the dispensary." In relation to the political affairs of the country, it is remarked in the same letter, "things are a little more quiet in the city and immediate neighbourhood, but anarchy still prevails throughout the province."

Mrs. Preston had had an attack of fever, but was convalescent. The rest of the missionaries were in the enjoyment of their usual health.

AFRICA.—A letter has been received from Corisco as late as the 28th of March. Our missionary brethren were enjoying excellent health, and were prosecuting all their missionary labours with activity. They are not without hope that several of the young men connected with the station have been made the subjects of divine grace. Of one of these they speak in terms of confidence, and are greatly comforted by the consistency and sincerity of his Christian deportment.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE OF CALIFORNIA.—A letter from Mr. Speer, of the 16th of May, mentions that Lai Sam, the elder of his church, and two other members were about to return to China. He regrets their loss very much, but has reason to hope that there are several serious inquirers after the way of life among his hearers. The laws recently enacted by the Legislature of California, if enforced, must operate very injuriously to the Chinese now in California, and may prevent further emigration.

SIAM.—Mention was made in the July number of the Record, of difficulties that had arisen in connection with the missionary work in Siam.

Mr. and Mrs. Carleton, after remaining eleven weeks in Singapore without finding any means of conveyance to Bankok, and doubting whether there would be any speedy change in the views of the king of Siam, as to the admission of foreigners to his country, sailed for Calcutta with the view of joining our missionary brethren in Northern India. They arrived at Calcutta the latter part of April, and before this are probably at their new field of labour. A letter has been received from Dr. House, by the same mail, of the 27th of February. At that time the brethren at Bankok were not aware of the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Carleton, at Singapore, nor of their subsequent movements. He mentions that they were all well at Bankok, and were pursuing their labours, in most respects, as usual.

Without having a full knowledge of all the causes and the extent of the difficulties now existing at Bankok, we are not without hope that they will be removed ere long, and that the gospel may yet triumph gloriously in this part of the world. In the meantime, Christians should call earnestly upon God, not only to sustain our brethren there during this season of trial, but to remove every hinderance to the progress of the gospel in that benighted corner of the world.

INDIAN MISSIONS.—We have letters from Kowetah, May 18th; Tallahassee, June 5th; Wapanucka, June 1st; from Grand Traverse, June 12th; and from Spencer, June 2. The missionaries at these different stations were generally well, and were engaged in their usual labours. At most of the stations they were making preparations for the annual examinations. In relation to Wapanucka, Mr. Ballentine remarks, "we are in good health, and so far as I know, we are in a prosperous condition.

Mr. Reid's letter brings cheering accounts of the continued progress of the work of grace in the vicinity of Spencer Academy. At a recent protracted meeting, thirty persons were received to the communion of the church, of whom ten are members of the Institution. Since the commencement of this work of grace, seventeen of the pupils have given evidence of a change of heart and have been received to the church.

For such distinguished favour, the people of God ought to feel the profoundest gratitude, and should pray more earnestly for the universal spread of the gospel.

Mr. Loughridge writes in relation to the institution at Tallahassee, "all things go on happily and harmoniously."

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCE.

THE VARIED VIEWS WHICH MISSIONARIES ENTERTAIN OF HEATHEN CHARACTER AFTER ENTERING UPON THEIR WORK.

The missionary, when he is set down among a heathen people for the first time, finds himself in circumstances totally different from what he had anticipated before leaving his native home.

The general aspect of the country, the appearance of their towns and villages, the style of their buildings, the domestic animals feeding about their lanes and streets, fruits and other natural products of the country, the appearance of the people, their style of dress, the sounds of their language, their implements of husbandry and warfare, cooking utensils and water-pots, the reversed social position of the sexes, are all different from his preconceived conceptions; and when brought before his eyes almost at a single glance, they make an impression upon his mind too strong and powerful ever to be effaced. But the first impression made upon his mind of the character of the people undergoes many changes, so marked and uniform in their stages however, that a more experienced missionary can point them out beforehand with almost unvarying accuracy.

Heathen character at the first blush appears much fairer than it actually is. The people put on the air of honesty, frankness, open-heartedness and generosity; and some how or other, have a wonderful faculty of impressing the mind of a stranger with the belief that this is their true character. The representations which the older missionaries (if there should happen to be any) give of the character of the people, seem to be at variance with the conviction that has been forced upon his mind, and he begins to suspect that they are indulging unfair and morbid prejudices. This is the first stage in his missionary views and experience.

He has scarcely entered upon his labours, when he witnesses some exhibition of depravity, so open and barefaced as to fill him with astonishment and almost make him sick at heart. He begins now to suspect that his more experienced brethren were right, and his own first impressions were entirely erroneous. Further experience deepens this impression, and the missionary is now in great danger of being utterly disgusted with the people, and is almost ready to conclude that they are beyond the reach of recovery. This is the second stage in missionary experience.

If his disappointment and grief at the wickedness of the people should lead him to a throne of grace for help and direction, he will come away with the feeling, that the heathen, notwithstanding all their wickedness and depravity, are nevertheless his fellow men for whom Christ died, and they may be converted and saved, and he resolves henceforth, in carrying on his labours, to look not at outward things, but at the promises and the power of divine grace. This is the third, the most rational, and the most abiding of all the stages of missionary experience.

The following extracts from the letters of one of the female teachers at one of our missionary stations, written during the first year of her residence on missionary ground, at intervals of about two months, illustrate most strikingly these different stages of missionary experience.

Dec. 5th.—"As I have been here fully four weeks, I am not prepared to write much yet. I will merely speak of my present impressions and feelings. Satisfied that I am now where the Lord would have me be, I am in a happy, peaceful, light-hearted and thankful frame of mind all the day long. Not a cloud yet, not one of those difficulties I anticipated. I have much to encourage me, and think I enjoy the love and confidence of my children. They evidently try to please me."

April 27th.—"You will expect to hear about the children. I cannot write in as hopeful a strain as at first. I have now become better acquainted with their true character. I was slow to believe that they were as bad as I was told they were. They certainly seemed desirous to please me, and did conduct themselves with great propriety until about Christmas, when many of them wished to go home to join in the dance and revelry of that day. We could not give them permission, so fourteen of the girls went without permission. Some were brought back in a few days, others in two or three weeks. But how changed their demeanour. * * * I never before witnessed such depravity in children. There is not one child in my school upon whose veracity I can depend. They will steal and lie on the smallest temptation to do so."

May 26th.—She thus writes: "I am in rather better spirits now than I was then. Everything goes on smoothly enough. My children seem happier and more contented now. They do behave a great deal better than they did. By degrees, I am restoring them to the same confidence which I placed in them at first. I wish, they may prove worthy of it. But O, above all things, I long to see them renewed in heart. I cannot hope that outward reform will be permanent until there has been a change within. But here I find myself obliged to take shame and confusion of face to myself on account of my own lack of spirituality. I can seldom be alone, unless it be late at night, and then mind and body are too much fatigued to make meditation and prayer profitable exercises. Can I expect to be made the instrument of leading others to Christ, when I can set apart so little time to pray for them? Yet I am conscious that the one abiding desire of my heart, for them is, that they may be converted. O that the Lord would pour out the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, upon us all—upon the teachers as well as upon those taught. I doubt not that we are remembered in your prayers."

INDIAN MISSIONS.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

LETTER FROM REV. ALEXANDER REID, MAY 24, 1855.

I am sure that the committee will hear with peculiar pleasure that the small company of Chickasaws living near Spencer, are not forgotten of the Lord in this day of his gracious visitation. About a year ago it became very manifest to those conversant with this people, that the Spirit of God was moving on their minds, and opening their hearts for the reception of the precious word, which is able to make wise unto salvation. For the last nine months a Saturday and Sabbath-school has been kept up among them, and the gospel has been preached on the Sabbath at the school-house as often as possible. Several adults have learned to read Choctaw since the commencement of the school. These are known to be intensely interested in studying the word of God. A few persons, both men and women, are known to be seriously concerned about their souls, though they have not yet made any public acknowledgment of this. When the fig branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, we know that summer is nigh. So the good already manifest among the Chickasaws shows that the day of their salvation is near, even at the door. What I have written, is only introductory to a statement which I know will call forth grateful praise from many hearts in New York. On Friday last, 18th inst., I was permitted for the first time in my ministry, to administer the ordinance of baptism to a Chickasaw! Jefferson Greenwood, a middle aged man of mixed blood, a cousin of Mrs. Samson Folsom, and nephew of the late Maj. Colbert, came, in February last, from his home near the Chickasaw Council House, to visit his sister living within two miles of Spencer. Soon after he reached his sister's, he was taken sick and was unable to return. I called upon him frequently during his sickness, rendering such aid as was in my power. In course of conversation, I learned that he had felt some concern about his soul for more than three years past. About a year ago, he had taken the anxious seat at a "big meeting" held in the Chickasaw district, but had not been received into the church. He expressed a strong desire to be baptized before his death, some four weeks ago. After frequent conversations with him, I became fully satisfied that it would be proper to grant his desire. Accordingly, on Friday last, in the presence of a goodly number of his own people assembled around his dying bed, Jefferson Greenwood professed his faith in Christ, and received the ordinance of baptism from my hands. The scene was most deeply affecting and solemn. I do not think there was a tearless eye in the room. Several wept aloud. I have never witnessed so much feeling in a Chickasaw audience before. The day will long be remembered by most persons present, I have no doubt. Next day about sunrise, Jefferson sank very gently to rest, on the bosom of Jesus. When I parted with him after the meeting on the previous day, he was in a very peaceful state of mind. He stayed his soul upon the Saviour. This happy frame of mind continued till he died. Being very weak he spoke but little, and the little he tried to say was not understood by those present. It was observed that he was much in prayer just before he died. All present agree in saying that he appeared to feel very happy when the summons came. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Truly, God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him is accepted with him. I rejoice in believing that through the tender mercy of our God, the day-spring from on high has at length visited the Chickasaws in our vicinity. They have been made to see a great light within the last few weeks. Surely the time to favour them, yea, the set time is come. I have on my mind a strong conviction that when the Lord shall build up Zion among the Chickasaws, he shall appear very conspicuously in his glory. Say to the Presbyterian Church, "Let no man take thy crown." I know the Executive Committee take great pleasure in the stones of this people. I hope they will favour the dust thereof (the masses of the poor) then the Lord will arise and have mercy upon them; and the people that shall be created shall praise the Lord.

CHICKASAW MISSION.

The following letter from one of the female teachers connected with the Wapanucka Institute, of April 26th, gives a faithful picture of the labours, trials, and encouragements of our missionary friends in that part of the world. This Institution is the largest of the kind in the country, seldom having less than one hundred female boarding pupils, none of whom have been there long enough to be of material assistance to their teachers, and the consequence is, that their labours are very onerous, and must be so, to some extent at least, until the pupils have made more progress in their studies, and the various departments of domestic duty in which they are instructed.

In the meantime, measures have been suggested to lessen the amount of their labours, and these will be carried out, no doubt, as far as existing circumstances will allow.

The "six months" have nearly expired, and you may imagine that I have been exceedingly remiss. I confess that appearances are against me, but I do not think that I am really blame-worthy. I have not counted the number of times I have commenced writing to you, but I think at least four or five. Unless I write briefly, and with the utmost dispatch, I cannot take time enough to write a letter in one day. As it is, the majority of my friends have not yet heard from me. To my only sister, who is now in Georgia, I have written but once since I came to Wapanucka, and to my dear father, only four times. A few other friends have received a few lines each, just to let them know where I am. I am sometimes three or four weeks about a letter to my father, giving him something in the form of a journal. So much for letter writing; I read quite as little as I write. For three or four months I was obliged to content myself with a small daily portion of Scripture from a precious little volume entitled, "Heavenly Manna." As we have a recess of ten minutes during both the forenoon and afternoon sessions, I have lately remained in the school-room to read my Bible, except when it was necessary for me to come up stairs to attend to any of the children who were sick. The publications of the A. B. C. F. M., I read in the dining hall, and have nearly finished the "Memoirs of W. M. Lowrie," by improving the time, which I should otherwise lose, in the dining hall. This has been the extent of my reading, except now and then an article in the "Observer," respecting the A. B. C. F. M., selected for me by some one of the ladies, and the February and March numbers of the "Home and Foreign Record" kindly lent me, that I might read your journal, in which I naturally felt much interested. I felt sorry, however, that in the description of our supper at the last stopping place, Mrs. Lilley's kindness in providing us with a liberal supply of nice biscuits and boiled beef should have been forgotten.

Wrote thus far at noon, or between dinner and school-time, (the hour which I have, of late, devoted to Cornelia Lilley's lessons and sewing: neglected her to-day.) It is now late in the evening, all my children are in bed except Cornelia, who rooms with me. Now it does not seem worth while to trespass so much upon your time and patience as to enter into a detail of the numerous duties which have so engrossed my time and thoughts since I have been here. Suffice it to say that with the care of the girls and the preparation of their winter clothing, I found it necessary to work most diligently from early dawn until near midnight every day, until February, then I thought I might so arrange my work, as to secure an hour or two daily for meditation, reading or writing. Miss G—— left in February, so that there was double duty to be performed for two weeks. Then Miss McC—— came, and taught the school just long enough for me to get the children's summer clothing in order, and I actually took time to answer a few letters, securing two hours a day, three days in succession, for this purpose, flattering myself that I might continue to do so during the remainder of the session. But Miss McC—— health proved insufficient for teaching, and she left us on the 9th inst. I have since done double duty. We now rise at 5 A. M., breakfast at 6. Sewing hour commences at 7, continues until a quarter of nine. School from 9 until 12; dinner from 12 until nearly 1, P. M.; school again from 2 until 4½; sewing hour again from quarter of 5 until quarter of 6; tea at 6. Lately I have been able to get through with my daily routine of duties by 9 P. M., but by that time, I am too much fatigued both in body and mind, to write much. The above you will perceive is mostly apologetic. By the time you have read thus far, you will be ready to exonerate me, and you will also excuse me from writing anything for publication.

After speaking of the precocity of the pupils she remarks:—

They are bright, and I should judge had made as good progress in their studies as could be expected. They are also quick with the needle. Some of the older girls do all their own sewing after it is prepared for them. But their hearts are fully set in them to do evil. I cannot now say that I am "light hearted" all the day long; for my heart is often filled with sadness by the thoughts that not one of all the dear children has yet chosen to walk in the "strait and narrow path." But I know that the Lord will accomplish his own purposes and get glory to his holy name. It therefore becomes me to "wait" and "be of good courage." Pray for me. O pray for these poor children.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF A TOUR FROM AMBALA TO LAHOR, BY REV. J. H. ORBISON.

Oct. 26th, 1854.—Set out on a journey to Lahor, to attend the annual meeting of the several stations of the Lodiana Missions, determined to do as much missionary work by the way as possible. It had been determined, not without fear and misgiving, that Mrs. Orbison should accompany me, as she is too unwell to be left alone, and it is hoped the journey may be beneficial to her health, for she has been suffering several months from an affection of the lungs, attended with a bad cough and night-sweats, and occasional slight hemorrhage. We travel in an old fashioned, two-wheeled buggy. The tentage, baggage, books, &c. are carried on rude ox carts, much like the picture in "Biblical Antiquities." Although we left Ambala early in the evening, or rather afternoon, we were not able to make more than two miles and a-half, owing to bad roads, and the carts not being able to keep up. In fact one had stuck in the mud, the wheel of another had broken, and an ox of the third had run away. We therefore waited by the road-side until the one which had stuck could be brought up. Providentially it contained the sleeping tent and some provisions. It was now eight or nine o'clock at night, and after the tent was put up, and some wood and water brought from a distance, we got some tea, (though without milk, and the water being rather unfavourable) and then went to bed, not without fear of being robbed, as we could get no watchman.

27th.—Having sent back to Ambala to make new arrangements, got a new cart and oxen through the kindness of Mr. Melvill, the English magistrate, and in the evening came on to Mogul Sarai, Mrs. Orbison tired, but otherwise not any worse. To-day's march only two or three miles.

28th—Saturday. Came about eight miles to Bangiálá Sarai, a small place. Stopped here to keep the Sabbath. On Sabbath preached in the morning to all that could be gathered into the tent, from John iii: "Agar koi phir paidá na howe to wuh Khudá ki Bádshahat ko dekh nahin saktá." In the afternoon went to the bazar and talked with the people, who seemed rather indifferent.

30th—Monday. To Sirhind. This is a very old and interesting city. The name signifies Head, or Capital of Hindustan. Here once dwelt the nobles of the land, and though in ruins, it for a long time continued to be the burial place of kings. Here the Mussulmans and Sikhs in turn slaughtered each other, and the embers of the fire of animosity still smoulders in the breasts of their descendants. The Sikhs being last in the ascendant have erected a temple of no ordinary kind to the memory of the two young sons of Govind Singh, their great warrior—Gurú, who were here butchered by the Mohammedans, and have also left the broken mosques and desecrated tombs of their enemies as the monuments of their savage vengeance. The vast city, with its temples and mosques and palaces, more substantially built than those of the present generation, once spread over a tract of country several miles square; but now with the exception of a remnant, nought remains but a plain of rubbish and ruins, haunted by owls and jackals. Upon every mouldering wall "ichabod" is written. In the afternoon went into the part still inhabited, to preach the gospel. A crowd soon gathered, and for a time the people listened, some out of curiosity, some with silent contempt, some indifferent, some laughing, some muttering, and some perhaps really interested. When speaking to them of the incarnate Saviour, one of them interrupted and with a loud voice began to repeat a long gingling rhyme in praise of their own autárs, not half of which I could understand. When done, I reminded him of the well known fact, generally acknowledged by the Hindus, that all their nine incarnations were stained with sin, and that they themselves are in expectation of the Holy Incarnation, and then proceeded to show that the Lord Jesus Christ is the true and only manifestation of God in the flesh; it being self-evident that a holy God would not and could not manifest himself as a sin-spotted Incarnation. Some of them acquiesced in this. One cunning fellow, most likely a Sikh, then endeavoured to turn the attack against Mohammed, by feigning himself one of the Faithful, and uttering faint praise in behalf of the Prophet. My replies aroused some of the Mussulmans to opposition. Thus the discussion was drawn out until the moon and stars appeared in the sky. On the whole the people were respectful and attentive. Gave a few books to readers.

31st.—To Kanna. 8 kos. Throat too sore to preach. Did not go to the bázár. Spent the day reading and preparing for the annual meeting.

Nov. 1st.—Came to Laskhari Khan, dragging through heavy sand. Was here joined by Matthew, Scripture reader, who followed me from Ambala, after making arrangements for his family. After breakfast we went into the sarai, which is surrounded by a great wall, and preached alternately to a crowd of policemen, travellers, and hangers-on. The head-man stationed here, is a Mohammedan, very obsequious. He requested a big-book worthy of himself, pretending to be desirous of seeking truth and righteousness, at the same time giving a knowing look, which was appreciated by those around. And shameful to say, although a large, noble looking man, with fine turban, gay trimmings, showy stockings, slippers, and sword dangling at his side, he yet had not the courage, or morality, or decency even, to refuse returning the salám of a number of bad women who sat in front of their doors along the road, perched on their beds, like vile birds awaiting their prey, just as Solomon describes—"For she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city, to call passengers who go right on their ways." The great man, however, seemed somewhat confused by being thus unexpectedly exposed in the presence of a sáhib, and cringed like a dog when reproved sharply. He accompanied us to the tent and got some books, which grace alone can make useful to him; and grace can do it.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

The following account of the establishment of a female school at Furrukhabad, by Mr. Ullman, will be read with interest.

I have the pleasure of sending you by this mail the promised short report of my missionary tour.

I am happy to state that I have succeeded in getting a nice house for a girls' school in the city, which, however, had first to be put in order. It will be finished in a day or two, and then we shall commence the school. As this is an entirely new and unheard of thing in Furrukhabad, we may meet first with a little opposition, but I have no doubt gradually we shall succeed; in fact several persons have already promised to send their daughters. My wife rejoices that thus her long cherished wish to have a girls' school is thus on a fair way to be realized; and she feels obliged to those kind friends who contribute for the support of this school. Our kind magistrate, Mr. Cunninghame, who, together with his good lady, take a real interest in all that is done for the good of the country, has given orders that the road to it, from where it branches off from the main road, shall be macadamized up to the school-house. May the Lord's blessing rest upon our weak efforts.

April 18th, 1855.

The above had been written a few days ago, but circumstances prevented me from dispatching it then. I now add a few lines. The girls' school has been commenced, and I am happy to say, that we have already four girls. Perhaps you smile, that I consider this a gratifying fact, but if you knew the opposition and prejudices we have to overcome, and all the false rumours about our intentions, against which we have to stand, you would rejoice with me at the success thus far. There has never been any thing like a girls' school in the city, and it is so extraordinary to a native, to hear of educating females, that our efforts in this respect appear to him ridiculous and absurd. Others again, who know from experience that missionaries are in real earnest in all their operations, and by different means and perseverance overcome every difficulty, spread every kind of false rumour, in order to throw obstacles in our way. We trust in the Lord, and hope to succeed. We are prepared to have but three or four girls for a couple of months, and I should not be surprised if also they, or at least one or two of them, would be frightened away for some time; but the Lord will give us grace to persevere and conquer. But do not expect much for some time. The beginning of a girls' school here is very hard, uphill work.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM THE JOURNAL OF REV. A. P. MARTIN.

JANUARY, 3, 1855.

Expedients for keeping off evil spirits.

October, 1854.—One day about the first of this month, on entering my school-room, which is in the upper part of one of our churches, my eye was arrested by a sword, suspended on the wall. Such a weapon where nothing more formidable than the ferule had hitherto appeared, naturally called for some explanation. I was accordingly told that a young woman belonging to a neighbouring family was supposed to be haunted by an evil spirit, which terrified her by appearing at a certain hour every evening. Her relatives had tried all the expedients most in vogue, such as placing near her person, clothes dipped in dogs' blood, swords which had been imbrued in human gore, and firing off guns, but the audacious imp still persisted in his visits. Finally, the idea occurred to them that he would not dare to enter the house of God, and they requested permission to bring her into the school-room. There they sat round her, watching with great anxiety, till at a late hour, the husband armed with his small sword. But at length the poor woman, exhausted by terror and the want of sleep, fell into a doze, from which she was instantly awakened by the recurrence of her ugly vision. I called the husband and told him, that though his wife's malady took its rise from the body, the ignorance in which she had been brought up had rendered her soul also liable to infection. She had been taught to believe in and fear devils, and now she was haunted by the creature of her own imagination. And now if she should recover from her present disorder, renounce the wicked superstitions of her people, and learn to love and fear the true God, it would for ever fortify her soul against a return of her malady. After stating the same thing to the young woman herself, I gave her a few simples calculated to restore appetite and induce sleep; in a few days she obtained complete relief, and I hope may be led by this experiment to seek the shield of faith, which alone can save her from the fear and power of Satan.

Cases of alleged possession are frequent, and it is no stretch of credulity to suppose that the devil may occupy the bodies of some, where he has undisputed possession of the hearts of almost all. But a stronger than the strong man has come, and I trust that he may soon be bound, and his captives set free.

A man recovered from a severe attack of cholera—Good influence upon his mind.

One day towards the last of the month, I heard that a poor man who had been working for me, was attacked with cholera, and as Dr. Macartee was not at home, I took a medical manual and such remedies as I had at hand, and hastened to the house of the sufferer. The disease seemed to have him in its fell gripe. He could scarcely speak, eyes sunken, hands and feet cold, and his abdomen hard as a board. Having forgotten to bring calomel, I gave him what I supposed the most speedy remedy, viz., strong brandy, in large quantities. He revived a little, but still thought he was about to die, and wept at the prospect of leaving a sick wife and helpless child to suffer in poverty. He also sought to relieve his conscience by confessing sundry sins, among which the one which troubled him most, was that he had suffered himself to be deterred from professing Christ, through a feeling of shame. I exhorted him to seek the mercy of God through Christ, as he might yet be saved, notwithstanding the enormity of his guilt. He soon became intoxicated; and his extremities being warm, I left him with hopes of his recovery. A few days after he came to thank me for saving his life, and has since been in the habit of attending church on the Sabbath. May he learn how little reason a poor sinner has to be ashamed of his Saviour!

Misery and suicide consequent upon the use of opium.

While recording these two attempts to play the physician, I am reminded of another a few months earlier, which did not result so successfully.

I was called to see a woman in the neighbourhood who had attempted to commit suicide by taking opium. When I arrived she had already fallen into a death-like stupor, from which I was unable to arouse her, but Dr. McGowan, who had been sent for in the meantime, resorted to rougher means, such as dashing cold water in her face, and striking her with a small piece of bamboo, and soon had her so far awakened, as to rise to her feet, and curse her benefactor. An emetic was forced down her throat, but it produced no effect; and in a little time she sunk away into a sleep, from which she will not be awakened till the archangel's trumpet summons her to judgment. Hundreds of wretched beings in this single district, thus annually seek to escape the miseries of this life, and in their madness plunge into the torments of hell. Opium and drowning are the modes of self-destruction most commonly resorted to.

Happy would it be for China if this were the only species of suicide perpetrated by opium. But alas! there are four millions, at the lowest estimate, (and there may be, if the truth were known, even ten or twenty millions) of her inhabitants, whose houses with the "wood and stone thereof," and whose bodies, flesh and bones are consuming away in the slow fire of the opium pipe. A few years ago a thrill of horror shot through the nerves of our nation at the disclosure, that thirty thousand of our citizens were annually going down to the drunkard's grave. What then must be thought of China, annually yielding half a million of her children to be consumed by this insatiable Moloch? And who kindled these horrid fires? The very hand that should have scattered the leaves of the tree of life for the healing of the nations. Shall English and American traders still continue to demand these hecatombs to mammon, while English and American missionaries are persuading the people to present their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God? I have seen some spirited letters, both in English and American papers, in favour of declaring the opium trade to be piracy; and think that the friends of humanity in both nations could hardly do a better work than to urge our legislatures to the adoption of such a measure.

Preservation of the Missionaries in the midst of danger.

Dec. 4th.—While conversing with a man at the door, I was startled by the sudden whizzing of a cannon ball apparently not far from my head. I at once knew that a feud which had long existed between the Fukian and Canton men, had led to an open battle, and how long it might last being uncertain, I called Mrs. Martin and the children, and took refuge behind the thick walls of the church. Here we heard the humming of several more balls; but providentially no one was killed, but two or three who were engaged in the encounter. We were once before exposed to similar jeopardy, by an affray between these same Canton men and Portuguese. The Canton men having taken to the wall and made a show of resistance, the Portuguese man-of-war fired on them and some of the balls fell near us; and one killed a person in a position where it must have passed nearly over our house. Though we have had no insurrection here, the government appears powerless to suppress the most trifling outbreak; and we have been more than once exposed to the dangers of war in the midst of peace. But it is consoling to reflect that even a sparrow cannot fall without our Father.

Inquirers after the truth.

Dec. 7th.—Two respectable men from the south of this Province, one of them bearing an official title, came into converse about Christianity. One of them was introduced to me a few days ago by a native Christian, and has since came to my house daily to hear the gospel. He has read with much interest part of a treatise on the Christian evidence which I now have in press, and though originally a zealous Budhist, his old faith seems to be somewhat shaken. When he first come he interlarded his conversation with the name of Budha, much as a devout Moslem uses Allah; but he now seldom utters it; and expresses his joy at having heard of the true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. He urges me to visit his native place, promising to guide me to several large cities in the vicinity.

The same day a call from a man of wealth, and respectability, who had lately invited Mr. Rankin and myself to go and preach at his house.

The secret of his inviting us was not love to the gospel but hatred to Budhism, which led him to hope that he might persuade the females of his family to give up that idolatrous, and here, disreputable worship. He says that their confidence in Budha is somewhat diminished by what they heard from us. He admits that Christianity is correct as a system of morals, but its spirituality as a religion he does not yet comprehend.

Dec. 8th.—A literary graduate was introduced by one of our native brethren. He has read some of our books, thinks well of the gospel, listened with many expressions of pleasure to my exposition of it; and took in good part, two criticisms which I passed on the literati of his country; 1st. That they are generally too conceited to acknowledge the superiority of the gospel over their own meagre system. 2d. The few who do comprehend and acknowledge its excellence are too undecided to embrace it.

Natives of China sowing the good seed of the word of God among their countrymen.

Dec. 13th.—Two of our native assistants, whose names translated are Farmer and Fisher, have gone to sow good seed and fish for men at Hongchow, the capital of this province. It is one of the chief cities of the empire, and we earnestly pray that they may find an opening there. They are accompanied by one of the three men, whom I have already mentioned as having made two trips to Ningpo, for the sake of hearing the gospel. He lately came again and requested baptism; has spent a month in my house, during which he gave gratifying proof of his love and knowledge of the truth. He received with great pleasure the proposal to send our native brethren to preach the gospel in his native place; and gladly offered them all the assistance in his power.

Nov. 28th.—A literary graduate from a neighbouring district came in to converse about Astronomy and Mathematics. He has read most of the books on these subjects, accessible in his own language, and is earnestly desirous of learning English for the richer treasures which it contains. After giving him some new ideas respecting colours and gravitation, I attempted to direct him to that mystery in which are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. It is interesting to find scholars who have an appreciation of Western science, and there is room to hope that they will learn to prize that which we esteem so far above the rudiments of this world.

Spirit rapping in China.

Nov. 30th.—Received a letter from our native brethren at Hongchow. They have been there several days; have met some of the members of the little Eclectic sect I have already mentioned to you. They were present when one of them consulted an oracle, and sent us a copy of the response, which I subjoin as a specimen of "Chinese Spirit-rapping."

A stick is suspended over a table, or an altar of earth, the spirit is invoked; the stick moves and its zig-zag trail is deciphered by rules known to the initiated. In this case a Budhist saint of great renown appears, and says "I have heard the discourse of the Son of Gold (name of the inquirer), it is excellent; and I have composed a few verses in its praise.

Even a drop of pure, sweet, cool and beautiful water,
Is bestowed by our Heavenly Father,
And through the world saving merit of Jesus
All may enjoy God's mercy and boundless bliss.
The lumps of dust which form my body
Depends on the Heavenly Ancient one.
Jesus is the true Saviour,
And all men may through him attain glory.
Son of Gold! does this agree with the will of Heaven?
Bring me a volume of the good book in your hand,
I too would like to learn it, that I may open my mouth
According to the will of Heaven
Knowing the rich merits of Jesus.

The next spirit was a Tourist, of former ages, styled The Great Teacher, elder brother and only true man.

"Excellent doctrine! good book! the only true. I also add a few verses for you gentlemen (the inquirers) to see.

Good and evil have existed of old,
But men knew not their source.
Wholly through the truth of Jesus,
We attain incorruption (immortality!)
Had not Jesus come down
Men would have wandered in dreamy mazes.
But since the Heavenly Father has sent down Jesus,
It is like travelling a high road;
All past ages were ignorant of it
And therefore were crushed as with a millstone.
I exhort you to believe in Jesus
Believing you will escape from Hell,
The world knows not this priceless treasure;
This is the bridge that crosses the river,
The true road to the banks of the Ganges, (Heaven)
If you plant a melon you may pluck a melon,
If you plant grass you will reap grass,
I exhort you to plant largely,
It is work for Pluto (merit treasured for the life to come)
Go, thou Son of Gold and plant.

It may fairly be conjectured that these responses were not entirely independent of the inquirer's manifestations; and like similar revelations in the West, may rather be taken as an index of his opinions, than as expressing the views of those who have long been denizens of the spirit world. I need hardly add that our native brethren are too well instructed to be imposed on by anything of this kind; and sent it down only as a curiosity.

A man's life saved through the agency of Mr. Martin.

January 4, 1855.—A poor boy whom I picked up in the streets and apprenticed to a bricklayer, came to me a few days ago, begging me to do something for his brother, who had just returned from Shanghai, and was arrested on charge of being a rebel. I immediately sent a statement to the circuit judge, to the effect that the prisoner had made his escape from the rebels early in the summer, and at that time begged the assistance of a friend of mine at Shanghai, in procuring the escape of his father, and it was therefore fair to infer that he was not himself a rebel. This reached the judge the evening of the arrest, after the warrant for his execution had been issued. The warrant was instantly recalled, but the poor fellow was not yet set at liberty. There was a grave circumstance bearing against him. A piece of brass had been found on his person, bearing a strange device, which was supposed to be a seal or medal of the insurgents. Hearing of this, I proceeded to the magistrate's office and requested to see this portentous signet, which threatened to seal the death warrant of the bearer. It was brought out, and I saw on one side the image of the Virgin Mary, with the inscription "Elle est ma mere," and on the other that of the founders of the Ursuline order. It was one of the material aids to devotion with which the papists furnish all their disciples. The poor fellow is not a papist, and how he obtained the little tablet I know not; but my testimony as to the meaning of the mysterious device, together with the names of a few friends who go security for his good conduct, today procured his release. Though he escaped with life it was not without suffering. He was at first put to torture, and beaten to extort a confession, and afterwards confined on short allowance, in a filthy prison for ten days; robbed of his money and stripped almost naked. I could give you a chapter on Chinese justice, if my journal had not already grown to such a length.

MISCELLANIES.

OLD CALABAR.

Letters that have lately been received from this mission convey the distressing intelligence of the bombardment and destruction of Old Town by a British war steamer, on the 19th of January, and of the accidental destruction by fire of the Mission House at Duke Town on the 9th February.

Bombardment and Destruction of Old Town.

It appears from a minute of the Old Calabar Committee, which has been sent home, that the Rev. Mr. Waddell drew up a narrative of the proceedings in this melancholy affair, which the other missionaries signed, and which they requested might be published in the Record. In the absence of this paper, which unhappily has not yet arrived, the following notices are taken from letters of the Rev. Messrs. Edgerly and Anderson:—Old Town is a village situated on the height between Duke Town and Creek Town, consisting of a cluster of some fifteen or twenty native houses or yards. It was the station where Mr. Edgerley had wrought the printing-press, and it was important chiefly as a point from which missionary operations could be carried into Qua Town, two miles inland, and the villages of the interior. The people of Old Town did not carry on any trade with the ships, had little intercourse with the British, and were peculiarly attached to the degraded and cruel heathen rites of the country. The Record for July 1854, contains an account of the very superstitious character of the late king, Willy Tom Robins, and of the horrid scenes of murder and bloodshed that were enacted at his death. These murders, except in so far as they were the result of the administration of the poison nut, (which the natives have not yet agreed to suppress), were regarded as a violation of the Egbo law, passed a few years ago, prohibiting the killing of persons as sacrifices for the dead. The Egbo authorities, both at Duke Town and at Creek Town were appealed to, and demands made that the murderers should be brought to justice. But though some talking took place, no serious measures were adopted. On the 15th January, the war steamer "Antelope," having on board J. W. B. Lynslager, acting British Consul for the Bight of Biafra, arrived at Duke Town. The consul summoned a meeting of the ship captains, then in the river, and of the missionaries, to be held on board the steamer on the 16th. When the question was put at this meeting, if any British subject had any complaints to make, one of the ship captains "preferred a charge against the Old Town people, for the murders perpetrated last year on the death of Willy Tom." Mr. Edgerley was requested to state what he knew about those transactions, and he gave details similar to those that are published in the Record for July. At this meeting it was resolved that in two days the town should be destroyed unless seven of the murderers should be given up. Against this measure, both Mr. Waddell and Mr. Edgerley protested; but at the same time the latter did what he could to persuade the people to yield to the demand of the consul and to save the town. "Gave ample notice," he says, "to the people of the town, that the only means now of averting the fearful doom impending, was by giving up the murderers, which they doggedly refused to do; but they exonerated me from any participation in the resolve which had been thus notified to them by the consul and Duke Town and Creek Town authorities. They were all armed, which I protested against, and assured them that if they made resistance or appeared in arms, their destruction was inevitable; nevertheless, the town great guns were charged, and powder served out to fight the man-of-war!" On the 17th, the consul wrote formally to Mr. Edgerley thus: "I have to inform you that if the instigators of the barbarous and foul murders lately committed at Old Town, are not handed over to me by ten o'clock to-morrow forenoon, the town will be destroyed. I therefore give you notice, that you may remove your property previous to the commencement of these operations. Should you require assistance, please to inform me." In reply, Mr. Edgerley stated that he had neither the power nor the influence to effect the delivering up of the murderers, repeated his protest against "so summary and extreme a procedure," as the destruction of the town, intimated his inability to remove his property in so short a period, and accepted the offer of assistance. A second letter was sent by the consul, in similar terms, and adding, "Lieutenant Commander Young has been kind enough to grant the use of the paddle-box boats of Her Majesty's steamship 'Antelope,' and Kroomen will be sent with them to-morrow morning, to enable you to remove your property;" to which Mr. Edgerley responded by saying, "I have had recourse to all the measures within my province, for the fulfilment of the conditions on which you will spare Old Town," that he had no hope that the criminals would be given up, reiterating his protest against the "extreme measures" proposed, and expressing his gratitude for the kind offer of service, made by Lieutenant Commander Young. The consul sent to Mr. Edgerley a third letter, repeating the offer of assistance and saying, "I never anticipated for one moment that you would be competent to deliver up the criminals; if you are under that impression, it is a wrong one." As this letter was received late in the evening, no answer was returned to it. On the 18th, Mr. Edgerley, along with the Rev. W. Anderson, Mr. Sutherland, and others, was busily engaged packing up and despatching goods to Duke Town. They were reluctant to leave the mission premises, if that could be avoided. Towards evening they were visited by the master of the "Antelope," two officers, and a ship captain, to whom Mrs. Edgerley put the question, "Are we safe in remaining during the bombardment of the town?" and the reply was, "I should say not; for though the mission premises will not be fired upon, there is no saying when a shell explodes, but your premises may be destroyed." This answer, Mr. Edgerley says, decided the question as to the necessity of their leaving Old Town, especially when it was recollected that the first shell fired in this way at the town of Lagos, on the windward coast, killed the missionary's wife. Accordingly, Mr. Edgerley, after taking his family to Duke Town, wrote that evening to the consul, in these terms:—"I beg to inform you that I have been arduously engaged the whole day, with the assistance of two brother missionaries, three white people from one of the ships, my wife and daughter, and at least a dozen natives residing on the mission premises at Old Town, packing up and delivering to the boats, sent to my assistance by Lieutenant Commander Young, of Her Britannic Majesty's steamship 'Antelope,' and gentlemen of the mercantile service, the greater portion of my annual supplies, which has been attended with some damage in their removal to this station. I have been necessitated to remove part of my family from thence late this afternoon, and was unable to avail myself of the further use of the boats to-day, as we were too much fatigued and unwell. There now remains on the mission premises all my household furniture, which, if you will favour me with further time and assistance, I will endeavour to remove to-morrow. I presume I need scarcely say, that in the event of the mission premises at Old Town unfortunately by accident sharing in the fate of the devoted town, the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland will have a claim on the British government." We give the events of the following day in the words of Mr. Edgerley:

"Friday, 19th Jan. 1855.—This morning went up to Old Town very early in company with my daughter and Mr. Sutherland, (Mrs. E. was too unwell to go), and continued packing up and despatching by several boats, assisted by Kroomen and all our domestics, the remainder of the goods, types, etc., at Old Town. We were at this employment up till ten o'clock, when the 'Antelope' was seen steaming up at slow and stealthy pace to our devoted town. I left two white men to continue the packing, and Mr. Sutherland, my daughter, and I, took to our boat with the intention of going to the man-of-war, which was now abreast of the town and ready to commence hostilities. I did not pull direct for her, as I was grieved and confused, and did not wish the natives to imagine that I was a particeps in the transaction. The consul, I was told, waved his hat at our boat several times; but when I stopped pulling, our Kroomen in the boat told me he was calling the Kroomen away from the beach, in the boats sent to our assistance. Immediately a shell was thrown into the town, and then another; we pulled on in an oblique direction down the river to the opposite bank, crossing the steamer's stern, and then took up our position, holding on by the mangrove trees, some six or eight hundred yards below the vessel. The bombardment continued with shot and shell at intervals till the town was cleared of all the stragglers, and then the commander landed with some forty armed marines, and set fire to all the houses. Immediately as the first shot was fired, the two white men fled from the offside of the mission-house, and one of a gang of armed natives and blood-people presented a gun at them, but they were saved by one of the same people, who ordered the others not to fire, and they escaped to the beach, and eventually got over the river into the boat in which we were. They gave me this last account. The commander, on his return from burning the town, acquainted me that he found some dozen or fifteen men upon the mission premises in arms, amongst whom he scattered a few shots, and they took to their heels."

The "Antelope" left the river on the 20th; but before going away, the consul sent the following letter to Duke Ephraim, and the chiefs of Duke Town:—"Gentlemen, I beg leave to inform you that I now hold you responsible for the safety of the persons and property of Mr. Samuel Edgerley, Mrs. Edgerley, Miss Edgerley, and of any and all of their male and female domestics, or other native residents within their household. Should any act of oppression or injustice be shown towards them, it will be severely punished. I have further to inform you, that you will prevent any houses from being erected in Old Town under the penalty of incurring the displeasure of Her Majesty's Government. I sincerely hope that the destruction of Old Town yesterday will have a very beneficial effect on you and your people, and be the means of inducing you to give up the use of the poison nut. And I trust you will be prepared to entirely abolish it on the next visit of a man-of-war. I have to request you will make the contents of this known to your people and all others concerned."

In a letter written on the 24th, Mr. Edgerley says, "In the hurried removal of the mission property and my own, from Old Town to this, much valuable property has been stolen, destroyed, and damaged; this applies to the printing materials, particularly with the household furniture, etc. The house and outer premises at the station, together with the new schoolroom, have all been plundered (by the natives) of doors, windows, fixtures, shelves, etc. and the place is now a perfect wreck It is true Egbo has been blown by the authorities of Duke Town, that the station property should be brought back again, but should this be done, it will be worth nothing, and there is little likelihood that it will be complied with. The damage to the Mission Board is L.500, to myself personally L.70 or L.80."

It seems that no lives were lost. The people fled to the bush. They have houses at their plantations, which are at some distance inland, and are not without shelter; and were they allowed, they would soon rebuild their houses, so that the calamity to them is not so great as the people imagined. We give the following extract from a letter of Mr. Anderson:

Remarkable Preservation.

"After the bombardment of Old Town on the 19th instant, when the commander of the war vessel went ashore with the marines to set fire to the houses, they discovered a poor lame little boy, apparently somewhat idiotic, sitting all alone in the town or in its outskirts. When all others ran away, he was unable to accompany them, and it is supposed that his master did not consider him worth the carrying. He remained unscathed amid the destruction that played around him. He was taken on board the man-of-war and kindly treated. The commander sent him up to us the next morning, and he is now with us at the mission house. Poor fellow! he understands not a word of either English or Efik, so that he has not a single person to converse with. We trust that God has purposes of mercy towards him. Solitarily did he bear the brunt of sixty shot and shell which were thrown into the town. Alone, yet not alone."

Thus we have given from the papers in our possession, as brief an account as was practicable of this sad affair. It remains to be seen whether it will operate to the advantage or the disadvantage of the mission; whether it will increase or diminish the beneficial influence of the white man over the native mind. We abstain from comments; but it will be obvious to our readers that certain very grave questions are raised by these proceedings, which the committee on Foreign Missions will require fully to consider; such as, is it right in a British consul to order the destruction of a native town on the complaint of those who are merely visitants, and in opposition to the protest of British residents? Is it right in a British consul, on the complaint of those trading in the neighbourhood, to destroy a town at which a mission station has been formed, and thus abolish that mission in the face of the protest of the missionary? Has a British consul authority, not merely to destroy a native town, where such a mission has for years existed, but to prevent its being rebuilt? Has not the church a claim upon the government for losses sustained by such a transaction? If the first three questions be answered in the affirmative, then may Duke Town and Creek Town, and the other native towns along the coast be destroyed, and the missions which have been formed at them, and which are the hope of Africa, be extinguished.

THE DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF DUKE TOWN MISSION HOUSE.

This deplorable event happened so shortly before the sailing of the mail steamer, that we have only scanty notices. The Rev. William Anderson says, 13th February, "You will regret to learn that the roof of Duke Town mission-house accidentally caught fire on Friday last, the 9th instant, and that in little more than an hour the whole was burnt down to the ground, with the exception of a few of the mangrove posts on which the house was supported. Most of the ship captains and surgeons, and a large number of native gentlemen, with drawn swords in hand, came to our aid as soon as possible, and under their direction, a portion of the household furniture, and about the half of my books, were saved from the flames. I cannot enter further into particulars at present. We are occupying two small apartments which escaped destruction." Mr. Edgerley also says, "On the 9th instant, between 12 and 1 o'clock noon, a fire broke out in the Duke Town mission-house, the first mission-house erected in Calabar, and in one short hour it was in a heap of ruins! Hundreds of persons, consisting of white people, kroomen, and natives, were soon on the spot, and laboured with intense zeal, in the first place ineffectively to subdue the flames, owing to the parched and friable nature of the matting, together with the combustible character of the asphalte felt with which it was covered. They were, however, pretty successful in saving a good portion of the furniture, although very much was lost, stolen, or destroyed. We were all bewildered with the suddenness of the calamity. The wind was very fresh at the time."

This severe calamity has not only destroyed much property belonging to the church and to the missionary, but it has deprived our agents of suitable house accommodation. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson and Mr. Sutherland had to take up their abode in two small out-house rooms which were saved; and Mr. and Mrs. Edgerley were residing in a small house, erected by one of the ship captains, and which the Mission Board some time ago purchased. There are no proper building materials in Calabar, such as stone, lime, or brick, and the mission houses are formed of boards, taken out chiefly from this country. The committeee on Foreign Missions are accordingly taking steps to have houses made and sent out by the May steamer, in order that our esteemed agents may, as speedily as it is practicable for us, be furnished with the means of healthful accommodation.

Death of Mr. Young, the Brother of the late King Eyamba.

The Rev. William Anderson says, "On Sabbath last, the 11th February, Mr. Young, whose name has figured largely in the history of the country for many years, breathed his last. On Sabbath, the 4th, I had a long conversation with him on 2 Kings v., respecting Naaman, and directed him to the Saviour's blood. I saw him only once afterwards."

ADMISSIONS TO THE CHURCH AT DUKE TOWN.

The following notices, though brief, contain joyful tidings, and will be read with refreshing interest, after the melancholy details which have just been given. They show that the work of the Lord is still going happily on.

Admission of two Persons from Sierra Leone.

"On January 7th, the first Sabbath of the year, I had," says Mr. Anderson, "the pleasure of admitting to the fellowship of the church here, a decent old couple, recently arrived from Sierra Leone. Both husband and wife were sold from this country many years ago, captured by a man-of-war sloop, taken to Sierra Leone, and have returned to end their days here. A third person, an old man, would have been received into fellowship at the same time, but 'he was not, for God took him, a short time before our communion season."

Two Native Converts baptized.

"You will be glad to learn," Mr. Anderson continues "that on Sabbath last, the 28th January, other two natives of this country were received into the church by baptism. Both are young men of about twenty years of age. The elder of the two, John Sago, I have long known as a steady, quiet youth, and most diligent at his book. For the greater part of last year, he was under the inspection of Mr. Edgerley at Old Town, and Mr. Edgerley speaks of him in high terms. The other, Jemmy Brother, has also been an attentive scholar for a long period. It was his father, and brother, and sister, who were murdered by the esere (poison bean) at Henshaw Town, in the month of November last.

"Nine native youths have now been received into the fold of the good Shepherd at this station. They need the prayers of the church at home, for many are the snares by which they are surrounded."

THE ANNUAL REPORT.

Since the last number of the Record was issued, the Annual Report of the Board of Publication has been published and sent out to those entitled to it. Any person desiring to have a copy, will have it forwarded to them gratuitously, by addressing (post paid) Mr. J. P. Engles, 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

A NOBLE GIFT.

In one of our Southern cities a highly intelligent gentleman was conversing with the writer, when he expressed the following resolve:

"I have," said he, "a family of eight children, and as my pecuniary ability is very limited, I shall be able to give them very little of this world's goods when they set out in life for themselves. But as the oldest are now approaching adult years, there is one thing which, if God permits, I intend to give to each of them as they successively leave my roof. It is a complete set of the publications of the Presbyterian Board. This invaluable armory of sound scriptural and Presbyterian principles shall go with them upon the journey of life, so that in every assault made upon the principles in which they have been educated, they may have a defence at hand. If my sons or daughters marry, they shall find these books among the first articles for housekeeping placed in their new homes."

We commend this purpose to the attention of other heads of families. A set of these publications neatly bound, and with a lettering on the cover indicating its presentation, would probably be preserved for a lifetime and handed down to children's children. Given at that juncture of life's affairs when the heart is peculiarly susceptible to tender influences, and received as a parting gift from beloved parents, when just leaving the home of childhood and youth, with all its hallowed associations, what a wealth of sacred recollections and influences would ever abide with it. In many a scene of after life, when beloved parents had gone up to heaven, and when cares and temptations and afflictions pressed in upon their souls, would the owners delight to resort thither to find among its precious volumes those truths appropriate to their circumstances. While many others might be found in later life "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the slight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive," these would find here, subordinately to the blessed word of God, that information, argument, and strong conviction of the truth, which would enable them to "grow up into him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ." Better, far better, would it be for many a parent to give his childrens' house such furniture, than to deck it with rich and costly luxuries, or to fill their purses with thousands of gold and silver.

A PROPOSAL TO SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

We wish to propose a plan of usefulness to all our Sabbath-schools who desire to do good. We know there are hundreds of such schools whose teachers and pupils have both the heart and the means to do something for others, who are less favoured than themselves. We know there are many thousands of Sabbath-school scholars whose parents and whose teachers feel that one very important part of a child's training is its education in Christian sympathy and beneficence. To all such we offer a choice opportunity.

There are scores of new Sabbath-schools commenced every year in destitute and needy sections of the country, through the efforts of little groups of Christians, or in connection with the labours and enterprises of our Domestic Missionaries. Many of these are carried forward in the midst of great difficulties and discouragements, such as many Sabbath-school teachers and pupils in the more settled parts of the country have little conception of. Often these schools are chiefly attended and sustained by those who are entirely unable to provide all the necessary aids and facilities for the work, especially the almost indispensable aid of the well-selected Sabbath-school library. Hence they are obliged to appeal for assistance to those who are more favoured than themselves.

Numerous requests for aid in securing such a library are continually coming to the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication. Some are able to raise half the amount needed to purchase the library, others can do little or nothing towards it. The necessities and urgencies of the case are often stated in strong and affecting terms. Allusion was made in the last number of the Record, to such a communication from the farthest part of Wisconsin. Within a fortnight four or five similar appeals have been received from new and promising Sabbath-schools in other States. Gladly would the Board respond to all these applications if it were at all consistent with the safety and ultimate usefulness of the institution. This however it cannot do, unless the money is furnished from some quarter for the purpose.

Will not Pastors, Superintendents, and Teachers propose this work to their Sabbath-schools? And are there not very many schools ready joyfully to enter upon it? The Board of Publication is making frequent additions to its Sabbath-school Library, and thus far it may safely claim to be the best Library ever published for Presbyterian Sabbath-schools. It now numbers 139 volumes, which may be purchased for $20.15 cash, in half-roan; or for about $23.50 in handsome muslin binding. If any School will forward that sum, or any portion of it, to the Corresponding Secretary, he will take great pleasure in securing for it such a direction as will promise the largest amount of good. "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

COLPORTAGE AMONG THE CHILDREN.

The following remarks are extracted from the last report of a colporteur in Western New York. There are thousands of our readers who will feel the truth of his observations. A considerable portion of the recent issues of the Board of Publication have been prepared with an especial reference to the religious benefit of children and youth, and we rejoice to know that they are received and read with avidity by multitudes of youthful readers in every part of our extended country, and beyond its limits.

"I deem it," says this colporteur, "highly important to put books of the right kind, and no other, into the hands of the young. Supply them and keep them supplied with good books, and they will be pleased with them, and seek no other. I look upon this feature of the religious colportage system with no little interest. It is doing incalculable good, by cultivating in children and youth a correct taste. It comes too, in a time of special need, when, more than ever, a vitiated taste is prevalent. How many, alas! and not the young only, will not read a book for intellectual, much less for moral and religious improvement, a book, which, to be understood, requires the reader to think. They are willing to read only for amusement. Very many parents misjudge about what kind of a book it must be which children will be pleased to read. They think it must be a book of trifling stories, or something funny. One which has anything of a religious character is not expected to interest them. If I had not been a colporteur, I might not have been so certain as I am, that such notions are false. They do not accord with facts, which, in very many instances, have come under my observation. I have often been delighted with the lively interest manifested by the young in your attractive and truly valuable juvenile books. Children will read books of this character, with as much pleasure and with deeper interest, than works of fiction, or other trifling and valueless works, especially if none but good books are put into their hands."

NOVA SCOTIA.

Readers of the Record have seen intimations from time to time of the deepening and extending interest in the publications of this Board in the British Provinces. The following letter will show that that interest is still increasing in Nova Scotia. The respected brother whose name is mentioned below, being about to attend the meeting of the Free Church Synod of Nova Scotia on other business, very kindly agreed to invite the attention of the Synod to the operations and issues of the Board. As the result, an official letter was received a day or two since by the Corresponding Secretary from the Convener of the Synod's Committee, from which letter the following sentences are extracted:

Rev. W. E. Schenck,
Cor. Sec'y. of the Board of Publication.

My dear sir—The magnitude, importance, and claims of your Board were very forcibly brought before the Synod of the Free Church of Nova Scotia, at its late meeting in Halifax, by the Rev. Dr. Thompson of the Grand street church in New York. After consideration, the whole work was intrusted to a committee, of which the subscriber is convener. Having been advised by Dr. Thompson to write to you, my present communication is designed to obtain the necessary information for the circulation of your books within the bounds of our Synod, * * * *. I need not say that there is no church in the United States so entirely one with us as your own. Your books are highly esteemed by us. We wish to see them cast in thousands over our country and attended by the prayers of those who have power with God. No language can express—no created mind can grasp the amount of good resulting from the circulation of your books. The Lord bless your labours more and more, and establish the work of your hands."

We shall do all that is in our power to meet and further the views of our brethren in Nova Scotia.

We recently enjoyed the pleasure of an interview with a clergyman from the province of New Brunswick. He had for many years been travelling as an Evangelist through certain portions of the last named province, and gave us delightful assurances of the usefulness of the Board's publications there. He mentioned that he had very frequently met these publications in the most remote habitations, where they had been left by the colporteurs now traversing the province, and that he often saw the most indubitable evidences of their having been blessed to the spiritual good of their readers. So strongly was his mind impressed with their usefulness, that on his return to his field of labour, he sought and obtained from the Board a commission to act as a voluntary colporteur in its service, and will henceforth bear about with him in his itinerations a supply of its books and tracts. May that divine blessing without which the best of seed may all be planted in vain, attend the scattered pages of truth, and make them greatly promotive of God's glory and the salvation of souls.

LONDONDERRY PRESBYTERY.

The Corresponding Secretary returned a few days ago from New Hampshire and Massachusetts, after spending about ten days among the brethren of Londonderry Presbytery. He was exceedingly gratified to find the operations and publications of the Board highly appreciated there, not only among Presbyterians, but among our Congregationalist brethren likewise. One or two colporteurs are now labouring successfully within their bounds, and there is a very wide and strong desire for the abundant distribution of our books and tracts. Several of the churches of that Presbytery are at present destitute of pastors, and while in this condition they feel encouraged and strengthened in their attachment not only to true religion, but to the Presbyterian Church, by such dissemination of printed truth among them.

THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION OF THE REFORMED DUTCH CHURCH.

The infant efforts of this newly organized Board seem to have awakened much interest in the body with which it is connected, and to promise enlarged future results. We take the following extracts from a report on Publication made to the last meeting of the General Synod.

"In the Publication Department, the Board reports the issue of four separate works, amounting to 7000 copies, containing a total of 2,101,000 pages. The most important of these is the German Hymn Book, 2000 copies, at a cost of $2570 69. The committee are happy to observe the favour with which this work has been received by the most competent judges, and its endorsement by the Presbyterian Board of Publication."

The German Hymn Book above referred to, was noticed in one of the resolutions of our General Assembly (Resolution 6th, on the Board of Publication) and its use, at the suggestion of the Board, was authorized in the German congregations belonging to our own branch of the Church.

"The financial department of the operations of the Board exhibits a balance of stock in hand above all liabilities, amounting to $2901 60. The total gross amount of sales has been $1461 05. There have been received from fifty-five churches, $1729 63; from private donations, $497 12. Balance in hand May 21st, 1855, $316 89.

In this respect our Dutch brethren seem to have come up more promptly to the work than did our own denomination. The Presbyterian Board, after struggling on for five years under the name of the "Presbyterian Tract and Sunday-school Book Society," in the year 1838, (the first year in which it was adopted by the General Assembly) received only $723 77. We trust the united and liberal support of their Church may increasingly attend the new Board.

In reference to the arrangements made between that Board and our own, which were fully stated in the Record at the time of their adoption last year, the report remarks,

"The arrangements made with the Presbyterian Board of Publication exhibit a spirit of cordial and generous co-operation which we doubt not will be fully reciprocated throughout our whole denomination. To their experience and valuable suggestions, as well as to the unusual facilities granted by them for interchange of publications, and to the truly fraternal feeling which has marked all their negotiations, this Board owes its most practicable arrangements and its happiest prospects. Long may it continue a bright link in that strong chain which so closely binds these two ancient branches of the great Presbyterian household of faith."

To these fraternal sentiments, the Presbyterian Board most cordially responds, as will be seen by a reference to its last Annual Report to the Assembly (page 16), which latter body resolved that the arrangements between the two Boards was by it regarded with special gratification.

The report to the General Synod concludes as follows.

"In conclusion, your Committee desire to express the gratitude of this Synod to the Great Head of the Church for his blessing upon this, the youngest of our affiliated institutions. It completes the circle of her great agencies for promoting the spread of the truth as it is in Jesus. It supplements just that part of our ecclesiastical mechanism the want of which has been most felt. It promises rapidly to form a truly denominational literature, which, while it shall do justice to our history, will not neglect the present. It will re-echo in the homes of our people, through many voices, the solemn utterances of the pulpit. The work already accomplished bids us hope for great results hereafter. While it is founded on the principle of taking the best care of our own dear home, it equally promotes the welfare of the whole community. Let it, then, be cherished in the bosom of a warm-hearted church, and by the blessing of our gracious Lord, its influences shall distil as the dew, and come down like showers. With its holy sisterhood of agencies, it will hasten the spread of our Church wherever God opens a door before us, and thus prove what we profess, that our purposes are wider than any denomination, and our object no lower than the glory of God, through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour.

In behalf of the Committee,

WILLIAM J. R. TAYLOR, Chairman."

QUARTER OF AN HOUR WITH A BAD BOOK.

About twenty-five years ago I formed a most intimate acquaintance with a young man of fine education and commanding talent, and we soon became bosom friends. One morning after school, at a street-corner, he handed me a book, which he said he could loan me for only one quarter of an hour. We stood at that corner for a few moments, while I looked at the obscene pictures and read a few pages in that polluting volume. I handed it back to him and never saw it again; but the poison took effect, "the sin left its mark." I cannot erase the effect of the impure thoughts which in that quarter of an hour that vile book lodged in my heart, and which, may God forgive me, I harboured there. I can and do pray against the sin, and trust by God's grace yet to conquer it; but it is a thorn in my flesh, and yet causes me great bitterness and anguish.

Young men, as a lover of your souls, I tell you in all sincerity, that there is nothing which I would not willingly give to have the veil of oblivion cast over the scenes and the sentiments of that corrupt volume, which will haunt me like foul spectres during my hours of private devotion, in the sanctuary and at the communion table. O, what sad work did that quarter of an hour make upon a human soul! Young men, beware of bad books, and beware also of evil companions.

My early friend, after well nigh accomplishing my ruin, became a dissolute man, imbibed infidel sentiments, and at last, as I greatly fear, died by his own hand. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."—Am. Messenger.

VALUE OF A LIBRARY TO A POOR STUDENT.

One of the most interesting incidents in the early history of the famous men of our country is related of Dr. Bowditch, the learned translator of La Place:

"During the revolutionary war, a privateer from Salem captured a vessel and brought the prize into that port. A valuable private library was among the articles on board. These books were a rare prize for those days, and young Bowditch borrowed a number from the person having them in charge. The volumes were retained longer than was necessary for a simple perusal, and it was ascertained that the young student was so desirous of procuring the works, and his means were too slender for him to dare hope of purchasing them, that he actually copied twenty folio and quarto volumes of scientific works, which were of great service to him as books of reference in after years. These manuscript volumes are now in the possession of the sons of Dr. Bowditch, and are highly prized. The facilities now afforded students appear in striking contrast with the early struggles for knowledge which he encountered."—Boston Transcript.

GERMAN CATECHISM.

The Board of Publication has just issued a new edition of the Shorter Catechism in the German language. It contains the Scripture proofs appended to each question. The paper and typography are such as to recommend it. Price 5 cents.

BOOK NOTICE.

THE GOSPEL AND EPISTLES OF JOHN: pp. 168. 64mo. Price 20 cents, gilt.

This is a very neat and convenient little volume, containing most of the inspired writings of the beloved disciple. Each of them is prefaced by a few instructive and valuable editorial remarks, and the whole forms a very desirable little pocket manual.

(N. S.) Assembly's Minutes.—We have been furnished, in advance of the publication of the Assembly's Minutes, with the following summary :

Synods,	24
Presbyteries,	108
Ministers,	1,567
Licentiates,	111
Candidates,	238
Churches,	1,659
Additions on examination,	5,816
" certificate,	4,890
Whole number in communion,	143,029
Baptisms of adults,	1,705
" infants,	3,924

CONTRIBUTIONS.

Commissioner's Fund,	$ 3,492 32
Contingent Fund,	566 90
Domestic Missions,	76,871 37
Foreign Missions,	63,963 28
Education,	37,710 96
Publication,	48,322 91

One has been added to the number of Synods. The Presbyteries are the same in number as compared with last year. Five more ministers, three less licentiates, and forty more candidates are recorded. The churches are two less. Several very small churches that have become extinct, having been struck from the roll of the Presbyteries, and a few have become Independent, or O. S., and so overbalancing the new churches that have been formed.

Although the returns from the churches are imperfect, they show the gratifying fact of an advance in the number of communicants. The net increase is 1,552. As the number of additions has amounted to 10,706, the number of removals by certificate, death, or otherwise, has been 9,154. A similar fluctuation appears in the list of ministers. The alphabetical roll of ministers and licentiates, at the end of the Minutes, contains 120 new names, while 116 have disappeared. Of the latter, 33, an unusually large number, have been removed by death. The increase in the number of candidates gives pleasing evidence of a ministry in prospect. Nearly 6,000, it will be seen have been added to the churches on profession; perhaps more. The fruits of many of the revivals of the past season are yet to be gathered in.

Although the last year's report of Contributions to Domestic Missions included the large sums given to the $100,000 Fund for Church Erection, this year's report shows a diminution of less than $25,000; while the contributions to the Foreign Missions have advanced more than $6,000, and to the Publication cause more than $15,000. The last year's report also included the contributions to the endowment of the Union Theological Seminary, which, in the case of a single church, amounted to about $50,000, which almost covers the deficiency of that column.—N. Y. Evangelist.

Spread of Light in the East.—The Rev. Mr. Righter, now engaged in the service of the American Bible Society in disseminating copies of the Scriptures in the East, gives a most interesting account of the readiness with which they are received by multitudes. The following is an extract from his last letter.

"The Turkish Governor of the city obtained from us a copy of the Scriptures, which he is said to read openly, and discuss its truths with Turks, Koords, and Armenians. And his banker, an Armenian, the teacher of the Armenian school, and some others, petitioned us some time since to establish a regular Protestant service on the Sabbath.

"Light has also spread in the villages around and in the region beyond, among the wild Koords of the mountains. A copy of the New Testament which found its way into these wilds some four or five years since, having fallen into the hands of a Koordish chief, he has made it the law of his tribe. All matters are tried by the rules of the gospel. Not only this, they seem to have received the word in its spirit. They believe in Christ; have a kind of church organization, and celebrate the Lord's supper in commemoration of his sufferings and death."

Mr. Clark also says, "There is a large population in our field, of Turks called Ruzzel-bash. They seem to be a distinct party or tribe, and constitute the majority of Musselmans in all this region. They are all ready to receive the gospel; they believe in Christ; they observe not the great fast of the Mohammedans, neither do they use their forms of prayer, or practice their various washings. They pray extempore; they meet together once a year, make bread and eat it, and say, this is for Christ.

Two copies of the New Testament in Turkish, not long since, were carried to one of their villages. They were eagerly read and listened to. The villagers were amazed at the wonderful truths, and many joyfully received them. At length the villagers became divided among themselves, and many separated from their Mollah, and declared they would receive the truth at all hazards. And these men have already been subjected to much persecution for the gospel's sake, one of them at the same time being the chief man of the village.

In another village, eight hours from Aralkir, a Ruzzel-bash has a Testament which he reads and preaches to his people; and he also is suffering much persecution. He is a Turk of some influence. "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

Thus are the Bible and the gospel spreading among the Turks throughout the Empire.

We have received the following order for Scriptures from the Jewish station at Salonica; 100 Hebrew Bibles; 25 Spanish Bibles; 100 Hebrew Psalms; 100 Hebrew Pentateuchs; indicating that a good work is also springing up amongst the Jews. And from Adrianople comes a call for 25 Turkish Testaments and 80 Hebrew Psalms. May the Lord yet more abundantly bless his word at all these stations and in all these lands. Most sincerely yours,

C. N. Righter.

Congregational Board of Publication.—The Congregational Board of Publication has elected Rev. Jacob Ide, D. D., its President for the ensuing year, to fill the office vacated by the decease of Dr. Leonard Woods. The receipts of the Board last year were $2241; sales of books, $1464; grants of books, $1306. Not much has been done for colportage, in consequence of lack of funds.

CHURCH DEBTS.

The pecuniary or financial constitution of our churches should be reformed in order to give them more efficiency in publishing the gospel. There is a most paralyzing power in a church debt. It discourages the pastor, oppresses the officers, and contracts the benevolence of a people. Its whole influence is deadly, especially if permitted to grow to an amount so large as to be burdensome. In that case it causes the minister to feel that he is regarded very much in the light in which the manager of a theatre regards an artist whom he may have employed to fill his boxes. The officers, in turn, are compelled to look more after finances than the spiritual condition of the congregation, and, what is sometimes worse, are obliged, according to the present system of things, to raise the pew-rents to a mark so high as to exclude the poor from the church. This is growing to be more and more an evil, especially in our city churches, and is a tremendous barrier to the spread of the gospel among a city population; for when it has become impossible for a person of moderate means to procure a seat in the house of God, he and his family are virtually denied the privileges and benefits which they have a right to receive from the institutions of the gospel. The evils growing out of church debts are exceedingly mischievous, and are in general without any palliation or excuse. In a country so prosperous as our own, where so great prodigality prevails in private, and the ostentation of wealth is so glaring, it is a shame that the church of God should ever be embarrassed by incumbrances upon its property. A people content with such incumbrances may, perhaps, be unconscious of the injury they inflict in various ways upon the interests of religion and the welfare of society. But it is surely a reproach to our Christianity, that while we have so much money to invest in various corporations that promise pecuniary dividends, any congregation, respectable in numbers, should permit that institution which gives security to law, refinement to society, and all the dearest consolations of hope to the human soul to languish, or its powers of usefulness to be restricted under the burden of a debt. We speak in general terms, but with the most thorough convictions that church debts are church curses, usually self-imposed, and every way damaging to the interests of true religion.—Christian Intelligencer.

CRUCIFIXION OF THE HEART.

To crucify the flesh is not to destroy the human nature, but to resist the cravings of the animal, and the inferior propensities generally, to be gratified when God's law forbids the indulgence. A continued course of such resistance will, with God's blessing, not only bring them in habitual control, but diminish their intensity—crucify them; in accordance with the same general principles of our nature, by which a muscle shrinks and becomes feeble when it has long remained in a state of inaction.—Dr. Payne.

THE RIGHT MUST WIN.

The following beautiful lines were found in a Roman Catholic work. Were all the doctrines and sentiments of that Church as accordant with Scripture, there would be little or no occasion for controversy with it. W. T.

Oh! it is hard to work for God,
To rise and take his part
Upon this battle-field of earth,
And not sometimes lose heart.

He hides himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God;
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

Or He deserts us at the hour
The fight is almost lost;
And seems to leave us to ourselves
Just when we need Him most.

Ill masters good; good seems to change
To ill with greatest ease;
And, worst of all, the good with good
Is at cross purposes.

It is not so, but so it looks;
And we lose courage then;
And doubts will come if God hath kept
His promises to men.

Ah! God is other than we think;
His ways are far above,
Far above reason's height, and reached
Only by child-like love.

The look, the fashion of God's ways
Love's life-long study are;
She can be bold, and guess, and act,
When reason would not dare.

She has a prudence of her own;
Her step is firm and free;
Yet there is cautious science, too,
In her simplicity.

Workman of God! O lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battle-field
Thou shalt know where to strike.

O, blessed is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when He Is most invisible!

And blessed is he who can divine
Where real right doth lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye!

O, learn to scorn the praise of men!
O, learn to love with God!
For Jesus won the world through shame,
And beckons thee his road.

God's glory is a wondrous thing,
Most strange in all its ways,
And of all things on earth, least like
What men agree to praise.

Muse on his justice, downcast soul!
Muse and take better heart;
Back with thine angel to the field;
Good luck shall crown thy part!

God's justice is a bed where we
Our anxious hearts may lay,
And, weary with ourselves, may sleep
Our discontent away.

For right is right, since God is God;
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter, would be sin!

A FACT ABOUT THE CATECHISM.

We have been looking over some records kept of recitation in the Assembly's Catechism by the children of a Sabbath-school. It has been our custom, occasionally, to hear the children of the Sabbath-school recite in the Catechism, and with the help of the teachers, take an account of the number of answers which each pupil could give. In looking over the record for 1847, i. e., eight years ago, and noticing the number of those who could answer all the questions, which we found to be twenty-nine, we found that of these, eighteen have since that time, i. e., within these eight years, become hopefully pious. Of the remaining eleven, a part have left the place, and passed beyond our knowledge; some of the others were very young at the time. We think that the fact here noticed has an important significance. It shows, at least, that one way to bring our children within the most hopeful class, as to the probabilities of conversion, is by giving them a thorough knowledge of this incomparable compendium of Christian faith.—Puritan Record.

IS RELIGION BEAUTIFUL?

Always! In the child, the maiden, the wife, the mother, religion shines with a holy, benignant beauty. Never yet was female character perfect without the steady faith of piety. Beauty, intellect, wealth, are comparatively dark in the brightest day, unless the divine light, unless religion throw her soft beams around them, to purify, and exalt, making twice glorious that which seemed all loveliness before.

Religion is very beautiful—in health or sickness, wealth or poverty. We can never enter the sick chamber of the good, but soft music seems to float on the air, and the burden of the song is, "Lo, peace is here!"

AFFLICTION.

Sanctified affliction, like rain after dry weather, lays the dust of passion, softens the soul into resignation, and causes gratitude to spring forth.

THE FAMILY.

Whatever tends to impair the beautiful structure of the family, its contentment and satisfactions, should meet with such a rebuke as is due only to a mischief which is undermining the virtues and the very foundations of our republican edifice. And the evil is none the less because the injury which is doing is out of sight, below the surface, and therefore causing no alarm. Our fathers would never have conquered freedom without a careful nurture in the bosom of families founded on virtue and affection, and in turn promoting them. We, their children, will fail in maintaining the acquisition, if we wickedly throw away the helps by which it was originally won.—Newark Advertiser.

SOUTHERN AID SOCIETY.

The subjoined letter from the General Agent of the Southern Aid Society, together with the Minute adopted by the Board on the subject, are published for the information of our readers.

New Haven, July 6th, 1855.

Rev. Dr. Musgrave,

Dear Brother—The Executive Committee of the Southern Aid Society, after special consultation with those of its members who belong to your body, at its meeting yesterday in the city of New York, passed the following resolution:

"That One thousand dollars be and is hereby appropriated to the Domestic Missionary Board of the Old-school Presbyterian Church, in aid of the missionary operations under their care in the Southern and South-western States, and if consistent with their views of propriety and duty, it is our desire that the sum thus appropriated may be in addition to the amount which they would otherwise dispense in that section of the country."

The New-school churches south of Mason's and Dixon's line, you are aware, are, in general, weaker in themselves and in their sources of supply than are those of the Old-school. Most of our funds have consequently been expended upon them. We wish, however, to cherish a sympathy with all evangelical churches, and have thought it proper, with your consent, to disburse what we have to spare to the churches of your connection, through your Board. We acknowledge that we have hitherto, on a few occasions, extended aid to the ministers and churches of your body without consulting you. We have adopted the resolution herewith transmitted, that we might hereafter the more fully carry out two provisions of our constitution, distribute our funds amongst the evangelical denominations of the South and not confine them too much to one church—and do this, not so much in accordance with our own independent suggestion, as by intrusting our funds to the dispensation of the Missionary organizations of the South.

It is a very small sum that we propose to pass into your hands at this time, we are aware—and even this is not yet collected—still I need not say it will be pleasant to us to know that the overture on our part meets your acceptance.

Respectfully yours, Joseph C. Stiles,
General Agent.

Mission Rooms, Philadelphia,
August 14, 1855.

Rev. Joseph C. Stiles, D. D., General Agent of the Southern Aid Society.

Dear Sir—Your letter of the 6th of July last was laid before the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, at their stated meeting yesterday afternoon; and I now have the pleasure of transmitting to you the Minute which they unanimously adopted on the subject. It is as follows:

"Whereas, The Southern Aid Society has offered to transfer to the Board of Missions, during the present year, the sum of one thousand dollars, for the purpose of distribution among our Churches in the South and South-west; and further proposes to transfer to us, from time to time, sums of money for the same purpose; therefore,

"Resolved, That this Board does hereby respectfully decline to receive the aforesaid donation or accept the proposed agency; and for the following reasons, viz.

"1. Because, we have no authority to form any connection with any other society or to act as the Agent of any other association in the distribution of its funds.

"2. Because, the said Southern Aid Society is founded upon the voluntary principle—is not amenable to any Ecclesiastical Body, and is therefore irresponsible for its principles and acts to any Church. Warned by our past experience as a Church, of the mischievous interference of voluntary associations in our ecclesiastical affairs, we deem it inexpedient to form any alliance with any missionary society founded upon the voluntary principle.

"3. Because, so far as our branch of the Church of Christ is concerned, there is not, in our judgment, any necessity for any other organization, besides our Board of Missions, for the purpose of aiding our churches in this country. All who desire to assist our churches can contribute directly to the Board of Missions established and controlled by our General Assembly.

"4. Because the multiplication, unnecessarily, of organizations and agencies is extravagant, and an unjustifiable waste of funds that ought to be saved to the cause.

"5. Because, by accepting the proffered donation, we might be regarded as endorsing a society with whose principles and measures we are not and cannot be fully acquainted, and which might be repugnant to the sentiments and policy of our Church.

"6. Because, by consenting to act as a distributing Agent for the said society, it might be regarded as furnishing an occasion for the collection of funds, by that Association, among our people, and thus diminish the resources of our own ecclesiastical Board. For every dollar received by us, from that Society, for distribution among our churches, ten would probably be raised from our people, by the Agents of the Southern Aid Society, for the purpose of advancing the interests of other denominations, whose peculiar doctrines and polity are not congenial with our own.

"Resolved, further, That while this Board has felt it to be a duty to decline the proffered donation of the Southern Aid Society, and frankly to assign our reasons for so doing, we disclaim all unfriendly feelings towards that or any other Association whose professed object is the evangelization of our country. We heartily bid God-speed to all who are endeavouring to extend the kingdom of Christ, while we decidedly avoid every entangling alliance with other societies, and would solemnly protest against any interference, on their part, with our own denominational institutions and interests."

G. W. Musgrave,
Corresponding Secretary.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—BOARDS.

In reviewing the proceedings of the last General Assembly, the distinguished Editor of the "Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review," makes the following remarks, with respect to the objections which a few members of the Assembly uttered against the Boards of our Church, during the discussion of the subject of Church Extension; and we have no doubt that ninety-nine hundredths of our people, distinguished as they are for intelligence and stability, will heartily approve of them:—

"The objections against Boards, so far as we can gather them from the discussion, are of two kinds. First, those of principle; secondly, those of expediency. As to the former class, it was urged that the church has no discretionary power, but is tied up to the prescriptions of the Scriptures, not only as to the objects at which she is to aim, but also, as to the means of attaining them; secondly, that the church cannot delegate her powers; and thirdly, that the centralization of power inseparable from the operation of Boards, is inconsistent with the parity of the clergy. All these objections, as well as those founded on views of expediency, were so fully answered in the course of the discussion, that it is unnecessary to dwell longer on the subject. It may be assumed that this whole matter is set at rest. The ablest men in the church, who have ever expressed their disapprobation of Boards, have done their best in argument, and have utterly failed; failed, not from the want of strength, but from the inherent weakness of their cause. Even a giant's arm is unable to give momentum to a feather. Nay, the more vigorous the throw, the less in such a case is the effect. That the church on the one hand, is not a mere voluntary association, without a divine charter or prescribed constitution, and on the other, that she is not a mummy, incapable of voluntary motion, is, if not self-evident, at least practically admitted. Certain things are prescribed, and certain others are matters of discretion. The church is required to train, license, and ordain ministers; but the way in which this training shall be conducted is left to her discretion. She is required to take charge of the poor, and of the sick, but how this duty of her deaconship shall be performed is nowhere enjoined. She is commanded to send her ministers to the ends of the earth, but how they are to be sustained, is a matter left to her wisdom. What authority have we from texts of Scripture for the number of our Synods—or for any Synod at all, as distinct from a general council? For a long time, nobody intervened between our Presbyteries and the Supreme Court of the Church. It became expedient to resolve that Synod into several, and to appoint an Assembly. To deny any discretion to the church, is to condemn two-thirds of all the prescriptions of our Book. This is so obvious, that we do not think the reports can have put us into full possession of the sentiments of the brethren who apparently assume this ground. The broad, middle ground, between license on the one hand, and worse than Judaic bondage and formalism on the other, has been occupied by our church from the beginning; and we have no fear that she will at this late day be driven from it. As to the church's having discretionary power, there can be no doubt. The only question is, whether the appointment of Boards falls within the limits of her freedom of action. As to this point, it is enough to remark, that no one has produced a semblance of argument to prove them to be unscriptural, except that they are not prescribed—they are not the church courts mentioned in Scripture. But this argument, as we have seen, has no force, except in the denial of all discretionary power, or that any body can be created by the church, which is not enjoined in the word of God. The church in Geneva had no Synod; the Presbyterians in America had for years no Assembly; those of France unite several churches under one session—the churches of a city being under a body composed of ministers and elders. If the principle in question be correct, then there can be no standing committees; no boards of directors, no faculties of learning, appointed by the church. It is, in short, impossible that the principle in question can be carried out, and, therefore, impossible it should be true. The fact is, certain officers have been ordained of God, certain principles of organization and government have been prescribed, certain objects have been set before her, and the church left to employ these officers, and act under these principles at her discretion. She may combine her officers into many courts, or few; into Committees, Boards, or Faculties, as the necessities of the case demands. On this principle, our own church and every church on earth has ever acted.

"The principle that the Church cannot delegate her powers, so far as it is true, has no bearing on the question at issue. The Church cannot so delegate her powers as to divest herself of their exercise; she cannot delegate them to any not of her own body, or not subject to her control; she cannot delegate them to those who are by the word of God incapable of exercising them. Thus she cannot delegate her power to ordain or administer discipline to the civil magistrate. She cannot delegate any of her functions to Pagans or Musselmans. But does this prove that she may not delegate certain of her executive powers to a portion of her own members? May not a Presbytery appoint a committee of its own body to install a pastor? May not a Synod appoint committees to review the records of Presbyteries? What then is to hinder a Presbytery, Synod, or Assembly, to appoint a number of ministers and elders to conduct the business of missions, education, publication, or church erection? There is nothing in any of these departments of labour which ministers and elders may not lawfully perform, and nothing in the powers delegated which may not lawfully be imparted to them.

"A distinction was attempted between a Board and a Committee. A committee, it was stated, is a body appointed to do a certain work; whereas a Board is a body to appoint a committee to do the work and to superintend them in their work. But this is a figment. The Boards of Directors in our Theological Seminaries exercise immediately the functions committed to them. And on the other hand, executive committees (as the Board of Publication, for example) resolve themselves into subordinate committees, and appoint Secretaries, Treasurers, Agents, &c. There is no ground in principle or in fact for this distinction. It is a matter of mere expediency and detail, whether the body appointed be small or large, whether it be called a committee or a Board. The church surely is not to be held back or embarrassed in her onward course by such cobwebs as these.

"We rejoice in these discussions. They must produce not only unity of views, but harmony of feeling. The evident sincerity of all parties to this debate; the courtesy and candour, as well as the eminent ability which characterized the speeches of Dr. Thornwell, make it evident that there is no element at work in our Church which is likely to disturb its peace or impede its progress."

CHURCH EXTENSION.

As we continue to receive applications for aid in the erection of houses of worship, we deem it proper to state, that on the 20th of July last, we transmitted all the funds and papers belonging to that department to the Committee of Church Extension created by the last General Assembly and located at St. Louis, Mo. All applications, therefore, for aid in the erection of houses of worship, should be addressed to that Committee and not to the Board of Missions. We have not heard of the election by that Committee of a Corresponding Secretary, but have been officially informed that the Rev. N. L. Rice, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., has been appointed their Chairman. Any correspondence directed to him as such, would doubtless be laid before the Committee.

While noticing this matter, we may be permitted again to express our high appreciation of the important work of Church Extension, and our earnest hope that all our churches will liberally contribute the pecuniary means which are indispensable to its efficient prosecution. It is, in our judgment, particularly desirable that the Committee at St. Louis should be decidedly encouraged in the commencement of their difficult and important work. We trust our churches will give them a good start at the beginning, that the momentum thus acquired may carry them forward with great force and triumphant success.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The subjoined letter is from the missionary in Illinois, whose house was recently consumed by fire; and to whose relief, in answer to our appeal, our benevolent friends so promptly and liberally responded.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.,

Dear Brother—I received in due course of mail your favour of the 25th of July, 1855.

I can scarcely express my gratitude for such unexpected and distinguished favours. Never have I more fully witnessed the Lord's provision for those who trust him, than in the favours I have received through your mediation in my present emergencies.

Had it not been there were some organized forms of efficiency, such as the Board of Missions, to care and act in my case of misfortune, and others of a corresponding character, many labourers in the field of missions would be under the necessity of contending with great embarrassments, or abandon the field altogether. Though the favours I have received did not come from any regular action of the Board, yet from the fact that you are placed as an overseer of the whole work of missions, your personal appeal and success were in the emergency even more prompt.

I am glad to acquiesce in your hopes that my loss will be repaired on the receipt of the box of clothing. Such favours make glad the heart of the missionary, and he pursues his work with redoubled energy.

Yours in the Lord.

August 4th, 1855.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year. Provided we have their address.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

INCREASE OF CANDIDATES.

The last report of the Board of Education contains the gratifying statement of an increase of 22 candidates during the past year, and it was published in the last Home and Foreign Record, that the number received by the Board in the months of May and June, was five more than during the corresponding months of the previous year. In July, the number received was five more than in the same month last year, making an increase of ten during the first three months of our present ecclesiastical year. This is recorded with gratitude to our Divine Lord, who, in answer to the prayers of his people, is thus increasing prospectively the number of labourers in his vineyard. But though worthy of grateful remembrance, it ought to quicken our zeal to pray for a still larger increase. A letter recently received from a minister in one of our oldest and largest Presbyteries in the East, states that they have not in in their bounds a single minister unoccupied, that the urgent calls from the West have taken them all away, and that a church now vacant has actually sent to the West to invite the return of a minister who formerly preached for them a few months. Another instance of the same kind has occurred in another Presbytery. The West and Southwest are also still calling for more ministers. A letter now lying on our table from Arkansas, asks with great earnestness our kind offices to induce some of our brethren to go to that State and occupy several important positions, both as missionaries and professors in the new college established and located there, but not yet commenced, for the want of men to manage it. Let not these facts be forgotten, nor fail to exert their due influence in exciting the Church to continue instant in prayer.

INCREASE OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The last report of the Board to the General Assembly stated also that the increase of appropriations to candidates, authorized by the previous Assembly, had required an increase of disbursements from the treasury during the past year of $5000; and that with a further increase of candidates, which is anticipated, a still larger amount will be required for the current year. This is an important fact, to be remembered by all our churches. With their prayers for more ministers, will they not also increase the amount of their contributions for this object? If they do not, the treasury of the Board will soon be exhausted, and the appropriations to our candidates must be reduced. Will not our pastors call the attention of their congregations to this subject, and as speedily as practicable take up and forward their collections to our treasurer?

AID TO CANDIDATES—EXTRACT FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT.

The following extract from the last Annual Report presented to the General Assembly and adopted by that body, will show the views of the Board and of the Assembly on the subject of aiding candidates for the ministry.

"The Church's care of her candidates is further exhibited in their comfort and support in temporal things. Our Book of Discipline, by authoritatively enjoining upon all candidates an extensive course of studies, virtually imposes upon the Church the obligation of assisting those whose pecuniary resources do not allow them to comply with the requirement. From time immemorial, the Presbyterian Church has cheerfully availed herself of the privilege of aiding her faithful sons in their preparatory course. The first Academy, or Theological school, established by church authority in 1743, adopted the broad principle of giving a gratuitous education to all its students. The Presbyteries always made provision, from time to time, for the benefit of the more indigent class of candidates. In 1806, the General Assembly adopted a systematic plan of general operation, by which all the Presbyteries were required to collect funds, and to report their doings to the General Assembly. In 1819, the Board of Education was organized on a basis still better adapted to accomplish the benevolent purpose in view. The advantages of a general co-operation by all the Presbyteries, through a common fund, have become more and more apparent in the progress of years; and our candidates may now depend with reasonable certainty on receiving their appropriations with regularity. It certainly is to the credit of the church that, in no instance, has the appropriation due to a candidate, remained unpaid since the organization of the Board; and during the last eight years no resort to temporary loans has been necessary.

1. The tender care of the Church in making these provisions for her candidates, is founded upon a right principle, namely, that it is the Church's duty to aid her sons in indigent circumstances, who feel called of God to preach the gospel.

Our Assembly has always taken high ground on this delicate subject. It early renounced the system of making the appropriations in the form of loans, because this view lost sight of a great principle of equity, was in that of a mere business transaction, and embarrassed the student in the prospect of repayment. The fact is, that our young ministers are educated, not as a personal favour to them, but for the service of the Church; and the Church owes it to herself and to her God, to assist in their education. In the words of the late Dr. Alexander, "While the church is educating these youth, she is preparing ministers for her own use, and whose services are necessary to her prosperity. If the State needs skilful officers and expert engineers for her defence, she finds it expedient to institute military schools for the education of such as are willing to turn their attention to the military profession; and no question is asked about their wealth or indigence, because the good of the country is the object in having them thus educated. This is right; and no one ever thinks that any disgrace attaches to those young men who are thus educated at the public expense. And if the Church were able, it would be but justice for her to educate all, of whatever external circumstances, who were qualified to do her service. But this is not demanded; all that she is requested to do is, to support, or aid such young men as are unable to furnish the means of their own education."

Acting on this principle, our Church offers aid to her students for her own glorious purposes; and instead of entering into business relations with them in the form of loans, or on the other hand of degrading them into beggars upon the public bounty, she elevates them to the rank of her own standard-bearers, who in preparing for a great public service in the name of her King, are entitled to an honourable competence.

2. The Church is also discriminating in the amount of aid offered to her students. The sum is not so high as to become a premium to self-indulgence, nor so low as to operate to the discouragement of true self-reliance. The Church deems it best, under present circumstances, to make the appropriations sufficiently large to relieve the student from want, and to secure his temporal comfort, in connection with other aid, from his friends or from his own industry. The last General Assembly increased the appropriations* in conformity with the changed circumstances of the times, and gave to the Board of Education power to add still further to the appropriations, according to the exigency of particular cases. On the whole, our position is such that no student, however indigent, need feel precluded from the opportunity of obtaining a complete education.

* The increase amounted during the year to an aggregate of about $5000.

From the New York Evangelist.

DR. NOTT ON THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

Messrs. Editors—During the Academic year of 1850–51, quite a number of the students of Auburn Theological Seminary were graduates of Union College. Cherishing sentiments of affectionate and filial esteem toward Dr. Nott, our former venerable instructor, it was very natural for us to desire his prudent and thoughtful counsel in regard to those new duties which promised soon to devolve upon us. I forwarded a statement of our wishes to the doctor, and received the following letter in reply. In an accompanying note it was insisted that what had been written was so hurriedly put down, that it was altogether unworthy the occasion. Yet it has impressed others, as well as myself, as being a rare and excellent general summary of pastoral responsibilities, and the true method of discharging them. Accordingly its publication has been not unfrequently desired. These reasons, therefore, I plead in advance, should the doctor feel inclined to chide me for giving publicity to the good counsel so kindly granted by him.

S. MILLS DAY.

UNION COLLEGE, May 12, 1851.

My Son—In your letter to Mrs. Nott, you intimate a wish that I would give some advice to the young men once under my care, but now about to enter on professional duties, as Ministers of the Gospel. I can say nothing severally, as your several circumstances are unknown to me, and as to a general manual, you will find it in the letters of Paul to Timothy and Titus. I can only add, were I to live my life over again, I should strive to live nearer to God—to be more wholly devoted to my work.

Health is indispensable to usefulness, and should be studied in so far as habits of temperance and chastity, and well-regulated habits of cleanliness and exercise are concerned; as for the rest, so far as official duties are concerned, it is better "to wear out than to rust out."

In the early part of my ministry, I occasionally dined out with gentlemen of wealth. In the latter part of it never. I visited the rich of my congregation little—the poor more—the sick and afflicted most.

He who bases his standing in his congregation on the friendship of a few rich families, stands insecurely—he who makes a lodgment in the affections of the masses, stands securely. The poor are not only the special care of the Saviour, but they are the minister's most reliable friends.

It is better to be useful than popular. It is a bad thing for a clergyman to have too little reputation—worse to have too much. If a man acquires a great reputation as a preacher, it will be difficult to sustain it, and he will be under the constant temptation to labour to preserve his standing, rather than to save the souls committed to his charge.

The ministry is a noble profession, and rich in interest to him who loves it—to him who does not, it is a life of drudgery.

Considered as a profession, it is not lucrative, but reputable, and free from the hazards and conflicts to which other professions are exposed—for the present it is meagre in its rewards, but it has great remuneration in prospect.

Clergymen who need more, have generally less common sense than the members of other professions. They often know much of books, and little of men.

As the chief object of the clergyman is not money, the less he says about pay, the better. If you want to be well supported, give your soul to the work of your ministry, and God will provide for you and yours. Those ministers are usually best paid, who think little, and say the least on the subject.

Those who put a whole body of divinity into one sermon, always preach pretty much the same thing—while they who confine themselves to the illustration and application of a single point, will always be able to present something new.

As to the best mode of delivering sermons, I would only say that any method well executed will be tolerated—still, he who speaks extempore, speaks with the greater effect.

A settlement in the country, as a general rule, is best for a young man—generally it is the best for life.

If a young man settles in the city he must kill himself by study, or sink into obscurity. The duties of a city minister are too onerous to be borne by any man who has not the fruits of labour laid up in store.

As a general rule, a minister's visits should be religious—mere social calls are worth little. Religious calls often tell on the conscience, and when they do not, and where they do not, there will be no complaint because they are not more frequent.

Let politics alone—let religious controversy alone—let heresy alone—preach the pure gospel—continue to preach it—it will be your best defence against error.

If you speak at all of others, dwell on the points in which you agree, and not on those in which you differ.

Never dispute with Baptists about the mode of baptism—nor with Episcopalians about church government—the one has more water, and the other more form than you have, and will therefore always gain by debate. The Presbyterian arm of power is Evangelical Truth—and one revival of religion will do more for him against formalists and heretics, than years of controversial labours. In one word, do all you can by preaching Christ crucified, and by prayer, and leave the rest to Providence.

Yours truly, ELIPH'T NOTT.

WILLIAM WIRT'S DESCRIPTION OF REV. SAMUEL DAVIES.

"We have very good models both in the French and English languages—and among the latter, I know of none better adapted to the taste of this country, than those which have been left us by Mr. Davies. They are indeed, noble specimens which our divines would do well to study and to imitate. They are full of deep, and serious thinking; of close and cogent argument; of alarming exhortation, and melting persuasion. They are never so merely doctrinal and dry as to weary the reader; never so light and loose as to let go their hold, and permit the attention to wander. They display a profound and thorough knowledge of the human heart, and the appeals they make to our passions are pushed with great power. Nor has Mr. Davies relied, merely, on the weight and worth of his matter. He has sought to present it in a pleasing and alluring dress, and he has succeeded. His language is always that of a scholar—pure and correct; his style chaste, and, whenever the occasion called for it, rich, beautiful and even sublime. His eloquence is that of the true gospel stamp. There is nothing of egotism, nothing of human vanity in it. Not a word is said for show. The soul of the preacher is deeply and exclusively devoted to the cross of the dying Redeemer of a lost world; and he pours forth the anxieties of his mind with the earnestness and almost with the unaffected majesty of St. Paul. He sometimes excites our admiration, but it is obviously not sought for on his part, and on our own, it is soon silenced by the deeper and more interesting emotions with which it is always associated. For he inspires us with such awful concern for the state of our souls, that we feel it almost sinful towards Heaven and insulting to the pious and excellent preacher, to indulge, for an instant, the levity of admiration. We know that it is not what he seeks, and that he would even be distressed to learn that while he was endeavouring to fill us with hatred for sin and the love of the Redeemer, and persuading us to fly from death to life eternal, by taking refuge under the cross, our solicitude for our own souls could be, for an instant so far relaxed as to permit us to feel admiration for him. How many preachers have we who would really feel this distress?"

It is worthy of special consideration, that while Mr. Davies preached the gospel so as to call forth the warmest admiration of such a man as Mr. Wirt, he was the most acceptable and useful preacher to the blacks ever known in this, or any other country.

Patrick Henry was just twenty years old, when Pole Green church, in Hanover, was built, and resided within three or four miles of this venerable house of worship. Here, as we learned last summer, from a son of Henry, the greatest of Virginia's orators used to hear Mr. Davies with the greatest interest—and here too, under the same ministry that thus pleased Henry and his biographer, the largest number of black members was gathered into the Presbyterian church, which has ever been known in any part of our State. The deduction to be drawn from this is obvious. Yours fraternally.—Watchman.

MY TIMES ARE IN THY HAND.

"Father, I know that all my life
Is portioned out by thee,
And the changes that will surely come
I do not fear to see;
But I ask thee for a patient mind,
Intent on pleasing thee.

"I ask thee for a thankful love,
Thro' constant watching wise,
To meet the glad and cheerful smiles
And wipe the weeping eyes—
A heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.

"I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
Searching for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know—
I would be dealt with like a child,
And guided where to go.

"Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoe'er estate,
Give fellowship with other hearts,
To keep and cultivate.
A work of holy love to do
For the Lord on whom I wait.

"I ask thee for the daily strength,
To none that ask denied,
A mind to blend with outward life,
While keeping by thy side,
Content to keep a little space,
So thou be glorified.

"And if some things I do not ask
In thy cup of blessings be,
I would have my spirit filled the more
With gratitude to thee—
More careful then to serve thee much,
To please thee perfectly."

CHRISTIAN LIBERALITY.

There are certain great principles laid down in Scripture in relation to giving, and the use of property generally, respecting which there is much practical skepticism. They are as follows: First, That which we have, we hold as stewards who must give an account. Second, The way to increase is to distribute. Some are rich because liberal. Third, That which is given to the poor, is loaned to the Lord. Fourth, That which is done to Christ's little ones is done to himself.—Dr. Nevins.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

'Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

WAVELAND PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

A letter just received contains the following statement, viz.

"Our school is quite flourishing. Notwithstanding the failure of crops last year and the pressure in money matters, we have had in attendance within the past year 219 students. We have an elegant and commodious building in course of erection near the old academy, to be used in connection with it, which will afford us room for the accommodation of 200 students. We expect a large increase of students at the opening of the next session. May the Great Head of the church continue to bless our humble efforts, and make this Institution instrumental in building up his kingdom in the earth."

FORT WAYNE FEMALE ACADEMY.

We learn from one of our correspondents that during the summer session, recently closed, a very encouraging religious interest prevailed among the pupils in the Female Academy at Fort Wayne, Indiana. For some weeks the pastor of the church and other ministers were constrained to visit the academy rooms almost daily, for the purpose of conversing with inquirers. About twenty-five in all have been impressed, some apparently very much so. About one-fourth of these had attained to a hope in Christ before the close of the session.

This awakening occurred at a time when there was no special interest in the church at large. It commenced too, and was sustained in the use of only the common means of grace. It never interrupted the ordinary exercises and studies of the young ladies; and it was confined chiefly to the pupils of the academy. This is remarkable, and it is instructive. God owns and blesses Christian education.

GERMAN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS IN NEW YORK AND WILLIAMSBURG.

The former of these schools has 107 pupils, the latter 65. The reports from both are very encouraging. There is considerable fluctuation in the attendance, owing chiefly to changes in the location of families; but the losses sustained by this and other causes are more than made up by new scholars; so that on the whole there is a steady advance from quarter to quarter; and the impressions made on the minds of the children are decidedly good, both as to "general knowledge and the truths of Christianity." Says one of the reports, written by the pastor, "I feel very thankful to our Heavenly Father that he has helped us in that way, and that your Board furnishes us with help that we can go on in this very good work. Yea, I am sure now, that there comes more good for our church out of the teaching in our school, than of the sermons; namely we see the fruits more clearly."

THE BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Extract from a speech made by the Hon. C. C. Leigh, of New York city, in the Assembly of the State of New York.

"I will here give my deliberate opinion that the statesman that could recommend such a course (the exclusion of the Bible from our public schools) is no friend of our State. I look upon the Bible as the bulwark of freedom, the chief corner-stone in our social and political fabric; without its sacred teachings our Republic would run riot in licentiousness and anarchy, and from thence in hot despotism. Without the Bible the fires would go out on our altars; the light of science would burn dim, if not become entirely extinguished; the school-house would decay, our ships would rot in our harbours; for commerce can flourish nowhere where the justice and truth of the Bible is not maintained.

"The king of Israel, whose wisdom and valour raised the ten tribes to the position and to the dignity of a nation powerful and respected, says, 'Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.' Is there a wretch in human form that would break that lamp that the State has put in our common schools, and prevent its light from shining about the path of the rising generation? Sir, the Bible is a

> 'Most wondrous Book; bright candle of the Lord;
> Star of eternity; the only star
> By which the bark of man could navigate
> The seas of life; and gain the coast of bliss > Securely.'

"Did you see the old man die? 'Twas an instructive and solemn sight, when his glassy eyes gave evidence that the windows of his soul were shut. Clasping his Bible with his emaciated fingers, in feeble accents, said—'This Blessed Book has been the guide of my youth, my instructor in riper years, and my comforter until now; and even here it assures me, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I shall fear no evil; for thy rod and thy staff shall comfort me.' Then feeling for his child, he says: 'I have no worldly goods to leave thee, my son, but I bequeath what is of more value than houses or lands—thy father's Bible.' The good man leaned upon the bosom of his son, gave up the ghost, and fell asleep in Jesus. Where is the man that will rob this youth of his sire's Bible? Sir, we will not give up the Bible. Let this right hand forget its cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth when I forget to plead for the Bible."

BENEFITS OF SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

Rev. Dr. Plumer writes to the officers of the American Sunday-School Union.

"The corrupt juvenile literature of our time, is a sore evil under the sun. But few have any conception of the extent to which vicious reading is carried, at least among boys and lads in our cities and towns. To counteract it is the duty of every man who loves his race and his country. One of the best means of raising the taste and tone of the young is to train them to Sabbath-schools, and make them acquainted with the valuable books usually found in the libraries of such institutions.

"I have lived in the Southern, Middle and Western States; I have for more than a quarter of a century watched the working of the Sabbath-school on various classes of people, and I am more than ever satisfied that when rightly conducted, they are unspeakable blessings to pupils and teachers—to individuals and communities. No part of my public life meets my full approbation, in a review, more than any little effort I have made in this cause.

"After an eventful life of half a century, I find myself settled near the place of my birth, and as I look over the valley of the West, I have not a doubt that Sabbath-schools have a great work to do in all the extent of this fertile region. I beg that you and your co-adjutors will press on in your useful labours, will do all you can, as soon as you can, and as well as you can, for the rising generation of this vast territory.

"In the last thirty years, great changes have been made on the face of nature and of society, and on the habits of Western people. Pauperism, once unknown, is here in some of its worst forms, and it is likely to increase. Popery is pouring its scores of thousands of money out of the coffers of Europe, in order to control the public mind on this side of the mountains. The lives of men are generally full of great earnestness. A nation, more powerful than any now existing in Europe, might easily be formed on the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi in less than seventy-five years from this date. I beseech you not to be weary in well doing. In due season you shall reap if you faint not."

GIVE ME A FAITHFUL HEART.

I do not crave bright gems of earth,
Or gold of dazzling hue;
But ask for something of more worth—
A heart that's pure and true.

Though earth may yield her costly gems,
That look so fair to view;
I ask not for such diadems,
But for a heart that's true.

A heart that glows with noble deeds,
For this I e'er will sue;
A guileless heart from envy freed—
A heart that's pure and true.

A heart like this is real worth—
It, nothing can outshine;
'Tis all I ask for here on earth—
A heart that's pure and kind.

From the Colonial Presbyterian.

ACTION OF THE SYNOD OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF NEW BRUNSWICK.

At the late meeting of this Synod, Mr. Glass moved, and supported at great length, and Mr. Elder seconded, the adoption of the following overture on education.

The Presbytery of St. Stephen taking into account the changes about to be made in the University of Fredericktown, as well as the Parish Schools and other seminaries of learning throughout the Province, and deeply anxious in regard to the godly training of the youth generally, and in the raising of the standard of education at present so miserably low, overture the Synod of the Presbyterian Church, at its meeting in June, to devise such means as it may see meet for considering the whole subject of Education, and at the same time for establishing such a respectable seminary of learning under its own control, as may afford a sound and religious education to any of the children of parents belonging to our body, as may be anxious to obtain it.

After an interesting discussion, in which the present state of education in the province was dwelt upon, and the evils arising out of legislative sectarian grants generally, and more especially in reference to Schools in which the Holy Scriptures were not read, became matter of lengthened conversation, the overture was unanimously adopted. A committee consisting of Messrs. McMaster, Ferrie, Bennet, Glass and Elder was appointed to carry out the object of the overture—Mr. Glass Convener. The Synod further instructed this committee to prepare a petition to the legislature, to be signed by the Moderator as such, praying the withdrawal of all government grants from schools and seminaries in which the word of God is not read. It is expected that the different Presbyterian bodies, and all evangelical Protestants will co-operate in reaching this very simple but deeply important consummation. The action of the Synod proceeds upon the principle that the word of God, without note or comment, cannot be legitimately held by any denomination of Christians as a sectarian book—whatever Mohammedans, or Pagans may think about it.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, New York, August 13, 1855.

China.—Our latest letters are Canton, May 7th; Ningpo, April 28; Shanghai, April 30.

Peace prevails in the vicinity of Canton, but great suffering is endured among the lower classes from the high price and scarcity of food.

Mr. Way gives the following pleasing account of the prospects of the missionary work at Ningpo: "I rejoice to believe that the Holy Spirit is at work among us; and the evidences of his presence were never more manifest than at present, thus showing that the great Head of the Church can and will fulfil his promises of mercy independently of the many imperfections and weaknesses of his servants. Inquirers are increasing, both in earnestness and numbers; old established prejudices are giving way, so that the females among our converts, who, according to the customs of their country, are forbidden to be found in the presence of the other sex, may now be seen coming forward with freedom, and at the same time with all becoming modesty, and, shaking hands with us, greet us as brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus. We have much to encourage our hearts as well as the hearts of the people of God, everywhere."

Mr. Lowrie makes the following statement of the openings for the spread of the gospel about Shanghai, in connection with the importance of strengthening that mission. "The field opens before us, not only in the city, now repeopling continually, but in the junks, which are already collected in the harbour to the number of hundreds, making a little forest of masts; and then the country, swarming with towns and villages, as open to the itinerant as the environs of New York, presents a population of several millions, speaking this dialect with some local variations."

India.—The following are the most recent dates from the missions in India, viz., Lodiana, June 1; Ambala, May 19; Saharanpur, May 1; Futtehgurh, June 1; Agra, May 19; Allahabad, June 2.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. Rudolph had had a very severe bronchial attack, and was compelled in consequence to leave his work at Lodiana for a time, and try the cool air of the hills. Mention is made of the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Carleton, after a journey of fifteen days from Calcutta, at Ambala, where their services were much needed.

Mr. Ullman mentions the recent conversion of two Mohammedans, who, it was expected, would be baptized and received to the church at their next communion. He mentions several others who were in an interesting state of mind, and who, it was hoped, would soon be led to the Saviour.

At Agra three of the pupils, one male and two females, had given evidence of a change of heart and been received upon examination to membership with the church; and it was noticed that there was a marked improvement in the general deportment of the pupils, which it was also hoped, might lead to more important results. Mention is made of the baptism of an interesting Rajput at Allahabad; and also of the baptism of three converts by Gopeenath at Futtehpore.

Africa.—The only letters from Africa, since our last, is one from Monrovia of June 7, and another from Settra Kroo of May 21. The missionaries were generally well, and pursuing their labours as usual. Mr. James remarks in relation to the school at Monrovia, "Our school is doing as well as usual. We have our full number of scholars." He reports favourably also of the church. Fifty dollars had been raised in the congregation for the purpose of making some necessary repairs to their building. The school at Settra Kroo was continued as usual.

Siam.—Dr. House arrived in New York on the 8th inst., having left Siam the 27th of April. He brings intelligence of the entire removal of the difficulties to the missionary work at Bankok, to which allusion was made in the last Record. Dr. House has returned to this country for the two-fold purpose of recruiting his health and obtaining a reinforcement of labourers for that mission. No doubt the cloud which overshadowed this mission for a few months has been removed in answer to prayer; and now that the way is opened for enlarged operation, it is earnestly hoped many candidates may be found to reinforce that mission.

Indian Missions.—We have letters from Spencer, as late as the 18th of July; from Goodwater, July 9th; from Wapanucka, July 9th; and from the Chippewa mission, July 2d; Omaha, July 28th; and Iowa, July 16th.

Intelligence has been received of the safe arrival of Rev. Messrs. Wilson and Eells and their missionary parties at their respective stations, at Goodwater and Wapanucka, the latter on 27th of June, and the former July 3d. All were well and expressed much gratitude on reaching their stations in safety, after a long and fatiguing journey.

Letters of a later date inform us that there had been some sickness in Mr. Eells' family, but it was not thought to be serious, and probably resulted from the fatigue of their long journey overland.

The regular school term at Wapanucka closed on the 29th of June; in relation to which Mr. Ballentine remarks, "We closed our session on the 29th ult., under circumstances quite as favourable as could have been looked for. Ninety-five Chickasaw girls were in actual attendance. One had been taken home the week previous by my advice—and five some weeks earlier, four with sore eyes, and one had been stolen away by her friends, making the whole number one hundred and one who have been here during the year. The teachers held out remarkably well considering their labours; but they need rest." One of the teachers makes the following remarks upon the examination, "All the week previous to the examination, it was almost impossible to fix the attention of the children upon their books, so transported were they with the anticipation of coming freedom. Friday morning they awoke to a little sense of duty, and passed through an examination, which I think gave general satisfaction. Including the children, at least three hundred persons were present. I stood long upon our piazza gazing with interest and emotion. The little ones were all going; happy, I knew, for they were free and going home. But their homes—no wholesome restraints—no religious instructions—no Sabbaths and no family altars, nothing to keep their young feet from sliding!"

The session closed at Spencer, on the 12th of July. Mr. Burt speaking of the religious feeling which has existed during the term, remarks, "I have never seen so much feeling displayed on the departure of th children as at the present examination. Some could not utter the word good-bye—it seemed too large fo their throats. Tears flowed freely from many eyes. This was the case with some who had not been made the subjects of grace."

We are sorry to learn that the Omahas have been very much annoyed by their warlike neighbours, the Sioux, in attempting to form their new settlement on their reservation near Black-bird creek. Five of their number were killed. It is hoped, however, that the government will take effective measures at an early period to have them settled peaceably on their new reservation.

We are happy to learn that there is an interesting state of religious feeling among the Chippewas at Grand Traverse, but have not the full particulars of the extent of this interest.

Sailing of Missionaries.—On the 17th of July, the Rev. Messrs. W. Calderwood, D. Heron, and A. O. Johnson, with Mrs. Calderwood, Mrs. Johnston and Miss Browning, sailed from Boston; and on the 1st of August, the Rev. J. Loewenthal sailed from New York—all to join the Missions in India. Messrs. Heron and Calderwood are ministers of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, but will sustain the same relations to the Board with the missionaries of that Church now in India. Their stations, and that of Mr. Loewenthal, will be in connection with the Lodiana Mission. Mr. Johnson will join the Furrukhabad Mission, and Miss Browning will assist Mrs. Fullerton and Mrs. Scott as a teacher in the girl's school at Agra. We ask for them a remembrance in the prayers of our readers.

VISIT OF WALTER LOWRIE, ESQ., ONE OF THE SECRETARIES OF THE BOARD, TO THE INDIAN MISSIONS IN KANSAS, NEBRASKA, AND ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

On Wednesday, May 9th, left New York to attend the General Assembly at Nashville, and afterwards to visit the Indian Missions in Kansas, Nebraska, and on Lake Michigan. In this journey I was accompanied by my wife. We took the cars on the New York and Erie railroad at 6 A. M., and travelling all night, arrived at Cincinnati at 5 P. M. on the 10th.

Next day, by appointment, met with the Rev. Edward Eells and his wife, from Kentucky, who had just been appointed to take charge of the Female High School at Goodwater, among the Choctaws, and Miss H. N. Mitchell and Miss J. H. Hollingsworth from Dayton, Ohio, appointed teachers in the same school. We spent some very pleasant hours, in conversing about their labours in this important institution. We arranged the time of their setting out, so that, if practicable, they would meet at New Orleans the Rev. Charlton Henry Wilson and his family, from South Carolina, going out to take charge of the Wapanucka Female Institute, among the Chickasaws. Before setting out on his journey, Mr. Eels was joined at Cincinnati by Miss L. H. Barber, from Amenia, New York, and Miss E. Mathews, from Meadville, Pennsylvania. On the same day I met also by appointment the Rev. Joseph H. Marshall, from Cincinnati, whose application was before the Board for missionary labour. These interviews were deeply interesting to us all, though our feelings were much saddened by the necessity of parting so soon.

Having spent the Sabbath in Louisville, on Monday, in company with a large number of delegates to the General Agsembly, we took the St. Louis packet, to the mouth of Cumberland river, where we arrived on Tuesday at noon. Here we were joined by other delegates to the General Assembly, and owing to the low water in Cumberland river, the prospect of getting to Nashville was far from being certain. About sundown, however, a small packet steamer, of light draft of water, came along, and agreed to take our whole company, consisting of 160 delegates and other passengers. This little boat had only accommodations for some 40 or 50, and although the captain and officers did all in their power, the crowded state of the boat would have been most unpleasant, had it not been for the good humour and cheerfulness of all on board.

On Thursday, at sunrise, we reached Nashville. The Assembly remained in session till Tuesday the 29th at noon. About an equal number of passengers had now to return down the Cumberland river, which, in the meantime, had been falling. Two small steamers, however, were going down, and the passengers were divided between them. After some delays, and the use of lighters on the rapids, we reached the mouth of the river the second day, at dark. A steamer for St. Louis arriving at the same time, a part of the company, with ourselves, took passage on her for St. Louis, where we arrived on Friday the 1st of July.

Mr. James S. Allan, late of the Chickasaw mission, met me here by appointment, to visit the Indian missions, with the view to his employment, as will be mentioned hereafter.

On Monday we took passage on board the steampacket Sultan for St. Joseph's, 600 miles above St. Louis. The delays, caused by landing 300 tons of freight at the different towns on the river, prevented us reaching St. Joseph's till late on Saturday. On Monday we hired a carriage to the Iowa mission, 25 miles distant. The mission families, and more than fifty scholars, were much rejoiced to see us, and after tossing about for more than a month, living all the time, when not travelling, in hotels, we felt in a good measure at home.

My wish was, first of all, to visit the Kickapoo Indians, some twenty miles distant, with a view of establishing a mission and school among them. Mr. Baldwin, the Government agent for this tribe, had just arrived, and was at the Iowa and Sac agency, near the mission. On calling on him, I found him slowly recovering from a severe attack of fever, but so weak that it was impossible for him to visit the Kickapoos till he regained more strength. Col. Vanderslice, the agent of the Iowas and Sacs, in whose agency the Kickapoos formerly were, had made arrangements to go with Mr. Baldwin in his first visit to the tribe. As it was very important I should go in company with these gentlemen, I concluded, in the meantime, to visit the Omaha Indians, and then return to the Iowa mission.

After remaining two days examining the schools, and arranging various items of business, on Thursday, the 14th of June, Mr. Allan, Mrs. Lowrie, and myself, set off for Bellevue, in a covered and curtained spring wagon, with two good horses. We crossed the river five miles from the mission, and passed up on the north side, through Missouri and Iowa. We found the roads good, and the stopping and lodging places quite passable, and on Saturday, at 2 P. M., we reached Bellevue, 120 miles distant. Here also we found the mission families in good health, and much rejoiced to see us.

When the late treaty was made with the Omahas, it was stipulated that they should remove from their old village near Bellevue, some seventy-five miles or more, higher up the Missouri river, where a reservation of 300,000 acres should be laid off for them. Until new buildings could be erected on their reservation, the arrangement was to continue the school at Bellevue. But when they were ready to remove, they manifested much unwillingness to leaving their children behind; they strongly expressed their fears, that if the school were continued at Bellevue, the mission would not be removed to their reservation. Finally, after much hesitation, they decided to take the most of their children with them. It was with much regret I found that this decision had been made, and that they had removed two weeks before I reached Bellevue. It is not certain that the result would have been different, if I had been present. They have a great regard for Mr. Hamilton, and the impression is, that if I had been there to join him, they would have agreed to leave most of their children in the school; as it was, nothing remained but to visit them on their reservation, select the site for the mission, and make preparation for the buildings.

On Tuesday, Mr. Hamilton and myself, in a light two-horse covered wagon, and Mr. Allan on horseback, started from Bellevue. We took with us a supply of provisions, buffalo skins, &c. for living and lodging on the prairies. Going up, we travelled most of the way on the river bottom, though occasionally we were on the hills. The first day we reached De Soto, 35 miles from Bellevue, a new town laid out, and eligibly situated on the river. A severe storm of rain and wind, with heavy thunder, came up about sun-down, and we were glad to get an open shed, adjoining one of the cabins, where we passed the night. Next day we started early, and soon came to a large prairie bottom on the river, some thirty miles in length, and from ten to fifteen in breadth. Here we, as well as the horses, suffered much for want of water, as the day was hot and sultry; at 3 P. M. we came to a large spring, flowing from a large rock, at the foot of a high bluff. How precious to him that is faint and thirsty is pure running water! At 6 P. M. a heavy rain came on, which continued till midnight. We travelled on till dark, and then sheltered ourselves in the wagon, as well as we could. It was poor lodging, as we had to sit, for want of room to lie down.

On the 21st. we started early, but the difficulty of crossing Black-bird creek, and some other streams, owing to the height and steepness of the banks, was so great, that in three hours we had made but five miles. We were now on the reservation, but could hear nothing of the Indians. At 9 A. M. we fell in with the blacksmith of the tribe, who informed us that they had started on their summer hunt, the day before. That if we followed them, we could overtake them before night, as they seldom travelled more than ten or twelve miles a day, encumbered as they were with all their women and children. We found by their trail they had taken a Southwest direction. We came up with them at 3 o'clock, P. M., about twenty miles from the river, encamped on Middle Creek, a branch of the Elk Horn River, a tributary of the Platte. Middle Creek flows through the most beautiful prairie valley we had ever seen. The valley is about fifteen miles wide from North to South, and extending East and West till lost in the distant horizon. We first saw the encampment when five or six miles distant, the tents, more than one hundred in number, some of white canvass, and some of dressed buffalo skins, were placed in a large circle, and presented a picture full of interest. We found it to be impracticable to cross the creek with the wagon. The banks were twenty feet above the water, and so steep that a horse had to slide or roll down. Not till they were in the water could they be mounted, and then with great difficulty, and often at the expense of getting wet, which was more or less the case with us all. On reaching the camp, notice was sent to the chiefs to meet in council, and in an hour, thirty of them collected in one of the lodges.

I stated to them that I had come all the way from New York to see them. I wished to counsel with them as to the best site for the mission on their reservation, and to persuade them, if I could, to send their children to Bellevue, till the new buildings were finished. At some length I gave them various reasons in favour of these two important measures.

After a good deal of earnest consultation among themselves, White Buffalo said, that they were glad to see me, but I found them in much trouble. It was but a few days since they had reached their reservation, and in that time one of their men had been killed by the Sioux, and that a war party was constantly round them, trying to murder others, carry off their children, and steal their horses. That they had to keep a guard by day and at night; that their children were confined to the circle of the tents by day, and within the tents by night; that in truth they were themselves like children, afraid of the shaking of a leaf; that in this state of danger they could not tell on what part of the reservation they would settle, or where it would be best to place the school; that as soon as they got the protection promised in their treaty, they would settle a place for the school, and give us their children.

I said to them that they had spoken to one subject, but had not noticed the other. That the children would be safe at Bellevue, and we would take good care of them. Why could they not send them there till things were all settled?

After again talking among themselves, he said, that they wished to have the children and the school near them; that they were now on their summer hunt, and could not take their children back—that they wished to have their children near them, and then they could see them sometimes—that now they were so much perplexed they could not decide on anything further—that they looked to their great Father, the President, for the protection promised in their treaty, and on their part they were quite satisfied with their reservation, if they got this protection, and he wished me to make their condition fully known to the President.

I told them the President would do them full justice; that he was very desirous for their prosperity. This I knew, for I had seen him, and talked to him about them, shortly before I left home. That neither the President, nor any of their friends had thought they would be disturbed on Blackbird Creek. That this danger would soon be over, and then it would rest with themselves whether they would be prosperous or not; that they must give up their Indian customs; that their children must be educated and taught to work; that the white man would soon be all around them, and their hunting was nearly gone, and they must learn to support themselves by labour, or they must perish.

Mr. Hamilton then made some appropriate remarks. In their exposed condition, he directed them to Him that could save them, both in this life and the life to come. He stated also, that I had come a long way to do them good, and had laboured many years for the benefit of their race, and the counsels I had given them were wise and good. They expressed much satisfaction at our visit, and especially that we had followed them that day on their hunt.

We were three hours in council, and parted from them by taking each one by the hand. We all felt very deeply for them, but their condition is not by any means hopeless. A large portion of them have great confidence in Mr. Hamilton, and in the benefits which the school and mission will confer upon them. A number of them are prepared, as soon as the mission is located, to settle on their farms at a convenient distance, and cultivate the soil.

We walked through part of the encampment, and counted seventy children of suitable ages for school, who were playing within the circle of their tents. If the proper instruction is withheld from them, this once numerous tribe, who have never lifted their hands against the white man, will soon be heard of no more. The wise and judicious plans of the government for their benefit must fail, unless the Christian Church exercise on their behalf the heavenly agency committed to her.*

It was now 7 P. M., and we hasted to cross this difficult creek. We had about one hundred miles to go, and turning our faces homeward, we travelled till 10 P. M., when we camped on the prairie. Keeping the high lands, on Friday and Saturday, we passed over the most extensive and beautiful prairies we had ever seen. We were beyond the pre-emption settlers, and it was not till 10 A. M. on Saturday, we came to the first cabin, and found we had still thirty-two miles to go. We reached Bellevue, at sundown, thankful for our preservation, but much wearied and tired of our prairie fare, and prairie lodgings.

Although there will be but few scholars until the mission is removed to the reservation, it was deemed best to continue the school, and during the year, collect into it such orphan and other children of the tribe, as may have no other home. Contracts, and preparations for the new buildings will require much attention.

Miss Fullerton preferred to be employed in the Iowa mission, for the present, where she was most cordially welcomed, and where she is well qualified to be useful. Mr. Delette, after two years' faithful services, was released, for the present, from his connection with the mission. This change met his own approbation, as he had made other arrangements for the employment of his time. Miss Boegel had arrived but a short time previous, and in the altered state of the school, her services were not needed. It was mutually agreed, that she be released from the mission for the present, leaving her future connection with it to the leadings of divine Providence. Various proposals of much usefulness were made to her, and our best wishes and cordial regards will go with her.

Mr. Allan having fully examined the condition and prospects of Bellevue, and the rich and growing country around it, accepted the agency offered to him, for taking charge of the sale of the town lots, and other interests of this valuable property. Various arrangements were made to facilitate the advancement of the towns under his direction. The principal of these were, the securing a tract of wood-land, on the river, three miles above Bellevue, and the immediate erection of a steam saw-mill, and grist-mill. This will at once afford a supply of lumber for buildings, and to the numerous and rich farms, opening in the vicinity, the facility of a grist-mill, without crossing the river.

We spent two Sabbaths at Bellevue. Mr. Hamilton preaches regularly every Sabbath, in the forenoon, and has a prayer-meeting in the evening. The attendance is good, many of the settlers coming several miles, over the prairies. At the request of many, on the first Sabbath, I gave them an account of our missionary operations in the different parts of the world.

These arrangements being finished, on Thursday, the 28th, we bade adieu to our dear friends at Bellevue, and set out for the Iowa mission. For the first half of the journey, the weather was fair, but very warm. In the other half, there were a number of heavy thunder gusts, from which our little carriage afforded but an insufficient protection. We reached the mission on Saturday evening.

* The difficulties of the poor Omahas increased as they advanced on their hunt. Six more of the tribe were afterwards killed by the Sioux, among whom was Logan Fontenelle, the principal chief. The time and place, and the circumstances of the contest, have not been received.

BOARDING-SCHOOLS AN IMPORANT AUXILIARY IN THE MISSIONARY WORK.

The Annual Report of the Board of Foreign Missions contains some remarks upon the extent to which education is carried on in our Indian missions, and assigns reasons why special attention is given to this department of labour. The following communication from Rev. A. W. Loomis, while a member of one of these missions, on the importance of boarding-schools among the Indian tribes, contains some weighty remarks, which can scarcely fail to interest those who have given particular attention to the subject. It furnishes some important information, too, in relation to the duties of those who are called to manage these schools, which will be specially interesting to those who are looking forward to engagement in this work.

The aim of the Church is to bring the heathen to renounce false systems of religious belief, and embrace Christianity, and not only to do this outwardly, but to receive the doctrines of our religion in heart, and rely upon Christ as their Saviour; and the means she is to use in order to effect this, is inculcating the truth by which the Holy Spirit alarms the conscience, and renews and sanctifies the heart. It will be seen, then, at a glance, what instrumentalities promise the surest and most speedy accomplishment of the desired end. The heathen, old and young, must have instruction, or they cannot be saved. Could we collect the people around us, keep them near us, so that we could be teaching them daily and systematically, keeping truth before their minds, and affording them at the same time the benefit of a godly example, by which what we teach would be illustrated, we might hope that incalculably more good would be done than where they could hear only occasionally.

But we cannot expect that many adults will come to live with or near the missionary, and attend closely to his instructions; they generally have employments, also their habits are fixed, and constant application to learning would be a burden and a restraint too tedious for them. But children may be obtained, gathered into schools, and kept with the missionary for a term of years; at a season too, when their minds, being elastic, they may receive knowledge faster than those who are much advanced in age; and moreover, their minds when young will be less occupied with the wicked and vain superstitions of their nation. It should, however, be stated that there are converts to Christianity from the number of the adults, but they are for the most part such as have long enjoyed the benefits of religious instruction; while the principal hope for mission churches, for sustaining and hereafter carrying on the work in heathen lands, is in the schools, and the history of missions shows this to be the case, for the greater, by far the greater portion of the members of the mission churches at those places where there are schools, are such as have been educated in these schools.

The missionaries to heathen lands are engaged in a work which is not to terminate with the passing away of the generation on which they operate. They are laying the foundations for a work which shall be carried on for many generations; they therefore wish to prepare those to whom, as faithful men, the enterprise may be committed. But how could they do this, if their labours were expended only or principally upon the adults? They must unquestionably, gather the youth about them, train them, instruct them, so that there may be some who in all things will be fitted to bear the ark and minister about the temple after their present teachers have been called away. It may require that more than one generation of pupils be instructed before such a result will be secured, yet this should be the aim of the missionary, and if he is faithful his hopes shall not be altogether disappointed.

For accomplishing such an object it is evident that the youth of both sexes must be instructed. The young men who are converted from heathenism should have as wives those who will be helps in the Christian warfare; and there must be females—if the nation is to be Christianized and civilized—there must be females trained to act the important part of Christian mothers, who shall rear aright succeeding generations; this is indispensable.

To bring about such a result, it is plainly to be seen that boarding-schools must be employed; for in boarding-schools the children are under the constant care and instruction of their teachers, and receiving salutary impressions from the religious atmosphere which pervades the place. Day-schools cannot have these advantages, or have them in a very limited degree; the children attending day schools remain under the supervision of heathen parents, and except during the hours of school, are in an atmosphere hostile to truth and good morals; and moreover, they may attend school or stay away, as they please, or as over-indulgent parents will allow them to do.

Boarding-schools amongst the American Indians are designed to accomplish a variety of useful purposes, the foremost of which, of course, always is to bring the children to a knowledge of the way of life, but at the same time so to educate them as to wean them from the habits of savage life, imbue them with a love for the employments and enjoyments of civilized life, and to educate them in the arts which are needful to such a mode of living. With the Indian, manual labour has been considered a drudgery, less honourable than war or the chase; and the habits of the Indian are all averse to labour, and to such modes of living as are needful in civilized society. They are generally predisposed to roving, or to indolence, when not wandering; they are for the most part wanting, entirely wanting in economy; they have not the qualifications required in the management of a farm, nor tact for conducting business, nor the patience and experience required in the mechanical arts. The boarding-schools are designed to correct all these evils, and to supply all these deficiencies.

Boarding-schools amongst the Indians should be manual-labour schools, and should be supplied, well supplied, and constantly supplied, with teachers and assistants in every department of study and industrial employment, so as to give the youth what is usually termed a common school education, train them to habits of industry and economy, give them the theoretical and the practical instruction necessary to fit the young men at least, to be farmers, and good farmers, to instruct them in gardening and stock rearing, and, as far as possible, every young man should acquire some skill in the use of tools. The girls should be taught in needle-work, in spinning, and perhaps in weaving, and in everything relating to the culinary art, as well as that of the laundress; they should in fine be instructed and well practiced in everything belonging to the duties of a thrifty, neat, and economical housewife. Such instruction should be a part of every day's tuition, the pupils being at different hours, under separate tutors, so that their advancement in all matters relating to domestic economy may not interfere with daily improvement in secular and religious knowledge.

This system of instruction requires a large missionary force at each school; and every missionary and assistant missionary should be a person capable of appreciating the important and responsible position which he or she is called to occupy—a person of tested piety, and that of a high tone, a person of talent and tact to perceive and embrace every opportunity for letting fall words of counsel, warning and encouragement on moral and religious subjects.

The school—the whole establishment, schoolroom, dining-room, kitchen, dormitories, parlour; the grounds about the house, fences, garden, and everything connected with the farm should be kept in such repair, order, and neatness, that the remembrance, the impression of these things will never be effaced from the minds of the pupils; also, the establishment should be so ordered, as to be in all respects a light to the nation in which it is, a model which may be safely imitated. But especially ought the missionary in their persons and deportment to be examples, such as we would wish to be imitated by all the pupils and by all the nation. A careless, untidy, thriftless, procrastinating, or changeable school or family, or teacher, will turn out progeny like the parents; while the same is true, respecting teachers of an opposite character—like will beget like; and any observant person will remark this in travelling amongst the partially civilized nations; he will find neatness and order reigning in those families whose head, or heads, were educated in the well regulated schools; and, in a degree, want of these in the houses of those who were pupils of the schools, where less attention was devoted to inculcating the duty of cleanliness, order, and economy.

As it is important that all these matters in domestic economy should be taught, in order to reclaim the Indian from vagrant and indolent habits to a settled and industrious mode of living, it is necessary that youth of both sexes be trained up to act as pioneers, examples and teachers in this reformation; and as such things cannot be taught in day-schools, there is no further need of argument to show the preference which boarding-schools should have over day-schools; and amongst the Indians, until the parents become in a good degree civilized, and are made to know the value of learning, simple book-learning, they will not be at much trouble to send their children to day-schools, or if they pretend to send them, it will not be with sufficient regularity to reap much benefit from the instruction which such schools are capable of furnishing.

If then, the Church hopes permanently to benefit the Indian tribes, she must sustain boarding-schools, in which all, or as many as possible of the things which we have mentioned, shall be taught; and we are prepared to show that the labours expended on the schools, hitherto, have not been lost; to show also, that it is an employment in which such as wish to work for the Lord, may engage, and may labour with comfort, and with the accompanying satisfaction of seeing the work of the Lord prospering in their hands.

As we travel through the country of the partially civilized Indians, who do we find are the proprietors of the best farms, who raise the finest herds of stock, who introduce mills, who have the most improvements about their houses? Are they not, in most cases, those who have been educated in mission boarding-schools, either before, or since their removal to their present reservation? When we come to a house, around which an air of neatness, comfort, and good taste is perceptible, and within which, the same tokens are found in the cleanliness, implements of domestic industry, books, tidily dressed and orderly children, who shall we find are the mistresses of these households? Former pupils of mission-schools. Who are the friends of education, of temperance; who interest themselves to promote the general improvement of their nation; who encourage the missionaries in their efforts for the good of the people? Those, generally, who have themselves enjoyed and learned how to appreciate the benefits of such things. Who are the members of our mission churches? The greater part are those who received their religious instruction in the mission-schools and in mission families, as pupils, or while employed about the establishment, and consequently enjoying the advantages of being much within a Christian influence and of gaining religious knowledge. To whom do the missionaries look forward as those who shall by and by take up and carry on the work of evangelizing their own and other tribes; who are to be the teachers and scripture readers in secluded districts of the nation, and wherever they go, to be the burning and shining lights, holding forth the word of life? Who, if not the pupils in the schools? Who are the two young men in one of our Indian Presbyteries, now candidates for the ministry? They are those, who, but for the mission-schools, would still, in all probability, remain untaught and wild. Some are already engaged as teachers, who, but for the mission boarding-schools, would still appear at their desolate Indian homes, with uncombed hair, untidy dress, wives of drunken husbands, and perhaps mothers of dirty and ignorant children. How many have died in peace, and are now, as we trust, sleeping in Jesus, who, but for missionary efforts and mission-schools, would have lived in ignorance of the Saviour of sinners, and have gone down into the grave without light and peace? And how many are the households, into which children and youth taught in these schools have carried knowledge, and as candles, not hid under a bushel, are giving light unto all who are in the house!

It needs no argument to show that labours which have such results as these cannot be disagreeable, but are rather an employment which brings its own reward. A person who could not become attached to Indian youth, who could not find pleasure in helping forward the work which is designed, and which only, as we think, can elevate the Indian race in their temporal condition and prospects, and which, more than any other means, is likely to benefit them, and through them, other tribes, spiritually and eternally; a person, I say, who could not become interested in such a work, would not be likely to be in all respects pleased with missionary labours in any part of the world.

Boarding-schools amongst the Indians afford a place where lay-labourers may be useful. There is much to be done which brethren and sisters of the laity can do, and do as well or better than the clerical members of the mission could do; and such assistants are always needed. Here is a field into which those may go who have not had to spend long years in study to prepare them for the work; into these fields they may go, and without a moment's delay begin to work; the ground is waiting, the tools are ready and they have but to go on ploughing and sowing, and they may have the pleasure also, if they sow in tears, of gathering the ripened grain. And how many there are in the church, men and women, young men with their wives, and young women who desire just such a sphere as this in which they may be doing something for their Master! They hear the earnest and oft-repeated call for more labourers in the missionary work, and they say, O, if I were qualified, if I were such as the Lord would send, how gladly would I step forth, saying, here, Lord, am I, send me. Well, in the Indian missions are needed many assistants, both male and female. The qualifications requisite are, sound judgment, tempers kept in subjection, ardent piety—the governing desire being to win souls to Christ, with a desire to live peaceably with all men, especially with the missionary band among whom his lot may be cast; a desire and determination, relying on divine grace, to bear and forbear, with that charity which hopeth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things, and which never faileth. But the candidate for missionary work, for missionary work in any part of the world, should know that in passing across to missionary ground he is not going where, in the moral elements, he will have spring all the year, and sunshine every day; he may expect lowering weather, and chilling winds. He will probably carry his own peculiar disposition with him, and may expect to find his associates possessed of dispositions, habits of thought, and tempers in some respects peculiar to themselves, and he must remember that none of us are perfectly sanctified; but he should know also that difficulties which sometimes occur amongst the best people would not have occurred had the parties duly meditated and prayed over the matters about which they differed.

Some of the trials in the missionary work, in any field, and often the trials which are the hardest to bear, are not those which are mentioned in books and periodicals, or declaimed about upon the platform on anniversary occasions; but especially in the Indian missions are these trials of this class; such as a rough country to live in, and a rough way of getting to it—many of the comforts of civilized life difficult to be obtained—work which must be done though health is inadequate and the missionary force less than it ought to be—wild Indian youths to deal with, the freaks of their various dispositions to endure, and endeavour to correct—the sick to nurse, which brings days of working and nights of watching, and which, if long continued, in a climate different from one's native climate, and less friendly to health, breaks down the constitution, carries to a premature grave, or leaves the person an invalid for life. We have not undertaken to give a catalogue of the missionary's trials, we have only pointed to a few of them, and this not with complaining. We expected trials when we enlisted; if we were to go into action we could not expect altogether to escape wounds; but we knew that we were enlisting in the service of One who grants liberal pensions to all soldiers that have served him faithfully.

Before closing, we wish to caution the reader again against supposing that we consider boarding-schools as the only means of benefiting the heathen, or that the direct preaching of the word should be neglected, or delayed until the people have been prepared by schools. On the contrary, we have evidence that the faithful, plain, and persevering efforts in preaching publicly, and from house to house, will be blessed in gathering in some; and we would, if this were the place for it, tell how much delight and encouragement we have found in such labour. And we hope we may not seem, in anything we have said, as limiting the Holy One, or appear as intimating that any prescribed, or long continued and tedious process of instruction must be passed through before the Spirit can convert any person, we rather are anxious to tell, to the praise of God's wondrous grace, that there are instances, some of which we have witnessed, of persons who give evidence that they have tasted the joys of salvation, but who have very little knowledge; illustrating the declaration, out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise—and that things hid from the wise and prudent are revealed unto babes. The result, however, of some years' experience, as well as the evidence afforded in the history of the missions, shows that as a general thing, schools well conducted and Christian schools, are the nurseries of the Church; while conversions here and there amongst those who have had but very limited means of obtaining knowledge, both encourage us, and impress us with the duty of caring for all, watching for souls, not passing by any, though we may be able only to drop one word, one particle of good seed into their ears; for that one word may be carried down into the heart, and lodged there as in a good soil. Therefore we would add the opinion, that at every mission station there should be clerical labourers sufficient to supply the whole surrounding country with preaching, and to carry the gospel to every settlement, and to visit from house to house; and in this kind of labour there will be found much enjoyment, and doubtless great cause of rejoicing when we all get home, and our Lord makes up his jewels.

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. JULUS F. ULLMAN.

Mode of collecting an audience—Character of the hearers.

A little more than a month ago I returned from a long missionary tour down the country, to Benares. My wife and child were with me, and, as usual, our Catechist, Hanukh accompanied us also. I do not keep a journal, and shall therefore mention only a few particulars, which I still remember, and consider worth reporting. Such missionary tours do not present many new and interesting objects and circumstances; the history of one day is the history of almost every day; and if therefore something striking occurs, you cannot so easily forget it.

In all the larger places, Cawnpore, Futtehpore, Allahabad, Benares, and Jounpore, we spent a few days with the missionaries at those places; and there, as well as in the different villages, wherever we stopped, Hanukh and myself preached the gospel, and distributed tracts. In the villages, of which we visited a large number, we generally had but small congregations. This is of course different in larger ones. We usually walked first through the whole village, to show the people that we were there, and having invited one and another, to come and hear the word of God, we sat down in the most prominent or frequented places; and the natives, having seated themselves round about us, listened to what we had to say. Sometimes we had from twenty to fifty, or even more attendants; at other times far less, perhaps only two or three. They generally listened quietly and with apparent interest, which however is very often but the effect of their surprise at seeing a white-face in their village, and a curiosity to look at us. Occasionally we meet with a rustic philosopher, who, in his own original way, is able to prove anything and everything which his ignorance or wickedness leads him to believe; or with a bigotted Brahmin, who, in his proud consciousness that because no native ever opposed him or doubted what he said, considers it an easy thing to silence a missionary, and to prove to him the truth of his system; and who, after finding himself so soon silenced, and others laughing at him, gets angry, and—if he be wise—says nothing more, but waits for the moment that the missionary leaves them, in order to destroy the effect that might have been produced by him upon others. Sometimes also we met with a proud and hot-headed Mohammedan, who, seeing himself fairly conquered by a Christian and that in the presence of grinning idolaters, whom he has always learned to despise, shows by his angry looks and words that he knows well what he could or would do, if there were no English Government in the land, to punish criminals. The generality of hearers agree to everything a missionary says, because they either do not comprehend his message, or want to please him, and would consider it very rude to show that they disbelieved. But now and then we met also with one or another who could comprehend the gospel plan of salvation, and by his questions and answers showed that he took a real interest in what we said. I know that missionaries have frequently spoken or written of the interest with which they are listened to by the simple-hearted villagers; and if a quiet attendance, and a verbal acquiescence, always indicated a real interest in the subject, with the natives here, I should say the same; but experience has taught me something different. I believe too, that we may expect more fruit of our labour amongst these simple-minded villagers, than amongst the vitiated people living in cities; and yet, what is called attention, is frequently nothing but dullness and stupidity; for if these very persons are afterwards questioned about what has been said, they show that they remember very little, often nothing at all. I know a missionary—a zealous one—who was led by his zeal, shortly after his arrival in India, before he could pronounce Hindustanee correctly, to preach to natives. Once he had an apparently very attentive congregation. They all appeared so eager to hear, as to catch every word from his lips, and he, animated thereby, and rejoicing beforehand at the good impression he had produced, continued his discourse to an unusual length; when at last, to his utter dismay, one of the hearers, in real simplicity of heart, stepped forward and said, "Sir, we do not understand English." The apparent attention was but an eagerness to understand a little at least of what the missionary said, and as this man could not succeed in this, he naturally concluded that the missionary preached in his own, English, language. I may by-the-by add, that the very same missionary speaks now the language well, is a very zealous and active man, and thinks differently now of impressions produced by preaching upon dull and ignorant villagers.

Want of courage to profess Christianity.

In the village Nanamow I met with a young respectable native, who, to my surprise, was well acquainted with the Scriptures, and rejoiced at having an interview with me, in order to speak about Christianity. He told me, that the Rev. Dr. Wilson of Bombay had instructed him in the truths of the gospel; that he had a Bible in his house; that he was convinced of the absurdity of Hinduism and the truth of the Christian religion, and that fear of man kept him from professing Christ openly. His conversation evidently showed, that he knew the way of salvation, and perhaps also, that he believed in Christ, but was ashamed of coming forward with a public confession. I reminded him of the danger in which he was, and that, unless he confessed Christ, he would be lost, notwithstanding all his convictions. He acknowledged all to be true, but Oh, the fear of men! He would be a Christian, but secretly, he would believe in Christ, but tell no one anything about it, to save himself from reproaches and persecution. After a long conversation I gave him two books and dismissed him. I trust the time will come, when, also, this Nicodemus will come forward without fear, as a Christian.

True piety not always consequent upon religious instruction.

In the bazaar of the village Kutohun, whilst preaching to the people, a fakeer sat down, and soon showed by a few questions which he put, that he knew something of the gospel. Upon my examining him a little more, I found, to my great surprise, that he was not only acquainted with the whole gospel plan of salvation, but knew the Creed and portions from Scripture by heart also. He told me, that he had heard and learned this from the Episcopal missionaries in Benares; that, by frequently attending divine service in their church, he had learned portions of the word of God, and of their Prayer Book by heart; and that he had left these missionaries some time ago. As he was a particularly intelligent man, I inquired a little more into his circumstances, and asked him, why, after having obtained a knowledge of the truth, and seeing the necessity of believing in Christ for salvation, he had not become a Christian; to which he replied, that Christianity was a holy religion, which required such true and perfect morality, so much self-denial and true piety, that he was sure he could not perform it; and instead of becoming a half-hearted, insincere Christian, or hypocrite, he would rather remain what he was. After I had spoken with him for some time, Hanukh took him aside from the crowd, and had a long and confidential conversation with him, upon which he promised to go with us and become a Christian. Instead of taking him with me, however, I thought it better to send him to our native brother Gopeenauth Nundy to Futtehpore, as it was not far from the place where we were, in order that he might keep him there, and see what kind of man he was; and at our return to that place we could see what was to be done with him. Our brother G. received him, but was soon obliged to send him away again, as he was not sincere. He held the truth in unrighteousness, and therefore could not believe.

Need of the Holy Spirit.

I could mention a few more similar cases, which all show the same thing, that the knowledge of the gospel is spreading indeed, but that the life-giving, regenerating influence of the Holy Spirit is withheld from above. And whilst we, therefore, although in great weakness, sow the good seed, and, resting upon the promises of the Lord, which must be fulfilled, pray, that the preaching of the word may be blessed, and that the rich effusion of his Holy Spirit may be poured out, we would beseech our brethren at home to help us in offering up fervent prayer to the Lord whom we serve, that his word may be made instrumental to the conviction and conversion of multitudes in this awfully benighted land.

Sojourn at Allahabad—Labours there—Description of the Mela ground.

In Allahabad, when on our way back to Furrukabad, we spent a fortnight, and enjoyed much the kindness of our brethren there. During that time I and my Catechist assisted the brethren in preaching at the large annual fair. I have no doubt that they have given you a description of the Mela; but as one may mention things which another has omitted, I shall also tell you something respecting it.

This fair, as is known to you, is held at the very sacred spot where the Jumna flows into the Ganga. Hindu mythology says, that a third river, the Suraswuttee, which is subterranean, or at any rate invisible, joins the former two at their junction; hence the name Tribeni, (conflux of three rivers,) by which this place of pilgrimage is generally called by the natives. There is a piece of native poetry, in which they say, that as soon as any one—I believe even a European or American—puts his foot into Prayag, (Allahabad,) all his sins are removed. However this may be, pilgrims by their practice show that they do not consider it sufficient to put merely their foot into the city, but they must also worship and bathe there, if possible on the day of the new moon of the month of Magh, and have, I believe, their head and beard also shaven.

But now let me give you a description of the Mela ground. We go first through the temporary bazar, which is not just on the sacred spot, but close by, and belongs to it. Here are two rows of booths or platforms, where people sell their different articles. In the principal one we find shopkeepers or pedlars of almost every kind. There we see a large number of Cloth merchants, who, in the most advantageous way, have either hung up or spread out in their shop their cotton, woollen and silk articles, most of them in gaudy colours, as natives like them; and are continually and eagerly looking out for customers:—then the Braziers, who besides having vessels and toys of brass and copper, all brightly burnished and neatly arranged, have also here and there idols of the same metal placed in rows, for any one who wants a god of metal:—the Toy and Rosary makers, who on long strings, drawn across the shop, have large quantities of beads and chains, and rosaries, &c., of the most different kinds and colours, hanging down or spread upon a board below:—the Jewellers, with a great variety of rings and ornaments for the hair, forehead, ears, nose, neck, chest, arms, wrists, fingers, ankles, toes, &c., of those who need artificial ornaments, cheap or expensive ones:—the native Booksellers, offering their native books in Hindu and Sanskrit, which contain descriptions of Hindu mythological persons, or gods, or places, or events, or treat other subjects; some of them with appropriate pictures, too obscene to be mentioned:—the Confectioners, if I do not confer too great an honour upon them by calling them so, who, half naked, not in the most decent position, squatting upon the very stand upon which their goods are spread, offer with their dirty hands, on wooden plates, which grease and dirt have given a black shining colour, very dirty sweetmeats, which, though covered with dust, find yet a ready sale:—Idol sellers, offering idols of marble and other stone, large and small, painted and gilded or plain, cheap and expensive ones, for rich and poor, representing their different gods in different attitudes, with and without their wives:—and other booths or shops, where they sell drums and tomtoms, boxes and baskets, glass and earthen ware, &c. &c., to the thousands and thousands that crowd the place. In the middle of this long bazar is the temporary Kotwallee, or police office, in a large tent, with its officials, always active to catch thieves or suspicious characters, whether guilty of an offence or not, or to adjust and settle quarrels, which not very seldom occur at the Mela time.

And now let us go to the real Mela ground. The first thing which attracts your notice are two rows of dirty fakeers and greedy priests, all exhibiting themselves in their sacred filth, sitting either alone or in little groups. It is entirely beyond my ability to give you anything like a proper description of these personifications of human depravity, who have lost, to a great extent, that which can sometimes hide sin and guilt—shame. Entirely or almost naked, you see them squatted down before a heap of ashes, or a burning or smoking log of wood; besmeared all over from head to toe with ashes or coloured earth; the hair, perhaps for many years, uncleaned and uncombed, clogged together with dirt, and hanging wildly down; large tillacks or coloured marks of the particular deity whom they worship, on their forehead, breast, and arms, (reminding one thereby of the mark of the beast); sometimes with split ears, sometimes with a cloth tied before their mouth, to keep them from the mortal sin of murdering a little insect, which perchance might fly into their mouth; sometimes covered with a most fanciful cap or hat, or something similar to long twisted hair, wound rope-like round the upper part of the head; perhaps a big rope round their waist; a pair of tongs and a hollowed gourd—marks of fakeerism—lying close by; and an idol, or several idols, and perhaps a book or something like it before them, from which they either read, or pretend to read, to such as favour them with their visit, males or females, sitting down and listening a little to something which they understand or do not understand—for the mere listening is meritorious—and for which they throw some present, generally a few coppers before the prodigy of filth and holiness. If I am not very much mistaken, the most of those listening or making offerings to these fakeers, are females, who present their gifts either as a thank-offering for something they think they have received from their god, perhaps a male child, or some other favour; or offer it, in hope to receive that. These fakeers at other times, when met with alone, are, at least in the presence of a European, generally somewhat shy, and show that they have not yet lost all shame; but here their numerical strength makes them bolder and more shameless than ever; and several times when I passed them on my way to the preaching place, I could read defiance and opposition in their grinning faces. Intermixed with these monsters are a number of priests or Brahmins, who, either on the ground or a platform, or a kind of wooden terrace, have their different gods of stone, and wood, and metal, arranged; some of them most gaudily arrayed; and before them, or close by them, sits the officiating priest, muttering and offering, or reading and preaching on the dignity of the gods, and the efficacy and benefit derived from bathing in the Ganges, and offering to Brahmins. Their eagerness to attract pilgrims in order to receive presents, makes them speak very loud and fast, whereby the otherwise lethargic Hindoo gets into a state of great excitement, expressed by the motions of the body, arms, and head; and the great lever of this all, is the desire to obtain money. But we pass the Brahmins and platforms filled with abominations, and go further. Here we come to a place, enclosed by bamboos, the ground of which is covered with loads of black human hair. Here the thousands of pilgrims who want to have the full benefit of the pilgrimage, get their heads shaved by persons of a certain caste, whose only business consists in shaving head and beard, paring nails, and cleaning ears. It is a disgusting sight, but the complacency of the barber, with which he sits before his customer, shaving him in the midst of these heaps of hair for ½ pice—a little more than ½ a cent; and that of the other with which he continually looks into a small looking glass which he has in his hand, to see whether the barber does his work well, shows you that both feel quite comfortable. I may as well mention here, that they leave invariably a very little bunch of hair in the centre of the crown untouched. I was told by a native that this little bunch of hair is necessary for their salvation, for by it they are carried over the "ocean of the world" to the land of happiness; though others again say, that they get over it by laying hold of a cow's tail, which is crossing the said ocean. However this may be, that little bunch of hair is saved, and you find it with every native. In going further towards the sacred corner of the junction of the three rivers, you pass several rows of beggars, cripples, lepers, lame, blind, deaf, &c., every one having a cloth spread before him, on which those that want to increase their stock of meritorious acts, throw either a handful of grain, or a few cowries, (small shells, used as coin, one-ninetieth part of a cent each,) or perhaps a copper piece. The crowd increases as you pass on, and you find yourself surrounded by a large number of Brahmins, sitting on large platforms, near every one of which a high bamboo is dug in the ground, on the top of which is fixed a flag of a particular colour, with different figures or emblems, representing gods or sacred animals, or some other fanciful object. These Brahmins are the so-called Pragwals, or officiating priests at the fair. Their look tells you soon what manner of spirit they are of. With their hawks' eyes they spy out their victims among the pilgrims, and keep them until they are satisfied with their prey, if indeed it is possible to satisfy a Pragwal. But they generally do not wait for the pilgrims till they arrive at the Mela, but send their emissaries beforehand already round about Allahabad, and even far away, to secure their victims. As the whole benefit which the pilgrims obtain at Tribeni, may be annihilated by the curse of the priest, it is indispensably necessary to gratify him, at least to some extent; and this these scoundrels use to extort as much money, or clothes, or whatsoever it may be, from their customers, as they possibly can.

You may perhaps think, that these Pragwals trouble the missionary very much, and annoy and oppose him in preaching the gospel; but, with very few exceptions, we have very little to do with them at the Mela. The fact is, I believe, that they have no time for controversy at the Mela. The one engrossing and all-absorbing thought is how to make money; and they have neither time nor a desire to think of any thing else. There may be other causes, as the hope that the little influence the missionaries exert, will be more than counterbalanced by their own greater influence upon the people; or the certainty that all their opposition to the padris could and would never drive them from the field; but the chief cause, in my opinion, that makes them apparently indifferent to the preaching of the missionaries, is the desire to make money from the pilgrims; and the hurry in which they are to do this, leaves them no time for any thing else.

Sacred Bathing-Place.

We came at last to the bathing place, and here you see crowds of people, men, women, and children, high and low, rich and poor, all crowded together in one mass, standing either in the water, bathing, and shivering, and muttering, and worshipping, with their faces towards the sun, or crowding the bank of the river. Here the covetousness of the Allahabad priests has induced them to contrive another way for realizing some more money. A Hindu, at the very time when he thinks he is washing away his sins, is generally more ready to offer something to Brahmins than at other times; but as the latter do not like to be constantly pushed about in the crowd, or to stand always in the water, they have erected little shrines, with gaudily dressed but ugly looking idols, in little boats that are fronting the banks, at a little distance from it, so that the bathing Hindu is close by it. These floating shrines bring in some more money to the priests. Occasionally a native rajah or a wealthy banker appears at such a fair, and they bring a rich harvest to these wretched priests, and to the fakeers. One day, when I was there, a wealthy native fed all the fakeers that were present at the Mela; for, though natives generally know that these so-called saints are scoundrels and hypocrites in a saint's disguise, yet the thought that perhaps one or the other may be really a holy man, and, more than this, the eagerness for fame, leads rich natives to squander money in this way; and, sure enough, they get a great name thereby.

Preaching at the Mela.

But I must lead you now also to two bright spots, the only ones in the midst of spiritual darkness and death, superstition and idolatry. In the midst of one of the rows of fakeers and Brahmins, on one side of the Mela ground, and at the end of the temporary bazar on the other side, there are two large tents pitched, open in front, with a few benches placed there, and in the middle of the tent a platform, which is occupied by missionaries, catechists, and readers, all taking their turn, one after another, in reading, or preaching the glad tidings of salvation to the crowd assembled before the tent. Preaching, which occasionally takes more the form of controversy, is carried on during the greater part of the day, to the continually changing congregation. There were among the attendants also, some who listened quietly for hours; and again others, who either moved by vanity or fondness for disputation, or perhaps from sincere motives, opposed us, and in bringing forward their objections, drew us into a controversy. Knowing that it would do but little, if any good, we tried always, as much as practicable, to avoid it, which had often also the good effect of ridding us of vain opponents, who had merely come forward for opposition's sake. Thus preaching was carried on for about a month at the Mela, and we hope and pray that of the good seed shown there, some will sooner or later spring up and bear fruit.

AN EXAMPLE WORTHY OF IMITATION.

WIDOW'S MITE, $5.00.

A minister in Western Pennsylvania writes:—"Last Sabbath, as I was wending my way to —— church, (to which I am now stated supply,) when within a mile or two of the church, I overtook a poor widow, a member of the church, who had walked more than two miles, over bad roads, and under a burning sun, (for she was too poor to afford a conveyance,) who stopped me, and handed me the enclosed, with the earnest request that her name might not be published. This gift from her was more than $1000 from some who ride to church in their carriage. This may be considered a trifling incident, but I tell you, my dear brother, it had its effect on my own mind, and amply repaid me for my tiresome ride of seven miles, and strengthened me to preach my two sermons, with the usual interval of only fifteen minutes."

BOXES OF CLOTHING, intended for the Missions of the Board, may be sent to the Mission House, or to any of the Agents of the Board; and should be preceded, or accompanied, by a written statement of the source whence they came, and of the value of their contents in detail.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY is published monthly, in two editions. Terms: Newspaper Edition, at the rate of two dollars a year for twenty copies to the address of one person, postage prepaid. Under twenty copies, at the rate of thirty-five cents for five copies to one address; on these, postage to be paid by subscribers, at the office of delivery—half a cent for each copy if paid quarterly in advance. Pamphlet Edition, Fifty cents a year for each copy. This edition contains several pages of additional matter. Copies are sent free, when desired to donors of ten dollars and upwards, and to ministers. Address, for both editions, "The Foreign Missionary," Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS,

No. 265 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, donations of books and tracts, the appointment of Colporteurs, the editorial department of the Record, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to the Rev. WILLIAM E. SCHENCK, Corresponding Secretary, and General Agent, No. 265 Chestnut street.

All communications, reports, and orders, from Colporteurs, to be addressed to Mr. WINTHROP SARGENT, Superintendent of Colportage.

Orders for books, other than from Colporteurs, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. JOSEPH P. ENGLES, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. ENGLES, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to A. W. MITCHELL, M. D. Treasurer.

TERMS OF SALE.

The former cash terms having been found inconvenient to calculate, the Board have fixed upon the following:

On all purchases amounting to $12 or upwards, for which the cash is paid when the books are ordered, a discount of 25 per cent shall be allowed.

On sums less than $12 no discount is allowed, except to booksellers, ministers, and theological students of any denomination, who are entitled to a discount of 20 per cent.

Large amounts are entitled to 20 per cent. discount, and six months' credit on approved security. When any part of a credit bill is paid before maturity, a further discount at the rate of one per cent a month is allowed for the unexpired time.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR OUR COLUMNS.

Our brethren, both lay and clerical, are invited to send us short and interesting contributions for those columns of the Record occupied by the Board of Publication. Instances are often occurring in which the labours of colporteurs, or the reading of the books of the Board, are blessed of the Spirit of God, and which, if communicated more generally through these columns, would be encouraging and useful in a variety of ways. Besides the communication of facts, there is also a wide field for suggestion and discussion in reference to the principles, operations and publications of the Board. Reserving in every case the editorial privilege of accepting or rejecting, we cordially invite articles on such themes from every quarter. Whenever sent, let them be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary of the Board.

COLPORTAGE IN CANADA.

The following extracts are taken from a recent letter of one of our colporteurs in Canada, who has been doing an excellent work. Having been requested to do so, he has engaged several others to aid him in the region where he is labouring.

"Within another fortnight I am of opinion that the vast area, to which I formerly alluded, shall be explored and supplied with so much at least as shall create an appetite for more of your excellent food of the mind. I have no doubt the cry 'Give, give,' will become more general and louder as we proceed, until the good leaven of your Board shall leaven our whole Canadian lump. I am happy to inform you that I have engaged another most efficient colporteur, one of our most talented and best young men in this country, a man of deep piety and devotedness to the Redeemer's cause, and of great fluency in English and Gaelic. He left here yesterday for the north of the Ottawa River with an excellent assortment of books. I trust your excellent Board will not find fault with me for engaging so many. They are all of the right sort. My motive is that 'the King's business requires haste.' Souls are perishing for want of knowledge on all hands. 'The harvest truly is great, and the labourers few.' I have, I trust, by divine guidance, endeavoured to lay a wide basis and a good foundation for a large structure, which I have no doubt whatever shall redound to the glory of our great King. Many, I am certain, will rise up in the Canadas to call you blessed for your work of faith and labour of love in sending us already so many thousands of books and tracts, all of which breathe that evangelical spirit of which our poor country stands so much in need."

SYNOD OF NOVA SCOTIA.

The last number of the Record contained an allusion to the visit of the Rev. Dr. Thompson of New York to Nova Scotia, and the promise of useful results therefrom. Since that time an interesting account of the proceedings of that Synod has reached us. It is contained in the columns of The Colonial Presbyterian, published at St. Stephen, New Brunswick.

BOOKS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD.

Dr. Thompson, of New York, requested leave to make a statement on behalf of the Board. He explained at length its objects; pointed out the great advantages arising from the circulation of the cheap issues of the standard religious literature published by the Board. He had the pleasure of placing on the table of the Synod some reports, &c., forwarded by the Secretary, Rev. Mr. Schenck, for that purpose, which would show in detail the workings of the Board, and the estimates formed in regard to it. It was a somewhat singular coincidence that one of the pamphlets in question contained at length a letter from New Brunswick, which had some time ago appeared in the Halifax Presbyterian Witnesss detailing the operations of the Board, and which now appeared under the caption of "A good word from abroad." After discussion, in which Mr. Glass asked some questions as to certain details, on which Dr. Thompson did not feel himself in a position to speak positively, the following resolution was moved, seconded, and unanimously adopted:

That the Synod have heard with much interest the statement made by Dr. Thompson, of the objects contemplated and carried on by the Presbyterian Board of Publication; thanks Dr. Thompson for his statement, and also for his previous services in preaching on the occasion of the ordination of Missionaries by this Synod; and further resolved that the Synod having three of the Colporteurs of the Board already labouring within the bounds of the Synod, the Synod gratefully acknowledges the valuable favours conferred by the Board, and resolves to take such further advantage of the same, as opportunity may offer.

WHAT ARE YOU GIVING?

Rev. Andrew Fuller once preached upon the words Eccles. xi. 1—4: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, &c." In discussing on this text he remarked, "'Cast thy bread;' not a few crumbs, not a thin slice, but a large piece, a substantial portion of the loaf. Do not keep all your good things to yourself, or reserve them entirely for your own family; but divide and distribute a considerable measure of them among those who need; and let a large portion be presented on the altar of God as a freewill-offering to his cause—a thank-offering for his great and manifold mercies, especially for 'his unspeakable gift,' even his own Son whom 'he spared not, but freely gave up for us all.' Do not give to God, who demands and deserves the best, and who 'filleth you with the finest of the wheat,' that which the dogs may eat—the crumbs that fall from your table—small morsels—your mere leavings and refuse; but consecrate to him a large mass of your necessary food, even of 'the children's bread.'" This discourse was listened to by a young silk-merchant of London, upon whose mind the above remarks made a deep impression. He entered upon a course of well-doing, and was led to begin right, and to give liberally from his first setting out in life. This gentleman continued through a long life to be a zealous, firm, and generous supporter of several of the prominent associations established in Great Britain for the spread of divine truth, and died peacefully, with the words upon his lips, "By the grace of God, I am what I am."

Christian reader, what are you casting upon the waters? Is it the crumbs? Is it the thin slice? Or is it the large piece? Whichever it is, remember that "after many days" you will find only in the same proportion.

USEFULNESS OF TRACTS.

The following incident, well illustrating the usefulness of little and unpretending tracts on religious subjects, is mentioned in the Puritan Recorder, as having recently occurred in London.

"A Mormonite has been convinced of his error by the tracts of the London Religious Tract Society, and has been the means of causing more than one hundred persons, through the tracts against Mormonism, to renounce the above belief; and this has so weakened them, that they have been obliged to give up two of their places of meeting."

Doubtless the foundations of heresy and wickedness are often sapped and destroyed, and its structures overturned by these quiet little preachers, who often work most effectively when their work escapes all human notice. Let sound, judicious, and earnest religious tracts be scattered broadcast then over the land, and especially in its darker corners, and their fruits will be seen in due time.

A RESPONSE.

It gives us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of $12 from the Sabbath-school of the church at East Hampton on Long Island, through its pastor, the Rev. Stephen L. Mershon. This sum is sent in answer to the article in the last number of the Record asking our Sabbath-schools who have ability, to aid in furnishing libraries to those schools which are destitute and needy. This contribution shall be applied according to the directions given.

We trust the example of the East Hampton Sabbath-school will be followed by many others, enabling us to gladden the hearts of many teachers and scholars in the far West, and elsewhere, who are unable to buy, with the gift of a choice selection of interesting and instructive volumes.

BOOKS OF THE BOARD.

It would be difficult to find a more valuable collection of Books and Tracts than those issued by our Board of Publication. Any one who will glance over the Catalogue must be convinced of this; and many have given their decided and emphatic testimony to this effect. In the prosecution of an agency of several years for the Board, I had occasion to call on many who are not in our ecclesiastical connection, and almost all on whom I called spoke in the highest commendation of the Books and Tracts—their matter, their style, and their cheapness. And though I have now no connection whatever with the Board, I am still occasionally receiving similar testimonies. This very week I have received a friendly note from a New-school brother, thanking me for a catalogue of the books published by the Presbyterian Board, which I had sent him; and he adds:

"I have a number of the books published by the Presbyterian Board already. There are many more I should like to get; more indeed than I shall have funds to purchase. But some five or six more I shall try to get of you.

"The doctrines inculcated in all those works with which I am acquainted, have my cordial assent. I could sincerely wish every family among my people, and indeed every other, were supplied with them.

"Your fellow labourer, in Christ."

Though the Board needs no such endorsement, yet such testimony is valuable. It is an encouragement not to be weary in well-doing. As such I transmit it for insertion in the Record. W. J. M.

FIRST FRUITS.

The Treasurer has received the following pleasing note from an unknown licentiate, who appears to have a more correct appreciation of the work in which the Board is engaged than many of his older brethren.

Dear Sir—Enclosed please find five dollars, the first money I ever received for preaching the gospel of our blessed Lord and Saviour, which I rejoice to send as a contribution to the "Distribution Fund," that thus you may be enabled to gladden the hearts of those who are looking to you for the gift of that truth which may make themselves, and those around them, wise unto salvation.

Yours truly, A.

DR. ALEXANDER'S "COUNSELS TO THE YOUNG."

"Counsels of the Aged to the Young," by the late venerable Dr. Alexander of Princeton, is a volume with which every youth should be familiar. The topics it embraces indicate the value of its contents. They are "Good Principles," "Useful Knowledge," "Good Habits," "Good Company," "A Good Reputation," "Economy," "Christian Consistency," "Contentment," "The Social Virtues," "Philanthropy," "Relative Duties," "Temptations," "Government of the Tongue," "A Good Conscience," "Peace," "Fortitude," "Value of Time," "Genuine Piety," "Prayer," "Preparation for Death." These are so many parts which go to make up that wisdom, "whose ways are ways of pleasantness, and all whose paths are peace."

Lately, being engaged in the distribution of the publications of the General Assembly's Board, in the State of New York, we called on a village storekeeper, a man of no piety, and inclining to scepticism, but possessed of considerable shrewdness. Learning from him that he had a son, about fourteen years of age, we recommended to him the above little work, as a suitable book for the lad. "There," said he, pointing to the place, "is a passage worth the price of the book." The passage he referred to is the opening sentence under the head of "Good Principles:" "Resolve to form your lives upon some certain principles and to regulate your actions by fixed rules." He bought the book with the evident satisfaction of one who has made a good bargain.

What we advised that irreligious father to do, we advise every parent, and especially every Christian parent, in the land to do, who has a child, a boy or a girl, of suitable age to understand and practice the counsels given. We should be highly gratified to see the same excellent little treatise introduced into all the common schools. None so valuable on juvenile ethics can be found. Its cost is a trifle, 20 cents, handsomely printed and bound, published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication. Disco.

CHEAP BOOKS.

Some twelve or fourteen years ago the American people were first startled out of their propriety by the bold adventure of an enterprising book publisher, who undertook to reprint all the novels of the best English writers and sell them for twenty-five cents a piece. There was a sudden literary fever at once in the whole country, and every man, woman, and child that could read, was constantly purchasing a quarter's worth of the genius of Bulwer, D'Israeli, or Marryatt, done up as a dingy, brown-covered pamphlet, and printed in a style to delight the eyes and encourage the trade of the spectacle-makers. They bought the books as some ladies buy goods and furniture at auctions—not because they were very good, or at all necessary, but because they were bargains. In this way every house was soon lettered with well-thumbed, dog-eared and greasy old pamphlets, the unworthy tenements of great writers' creations, and the patent American substitute for books. None of them, after going the rounds of a family were worth preserving, and as for putting them on the shelves of a library, they would have been a disgrace and a disfigurement.

For a time there was much jubilation over this grand new idea of furnishing cheap literature for the million, and little else was published besides shilling and two shilling novels. As a natural consequence of the mania for this kind of reading, there sprang up a class of writers who undertook or contracted to produce an indefinite quantity of novels of the most horrible, or sentimental, or licentious character. There was scarcely such a thing as overstocking the market with these precious books, for the million bought so greedily that it mattered little what might be the quality, the character or the morality of the book—it was always sure to sell. When the English repertory was exhausted, and when American "genius" failed to supply original works with sufficient rapidity, recourse was had to French literature, and the most corrupt and obscene works of the coarsest Parisian writers were translated and duly done up, with pictures to match. If the original author happened to tell his story too decently, his American translator was instructed to throw in a little high colouring and make the book more "spicy" for the American reader.

It is impossible to estimate the amount of mischief wrought by this profuse production of worthless or positively filthy books, at a price which every apprentice boy and servant girl felt that they could afford to become purchasers. But if there were such a thing practicable as tracing all the sources of degradation, we have no doubt that a main and most fruitful one would be found to be the "cheap literature" of the last ten years. The mere idleness that it led to was baneful to many minds; but when, besides, the cheap novels presented, as they usually did, scenes of the most extravagant passion, vice and crime, in which beautiful women and magnificent men enacted parts, the moral equilibrium of the untutored disciples of the school was upset, and they eagerly sought for opportunities of distinguishing themselves in a like way, and of themselves becoming the heroes and heroines of such splendid romances. —Evening Bulletin.

THE "VISITOR" RECOMMENDED BY THE SUPERINTENDENT OF A SABBATH-SCHOOL, IN OHIO.

Enclosed I send you five dollars, for forty copies of the Sabbath-school Visitor, to be sent as formerly to Mr. J. D. Thorpe's care, Cincinnati, Ohio.

I am happy to join my testimony with the multitudes of others, who have witnessed the good effects produced upon the minds and hearts of children wherever your valuable little "Visitor" has come. I hope the circulation of it will expand and continue to increase until all the children and youth of our Sunday-schools will be fully supplied.

I hope that no superintendent of any Sabbath-school in our Church neglects to recommend, as well as to make an effort to spread it freely among the children of his charge.

LATE PUBLICATIONS OF THE BOARD.

The Christian Ministry not a Priesthood: A Sermon preached at the opening of the sessions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in Nashville, Tenn., on Thursday, May 17, 1855, by the Rev. Henry A. Boardman, D. D., the Moderator of the previous Assembly. Published by order of the Assembly. 18mo. pp. 84. Price 15 cents.

This sermon was received with uncommon favour at the time of its delivery in Nashville, and several thousand copies of the newspaper extras containing it were immediately circulated. It has likewise received a warm and universal commendation from the religious papers of nearly every denomination throughout the country. The clearness and simplicity of its argument, the gracefulness of its diction, the truthfulness of its statements, the fervour and power of its appeals, and its special adaptation to meet and refute some of the most insidious and fashionable errors of the day, combine to make this a highly valuable contribution to our religious literature. It is now published by the Board, in a neat form, and a convenient one for preservation on the shelf of the library.

On Temptation and the Mortification of Sin in Believers: By the Rev. John Owen, D. D., 12mo. pp. 306. with a portrait. Price 60 cents.

In this neat volume we have a republication of two valuable tracts of the great non-conformist, Dr: Owen. They are rich depositories of practical theology. The nature of their contents can be best exhibited by setting forth in full the separate titles of the two treatises, which are as follows: I. Of Temptation, the nature and power of it, the danger of entering into it, and the means of preventing that danger: with a resolution of sundry cases thereunto belonging. II. Of the Mortification of Sin in Believers; the necessity, nature, and means of it: with a resolution of sundry cases of conscience thereunto belonging.

In these days of abounding temptation and worldliness, when the news of fearful falls by persons of high profession so often startles us, a book on such subjects, and from such a pen, can hardly fail to be profitable to any who will be at the trouble to read it attentively and prayerfully. The volume has been issued at the suggestion of a venerable father in the ministry still living.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

Varieties.

TIDINGS FROM DAMASCUS.—Our mission work is proceeding in a favourable manner. At our communion in winter, five new candidates were received into the church, all of whom give evidence of sincere piety. At a recent communion season, fourteen native communicants were present and partook of the emblems of the Saviour's death. The schools are growing into public favour. Miss Dales has had a school for about forty girls, most of them Jewesses from the first families in the community. They have improved rapidly, many of them having learned to read the Arabic fluently during the six months the school has been in progress, besides studying the English language considerably.

All this country is in a state of anarchy. The government at Damascus has no power nor influence whatever, and every man in the city and out of it does as he pleases. If a crime is committed, either the offender is not caught at all, or if taken by those whom he has injured and brought to the tribunal, he has only to pay to the judges a share of the money made by the transaction, and he is at once discharged. Robberies and murders are of frequent occurrence, even in the suburbs of the city. What the end of these things will be none can tell.—N. Y. Observer.

SOCIALISM.—The breaking up of the North American Phalanx, of Monmouth county New Jersey—the last of some twenty Socialist communities established in this country—makes the New York Tribune mourn like Rachel for her children, because they were not. The fact is, such an Association was Utopian, because it is unnatural, and, above all, unnatural in this land which owes its triumphs to an individualism such as never was developed in the history of man. Here is a social state which leaves the individual all right power, capacities and triumphs, and yet links together all in a community of interest and destiny. However plausible and however philanthropic Fourierism may be at the bottom, it belongs to the old, Asiatic, aristocratic, paternal system of government; the system that assumes to do for the people—to take care of the people—and does not respect and act on the principle that God has given man capacity enough to do for and take care of himself.—Boston Post.

A RARE INSTANCE.—The pulpit of the South church was occupied yesterday, forenoon and afternoon, by two brothers, Rev. Brown Emerson, senior pastor of the church, and Rev. Reuben Emerson, of South Reading. The former is in his 78th year, and the latter in his 84th, and both have been pastors of churches more than half a century each. The entire ordinary services of the Sabbath, with the additional labour of the admission of church members and the administration of the Sacrament, were conducted by the two venerable pastors, indicating a rare degree of mental and physical vigour.—Salem Gazette.

DEDICATION IN BRIDGEPORT.—The New Presbyterian house of worship, erected in Bridgeport, Conn., was dedicated on Wednesday, August 8th. The pastor, the venerable and distinguished Dr. Hewitt, preached in the morning, the Rev. Dr. Thompson in the afternoon, and the Rev. Dr. Krebs in the evening. This new church and its faithful minister are now attracting great attention, and enlisting the sympathies of Presbyterians in other places. The prospects of success are highly encouraging.

REV. PETER PARKER, M. D.—Among the passengers in the steamer Baltic, says the Journal of Commerce, was the Rev. Dr. Peter Parker, who has been twenty years in China, connected with the mission of the American Board of Missions. Dr. Parker has most of this time been at the head of the Hospital in Canton, in which place he has had extensive intercourse with the people from all parts of the Empire, embracing men of all ranks and stations. Of late years Dr. Parker has been associated with the agencies of our government in China, and on the return of Mr. McLean, was left in charge of the interests of the government. Dr. Parker is extensively known in this country as a missionary and a philanthropist, and he will be cordially greeted by many friends in all parts of the Union.

SECRET SOCIETIES.—The Faculties of various first class Colleges are taking decided ground against the institution of secret societies among the students; and the Trustees of Princeton College have directed the President to announce publicly, at the opening of the session, that any student will be promptly dismissed who may after that time be known to be a member of any such association.

JEWISH HOSPITAL AT JERUSALEM.—Sir Moses Montefiore carries with him to Jerusalem the product of a subscription for his co-religionists, amounting to 3,000,000f. or 4,000,000f. At Constantinople a firman was granted authorizing the establishment of a Jewish hospital at Jerusalem.

ORDER OF DEACONS.—The Episcopal Church has, by a canon, created an order of men not unlike the local preachers of the Methodist Church. Men in secular life can attain to the order of deacons, and continue in secular business still. Seven or eight gentlemen in New York city have complied with the provision of this canon; and now, although on work days employed in various secular business, on the Sabbath assist in the ministrations of the sanctuary; they are deacons, but not permitted to preach without special leave of the Bishop.

WATCH, WATCH, MOTHER!

Mother! watch the little feet
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Rounding through the busy street,
Ranging cellar, shed and hall;
Never count the moments lost,
Never mind the time it costs;
Little feet will go astray,
Guide them, Mother, while you may.

Mother! watch the little hand
Picking berries by the way,
Making houses in the sand,
Tossing on the fragrant hay.
Never dare the question ask,
"Why to me this weary task?"
These same little hands may prove
Messengers of light and love.

Mother! watch the little tongue
Prattling eloquent and wild,
What is said, and what is sung
By the happy, joyous child.
Catch the word while yet unspoken,
Stop the vow before 'tis broken;
This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings in a Saviour's name.

Mother! watch the little heart
Beating soft and warm for you;
Wholesome lessons now impart;
Keep, oh! keep that young heart true,
Extricating every weed,
Sowing good and precious seed;
Harvest rich you then may see
Ripening for eternity.

MY OWN WORK.

There is work for all of us; and there is special work for each. It is work not for societies or alliances, but it is work for individual minds and hands. It is work which I cannot do in a crowd, or as one of a mass, but as one man acting singly, according to my own gifts, and under a sense of my personal responsibilities. There is, no doubt, associated work for me to do; I must do my work as part of the world's great whole, or as a member of some body. But I have special work to do as one individual, who, by God's plan and appointment, have a separate position and also a separate work—a work which, if I do not do it, must be left undone. No one of my fellows can do that special work for me which I have come into the world to do. He may do a higher work and a greater work—but he cannot do my work. I cannot hand my work over to him, any more than I can hand over my responsibilities or my gifts. Nor can I delegate my work to any association of men, however well ordered and powerful. They have their own work to do, and it may be a very noble one; but they cannot do my work for me. I must do it with these hands and with these lips, which God has given me. I may do little or I may do much; that matters not; it must be my own work. And by doing my own work, poor as it may seem to some, I shall better fulfil God's end in making me what I am, and more truly glorify his name, than if I were either going out of my sphere to do the work of another, or calling another into my sphere, to do my proper work for me. The low grass tuft is not the branching elm, nor is it the fragrant rose: but it has a position to occupy, and a work to do, in the arrangements of God for this earth of ours, which neither elm nor rose can undertake.

Besides, I have a crown to win; and who can win it for me? I cannot reach it through the toil of another, through the operations of any society of men. I must win it for myself. No fellow-man can wear it for me, and no fellow-man can win it for me. I must press forward to the mark for the prize of my high calling. My right of entrance into the kingdom has, I know, been won for me by the Son of God. That was a work for him alone to do. And he has done it! I owe my deliverance to his blood alone—I own my acceptance to his righteousness alone. But still there remains for me a race to run, a prize to secure. And therefore must I work without ceasing, with my eye upon the glory to be revealed when the Lord returns; forgetting what is behind, reach on to what is before, "if that by any means I may attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

TRIUMPH OF PIETY.

Lord —— was a man of the world. His pleasures were drawn from his riches, his honours, and his friends. His daughter was the idol of his heart. Much had been expended for her education, and well did she repay, in her intellectual endowments, the solicitude of her parents. She was highly accomplished, amiable in her disposition, winning in her manners. They were all strangers to God.

At length Miss —— attended a religious meeting in London; was deeply awakened, and soon happily converted. Now she delighted in the service of the sanctuary, and social meetings. To her the charms of Christianity were overflowing. She frequented those places where she met with congenial minds animated with similar hope. She was often found in the house of God.

The change was marked by her fond father with painful solicitude. To see his lovely daughter thus infatuated, was an occasion of deep grief, and he resolved to correct her erroneous notions on the subject of the real pleasures and business of life. He placed at her disposal large sums of money, hoping that she would be induced to go into the extravagances of others of her birth, and leave the meetings. But she maintained her integrity. He took her on long journeys, conducted in the most engaging manner, in order to divert her mind from religion, but she still delighted in her Saviour.

After failing in many plans which he anticipated would be effectual in subduing the religious feelings of his daughter, he introduced her into company under circumstances in which she must either join in the recreation of the party or give offence. Hope lighted up the countenance of this affectionate but misguided father, as he saw his snare about to entangle the object of his solicitude.

The hour arrived, the party assembled. Several had performed their parts to the delight of the party, which was in great spirits. Miss —— was now called upon for a song. With perfect self-possession she took her seat at the piano-forte, ran her fingers over the keys, and commenced playing and singing, in a sweet air, the following words:

"No room for mirth or trifling here,
For worldly hopes or worldly fear,
If life so soon is gone;
If now the Judge is at the door,
And all mankind must stand before
The inexorable throne!

No matter what my thoughts employ,
A moment's misery or joy;
But O! when both shall end,
Where shall I find my destined place?
Shall I my everlasting days
With fiends or angels spend?

She arose from her seat. The whole party was subdued. Not a word was spoken. Her father wept aloud. One by one they left the house.

Lord —— never rested until he became a Christian. He lived an example of Christian benevolence, having given to benevolent Christian enterprises, at the time of his death, nearly five hundred thousand dollars.

EFFECTIVE PREACHING.

A religion without a Saviour is the temple without the Shekinah, and its worshippers will all desert it. Few men in the world have less pretensions as a preacher, than myself—my voice, my look, my manner, all of a common kind; yet I thank God there is scarcely a corner in our little church where you might not find a streaming eye and a beating heart. The reason is, that I speak of Christ; and if there is not a charm in the name, there is in the train of fears, and hopes, and joys, which it carries along with it. The people feel—they must listen.—Cunningham.

Prayer doth not always procure for us the thing we pray for, but then it procureth something; nor is the prayer always granted at the time of its being offered up, but then it is sure to be granted at a more expedient time.

The fountain of content must spring up in the mind; and he who has so little knowledge of human nature as to seek happiness by changing anything but his own disposition, will waste his life in fruitless efforts, and multiply the griefs which he proposes to remove.

A missionary about to sail to the Sandwich Islands, recently visited the Girard College in Philadelphia. After surveying the magnificent structure he remarked to a friend, "Stephen Girard put his life into a pile of marble: I mean to put mine into the improved minds and hearts of men."

VISIT OF THE REV. R. HAPPERSETT, ASSOCIATE SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS, TO MINNESOTA TERRITORY AND A PORTION OF WISCONSIN.

Having recently made quite an extended tour through the North-western portion of our country, for the purpose of visiting some of the missionaries of the Board, and, as far as possible, encouraging them in their arduous work; and also, of obtaining more definite information of certain important fields, we have thought it probable that some of the readers of the Record would be interested in tracing the rapid progress of these new settlements, and looking for a little at the vast missionary field which, in the opening providence of God, is now presented to our Church. At present we shall confine our observations entirely to the Territory of Minnesota, and a small portion of Wisconsin which lies adjacent thereto. And as we write them out from recollection, and a few notes made by the way, with the impressions made at the time and place, they will be rather in the order of time, and broken fragments, than in any classified form.

That no one may think that this is a limited field, we would remind the reader that the Territory of Minnesota is about equal in extent to four times the State of Ohio. From its South-eastern to its North-western border it is near 800 miles, and from the Iowa line on the South, to the British line on the North, it is more than 400 miles—the whole comprising an area of 166,000 square miles, and 106,000,000 acres. At one point it runs through seven and a half degrees of latitude, or a distance due North of five hundred and twenty-five miles. Such is the extent of the vast field into which we are now about to enter.

The "Golden Era" was the name of the boat on which we embarked on the morning of the 30th of July, at Galena, Illinois, for St. Paul. We had spent a quiet, but we hope not unprofitable Sabbath in that stirring city—proverbial not only for its high and rugged cliffs well filled with mineral, but also for the hospitality of its inhabitants, of which we can bear our testimony. We soon reached Dunleith, the terminus of the Chicago and Galena Rail-road, where we were to remain until the arrival of the train in the evening. This afforded us time to visit Brothers Phelps and Kerr in Du Buque, immediately opposite. It is a beautiful and growing place, with a population of some 10,000, and in this respect about equal to that of Galena. Alexander College is located here, and is in quite a flourishing condition. These brethren are not only connected with this institution, but are also constantly engaged in their ministerial duties—the one as pastor of a church in that place, the other as stated supply of the infant church at Dunleith. They also make quite extensive tours in the new settlements round about, and were consequently able to give us much valuable information respecting that important missionary field. At about 6 o'clock P. M. we loosed from our moorings, and, with quite a number of passengers, and a good stage of water, we steered with our noble craft toward the setting sun. It is perhaps neither the time nor place to say much of the beautiful scenery all along the upper Mississippi. To say that it was beautiful, scarcely conveys an adequate idea of what it really is. It is perhaps as bold, and far more varied and extensive than any other navigable river in this country. The river varies from one-half to four miles in width, and winds along between bluffs from one to five hundred feet in heighth. These bluffs are rounded with exquisite taste and skill—with beautiful green grass, and bright flowers, with here and there trees gracefully arranged like orchards, presenting at once the very highest state of cultivation and art. All it seemed to us to need to make it one of the most beautiful of all the beautiful places of this extended country, were houses, and men and women and children, and flocks and herds. All through that extensive and unsettled country we were forcibly impressed with the thought that God had prepared it all, and the vast country beyond, for the abode of civilized and Christian people. Already we found several small villages springing up on the banks of the river. Many of them scarcely a year old, and some of them with from one to three hundred inhabitants. Buena Vista, Clayton, McGregors and Johnston's Landings, Brownsville, La Crosse, Fountain City, Winona, Wabashaw, Minnioah, Redwing, Prescott and Hastings, are all thriving villages. Many of them will doubtless soon be places of considerable importance, and all of them open to us encouraging fields for missionary work. Extending back in Winona, Fillmore, Wabashaw and Goodhue counties in Minnesota, and for some distance back in Wisconsin are new, and in some places pretty extensive settlements, where they much need, and are ready to aid in sustaining the ordinances of religion. In their great destitution they appeal to us for assistance, and offer wide and promising fields to faithful labourers. We shall notice again the rapid increase of population in the counties referred to.

In about fifty hours, including all stoppages, we arrived at St. Paul. It was pleasant, after so long a sail, when this "sunset city," with its capital buildings, and churches, and beautiful bright dwellings burst upon our view; but pleasanter still was it to us, when we ascertained, as soon we did, that our first evening there could be spent in prayer with the church which our Board has aided to gather, and in which many Christians have felt such a deep interest. We shall not soon forget the hearty welcome of the Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer and his estimable family, and of all they did to make our visit both pleasant and profitable. Four years ago this brother went out as the first missionary of our Board to this Territory. He wisely selected St. Paul as the most important field, and under great embarrassments, and many discouragements, but with a strong faith, he went forward, and has succeeded in gathering a church of faithful followers of our Lord and Master, who are strongly attached to the doctrines and order of our church. Their house of worship—for the erection of which so many Christians in the East, and elsewhere, so liberally contributed—is not only finished (except the lecture-room) but is well finished, and admirably suited to the place. It is the most substantial and beautiful in the whole Territory. On the Sabbath we preached both morning and afternoon to attentive and unexpectedly large congregations, and as an evidence of their gratitude, and liberality, we will state, that they proposed making at the time an offering to the cause of missions, which, with what they had already this year contributed, will amount to nearly if not altogether one hundred dollars. They appreciate the assistance hitherto afforded by the Board, and thus give good promise that it will soon all be paid back into our treasury. Are there not many other missionary churches as ready to assist in proportion to their means?

The Rev. Mr. Thayer having selected Hudson and vicinity as the field of his labours, we arranged at once for a visit there, and some other points on the St. Croix river. Accordingly, on Thursday, Brother Riheldaffer accompanying us, we left St. Paul and arrived that evening at Still Water. Here we were cordially welcomed by Capt. Wm. Holcombe, and hospitably entertained at his residence, a short distance from the town. Although as yet only of middle age, he is nevertheless among the oldest settlers of that country. The Sioux, and the Chippewas—between whom there has long existed a mortal enmity—were both hard by, and about equi-distant from him. He was consequently often an eye-witness of many of their treacherous acts and bloody scenes, and perhaps knew as much as any other man of the history, character, and habits of these red men of the forest. He spoke often of the privations of those who love the ordinances of God's house. He himself had long experienced it, and was therefore the more anxious for a competent supply of missionaries for the increasing population of the Territory. In the night we were visited by one of the most terrific thunder storms I ever witnessed. On the day following he drove us in his carriage to Hudson. We were all much disappointed in finding Brother Thayer absent. He had gone back in the interior, a distance of fifty miles, to officiate at a marriage. We spent the day with his family, and were much pleased to learn that God had there opened to him a wide field for usefulness, and that he was greatly encouraged in his work. He very much needs a house of worship. Hudson is beautifully located on the east side of St. Croix Lake, and has a population of one thousand or twelve hundred, and is growing rapidly. Directly opposite, on the western shore of the lake, is another village springing up, where Brother Thayer also preaches. On Saturday we returned to St. Paul.

St. Anthony was the next point for personal observation. In our visit there we were joined by the Rev. Mr. Dodge, of Springfield, Ill., who had arrived at St. Paul's during our absence. A ride of an hour and a half brought us to this somewhat celebrated place. The morning was charming, the air pure and invigorating. We passed by, on our way, many cultivated fields and improved farms with abundant crops, white, and ready for the harvest, with here and there unbroken prairies, and occasionally, at a distance, a little gem of a lake would meet our view. Everything conspired to show forth the loving kindness of the Creator of all things. A short distance from St. Paul, we turned aside to visit an encampment of what are generally called, "Red river men." They had just arrived from Pembina, five hundred miles distant from St. Paul, with a large number of carts laden with furs and peltries. These carts are drawn by an ox in shafts, and are of very rude construction, not having—nor the harness either—a particle of iron about them. Although they had come so far, still they appeared to be in pretty good condition. In the winter season they harness their large dogs to sleds and come down to St. Pauk We found those now in camp "half-breeds," and either unable or unwilling to speak the English language. After several ineffectual efforts to enlist them in conversation, we went our way. Some days afterwards, however, we met two of them, who were both able and willing to converse, and from whom we learned something of their history, and present mode of living, as well as of their moral and religious condition.

The Falls of St. Anthony bear no comparison to those of Niagara, and yet in the way of cataracts they are decidedly the greatest in the West. Many admire them much. Old father Hennepin was so filled with admiration when he first saw them, as to call these falls after his patron saint. It would have been far better they had still retained the old Indian name of Irara, or Laughing Falls. The falls, the islands, and the huge masses of rock all present quite a pretty scene, and at once impress you with the great natural advantages here afforded for manufacturing purposes. Even now we find quite a number of mills of various kinds in active operation, and from the character and energy of the inhabitants of the place, we have every reason to believe it will soon be a place of great business—another Lowell in its way. Already the town of St. Anthony has twenty-five hundred inhabitants, and is rapidly increasing. It is beautifully located on the east side of the river, with a fine country extending to the north and east. The University of Minnesota is located here, and is one of the best endowed institutions of learning in our country. There are here Congregational, Methodist, and Episcopal churches, and here, as almost everywhere else, is a Roman Catholic chapel. Immediately opposite on the west side of the river is the new town of Minneapolis. We ought rather to say a town of a year old, as all are new here. It seems to bid fair to rival St. Anthony. Altogether, these towns, including St. Paul, present a fair specimen of the rapid progress of this great Western country, and of the urgent necessity of sending with this flood of immigration the minister of the everlasting gospel. Standing as we then did, near the geographical centre of the Continent of North America, in the North temperate zone, in the midst of life, and rapid improvements, where less than ten years ago all was wild and uncultivated, with none but the red men of the forest, and here and there a trading post and bold adventurer, and looking back at the history of this great country, we were irresistibly led to reflect upon its future, when these vast uncultivated regions which now lie all around us will be settled, when from sea to sea there shall be one unbroken chain of a densely populated country, and when at the close of another century two hundred millions of souls shall compose this vast population; we could not but ask ourselves, with more than ordinary anxiety, what will then be the condition of this great country? Whether it was probable that then the flag of this united and free country would still float over this vast territory—extending alike protection, and liberty, both civil and religious to all? And what, Oh what will then be the moral condition and future prospects of those immortal souls? The conviction, long since entertained, seemed then to force itself upon us with an intensity stronger far than ever before, that nothing but the gospel of Jesus Christ could inspire this hope, and the awful responsibility now resting upon God's people in this country seemed then tenfold greater than ever. Oh, who can tell the influence of a faithful gospel minister on the future destiny of this country? And if our country's hope rests upon an open Bible, and the diffusion of a pure gospel—and if this be the only hope of immortal souls, then how important that upon this flowing tide of immigration there should go forth the heralds of the everlasting gospel, and that along side the flag of our country there should always be found floating the gospel banner.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

We publish the subjoined address of the Church Extension Committee, with the hope that it may reach and influence many who would not otherwise see it. We earnestly desire that the appeal may be promptly and liberally responded to by all our churches.

As contributions to the cause of Church Extension are still sent to this office, we take occasion to inform our readers that as we have not been authorized to receive money for that object, all remittances intended for Church Extension should be forwarded, agreeably to the request of the Committee, "to the Treasurer of the Committee, Archibald Gamble, Esq.," St. Louis, Missouri.

ADDRESS TO THE CHURCHES.

Dear Brethren—The undersigned were appointed, by the last General Assembly, a committee to prepare and publish an address to the churches on the subject of Church Extension. You are aware that there has been, for several years, a committee under the direction of our Board of Missions, whose duty it was to raise money for the purpose of aiding feeble churches in the erection of suitable houses of worship. For obvious reasons, it was found impracticable for the Board to carry forward successfully these two departments of the Church's work. After much discussion, the last Assembly, with great unanimity, located at St. Louis a committee to whom the whole business of aiding churches in erecting houses of worship, is committed. With much pleasure we have observed that the plan of church extension adopted by the Assembly meets with general favour throughout the bounds of our Church. We are thus encouraged to hope, that the committee, sustained by the churches, will be able to carry forward, with entire success, the work committed to their hands. There are two points connected with this work, which we desire to present for the consideration of our brethren, viz: the importance of the work, and the duty of ministers and churches with respect to it.

1. The importance of the work will appear from the following considerations: 1st. In our new States, whose population is rapidly increasing, and in which villages, towns, and cities are springing up and growing with unprecedented rapidity, the necessity of building houses of worship arises just when it is most difficult for our people to meet it. They have but recently settled in the country, and in addition to the expense of moving, must provide houses for their families. And then it requires some time, if they are merchants or mechanics, to establish themselves in business, or if they are farmers, to open farms and make them productive. Besides, the unprecedented rapidity with which the population increases, keeps up the prices of provisions of all kinds. Labouring under these difficulties, our newly organized churches, with few members and little wealth, find themselves under the necessity of erecting houses of worship, and of supporting their pastors. In multitudes of instances the few families who might form churches, which, in years to come, would be prosperous and strong, are deterred by the difficulty of raising the necessary funds, from even forming an organization. As a matter of necessity, they unite with other evangelical denominations, who have laid a foundation, hoping at a future day to return to the Presbyterian Church. But their children form attachments in the churches with which they have united; and when, at length, a Presbyterian church is established, they remain in those churches. Thus our Church annually loses hundreds of families, who ought to have been the pioneers of Presbyterianism in these new regions. We are not theorizing. Thousand of facts attest the truth of what we say.

In other instances, feeble churches are organized, and the labours of ministers are secured. The Board of Missions, after a little church has drawn largely upon its members, gives the additional amount necessary to pay the salary of the pastor or stated supply. A young minister, having just finished his theological studies, buoyant with hope not yet weakened by disappointment, enters the promising field. But he finds no house of worship; and the church is too feeble to build one. He must preach in a little school-house, if such a privilege can be secured. Or he must occupy the court-house, wretchedly adapted to the comfort of a worshipping congregation. He soon discovers the extreme difficulty of drawing audiences to such places. And then families residing there, or removing to the place, who would prefer identifying themselves with a Presbyterian congregation, unwilling to submit to the inconveniences which surround the Church of their preference, go where they can find better accommodations.

The difficulties are often increased by the fact, that other denominations are before us, and have already comfortable houses of worship. In such cases the persons and the families who identified themselves with our churches, must possess piety enough, and attachment enough to Presbyterianism, to bear present inconvenience, and to prepare for a tedious struggle in the erection of a comfortable church edifice. All others attend churches where these difficulties are not encountered.

Then the pastor, discouraged by the unfavourable prospect of any considerable increase in his church and congregation, and finding his labours almost in vain, accepts a call to some more promising field of labour; and the little flock is left more than ever disheartened. And thus a succession of preachers come and go, each leaving the church in a more hopeless state. Or if the pastor, strong in faith and zeal, resolve to persevere, he accomplishes less in ten years, than he would have accomplished, with a comfortable church edifice, in five; and the church, which would soon have become self-sustaining, must for years remain on the hands of the Board of Missions, and they must pay towards the pastor's salary twice or thrice the sum which would have enabled them to build a church. Meanwhile, the town has grown much larger, expenses have greatly increased; and the little church, even after it has erected a house of worship, encounters difficulties it never would have experienced, if by timely aid it had been enabled to grow with the growth of the community where it is located. Most evidently, therefore, both a regard for the cause of Christ and true economy demand of the older and stronger churches help for the feeble churches in our destitute regions. Indeed to leave them to struggle through the difficulties by which they are surrounded, is to abandon the field to be occupied by others.

2. The work is not only one of necessity and importance, but it is an extensive work. Take a map of these United States, and cast your eye over the territory to be occupied. There are extensive regions in some of the older States, in which Presbyterianism is yet to be planted; whilst in the newer Western, North-western, and Southern States and Territories thousands of church edifices must be built within a few years. And then other States will still be added to those now in existence, which will be rapidly populated, and which must be supplied with churches. The work upon which we have entered, is not to be completed in a few years. Until our immense territory shall be filled with houses of worship, the Committee of Church Extension will find work to do.

With this hasty view of this important subject, permit us, brethren, to make a few suggestions with reference to our duty.

1st. This work has been too long neglected. It therefore now demands prompt, energetic, and liberal action. Aplications for aid are flowing in rapidly upon the committee. And they are generally of a character which makes a strong appeal to our judgment and our feelings. We earnestly desire to be enabled, as soon as possible, to respond favourably. The interests of our Church and of the cause of Christ demand that the means be speedily put into our hands.

2d. The work committed to our hands demands the united co-operation of ministers and churches. Let the Synods and Presbyteries, at their fall meetings, take decided action on the subject. Let pastors not wait to be visited by an agent, but fix a time when they will regularly present this cause to their people. Some time must elapse before a system of agencies can be organized. Indeed it is greatly desirable to dispense, as far as possible, with agencies. Pastors and stated supplies would save to the cause a large amount of funds by acting promptly without waiting for agents. Will they not do so?

3d. As fast as collections shall be taken up, let them be forwarded to the Treasurer of the Committee, Archibald Gamble, Esq.

With this very imperfect presentation of the subject, and hoping to hear favourably from the churches, we commit the cause into their hands, praying that the Head of the Church will incline and enable them to do their whole duty to it.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN IOWA.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D. Cor. Sec'y.

Dear Brother—The first quarter of my present missionary year ended on the 1st inst. As a missionary of the Board, it is proper and due to you, and the cause you represent, to state somewhat in detail the condition and prospects of the field I occupy. Although within the bounds of the Presbytery of which I am a member, I am some two hundred miles from any organized church of our order, except the one lately planted at this place, and about the same distance from any brother of the Presbytery. I occupy therefore a very wide and destitute region, so far as our branch of the Church is concerned. By the direction of our Presbytery, my labours are employed in the south-western counties of the State, as the most important portion of these wide destitutions. The missionary work is certainly one of very great importance, and no fervency, self-denial, or labour can be too great to advance its interests—the interests of the kingdom of our adorable Saviour. I have long been employed in missionary work in other portions of the State, and by the divine blessing, not, I trust, without some good effects, and to a considerable extent; and while the anxieties and wearisome labours of a missionary life are in general great, I feel here a more intense anxiety than I have felt in any previous field of my missionary work.

The field is so large, the conflicting influences so various and powerful, the instrumentality so feeble and solitary, that I am ready to inquire, with some feeling of despondency, how shall these feeble beginnings of "Jacob" arise, under means that appear so inadequate. It appears almost like a "forlorn hope;" but our Lord says, be not faithless, but believing. I do not wish to exaggerate or to assign an undue importance to the missionary work in particular localities. It is a great and noble work in every place and at all times. There are, however, some localities relatively more important, at least more needful, to be promptly attended to, than others. With regard to the south-western corner, or rather quarter of this State, as a missionary field, I will simply state the facts. We have here more than twenty counties, each with an area of more than twenty miles square, embracing a population of not less than thirty, perhaps forty thousand, and rapidly increasing—as fair a portion of the great West as is to be found, containing all the elements necessary to a rapid expansion, in wealth and population. This is the description of this missionary field. As a Church we should at least do our part to win this field to the dominion of our common Lord. Other denominations have their respective systems in operation here, while our Church, as yet in this wide and relatively important missionary region, has only the missionary who now writes to you. Certainly it must be seen that others are needed. I know you can send out no more men than the Church will provide the means of sustaining. Are the means wanting to send more labourers into the harvest? and are the men who should go at the call of their Master, standing all the day idle in the market place! unwilling to encounter the troubles and to participate in the joys of a missionary life? * * *

By God's providence I am placed in the midst of these spiritual desolations, and I trust, by his grace, endeavouring to lay the foundation of a better order of things. How much do we need the fervent wrestling prayers of God's people. This is more needful than "money," or "tongues," or "miracles." Nothing is impossible "to prayer." I ought not to be discouraged, for if I look back upon the past in our own new State, I have seen (by God's mercy both to me and to the Church) our infant church from its origin, and in its progress to the present time, and of which I have been a part from the beginning, rising in a single church planted, then in a Presbytery, organized, then in a second, then in a third, and then united into a Synod, the Synod of Iowa, with its forty ministers, its numerous churches, and church edifices, with its high-schools and colleges, now occupying many interesting points in the eastern portion of our young State, and exerting a hallowed influence. May it not be so in the West? By grace it may.

Much do we owe, under God, of this progress to the fostering hand of your Board, and much will we still owe in its future advance. May you be greatly and permanently honoured as the instrument of blessing to our churches in their feebleness, and to the enlargement of the dominions of our Redeemer, whose right it is to reign over the nations and kingdoms of the earth.

Yours truly, L. G. B.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Dear Brother—It now becomes my duty to forward you my first quarterly report. The commission sent me was duly received. I feel thankful to the Board, and likewise to the committee of Presbytery, for the aid they afforded me, and shall feel bound to double my diligence in the discharge of the duties incumbent on me as a missionary of the cross. I feel encouraged, and hope that the blessing of God may attend my labours and rest on the dear people committed to my care. I feel much encouraged, especially at M———. I commenced my labours there the first of January. I have large congregations, and at times I have discovered a considerable degree of seriousness. I have commenced a regular course of family visitation. We have commenced a Sabbath-school at M——— under encouraging circumstances. I shall add nothing further at present, hoping to have something more interesting at the close of the second quarter.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel, J. H.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year. Provided we have their address.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

STATE OF THE TREASURY.

Some allusion was made to this topic in the last number of the Home and Foreign Record; and an extract added from the Annual Report of the Board, on the aid rendered to candidates. We make a further extract from that Report, having a more direct reference to the amount of funds required to meet the calls on our treasury for the current year.

The Board will require a decided increase of funds to meet the demands of the next year, owing to three causes; first, the increase of new candidates; secondly, the increase in the amount of the appropriations given to the candidates, which increase is of itself about $5000, in the aggregate; thirdly, the small balance in the Treasury, at the beginning of the next year, the balance last year being $7,900; and this year, only $1,900. Owing to these causes, the Board will need an addition of $6,000 or $8,000, to the ordinary average receipts of the last ten years, in the ministerial department. The Board bring this fact distinctly to the notice of the Assembly, in the hope that this knowledge will be the means of enlisting additional effort in securing the necessary funds for our candidates. The Board have made no special appeal to the Churches for some years; but the time has now come for calling attention to the subject. Unless there be an increase in the fund for candidates, it will be impossible for the Board to continue the appropriations to candidates, on the scale recommended by the last Assembly. The large balance of last year was the only basis of allowing an increase of appropriations; but the balance of this year being too small even for successful operations on the former scale of appropriations, it is now absolutely necessary to raise $6,000 or $8,000, additional, or to diminish the appropriations. The Board hope that this simple statement will assist in awakening the zeal and effort required by the emergency.

Upon this subject we submit the following remarks:

1. That the balance in the Treasury a year ago, as compared with that as per last Report, was not owing to the fact that there has been a diminution (there has been a small advance,) in the collections of last year from those of the preceding; but from the fact that the large overplus in the Treasury a year ago was chiefly owing to legacies, which have been less for the last twelve months than formerly.

2. As the increase in the appropriations has exhausted that overplus, and as funds have not come in from the same source to any great extent, and further as no certain calculations can be made concering the future income of the Board, derived from legacies; a necessity is created for an increase in the amount of our annual collections, in order to meet the demands now being made on our Treasury.

3. The experience of the Board during the past year as to the desirableness of the increase of appropriations authorized by the General Assembly, has been decidedly in favour of such increase, and the necessity for their reduction would be viewed with deep regret.

4. This necessity may be avoided in two ways, viz: by the churches making larger collections than formerly for this object, and by having these collections made not in some of our churches only, but in all of them. The last Minutes of the General Assembly report over 3000 churches as belonging to our body, about 700 of which have made collections for the Board of Education during the past year. Suppose 700 others have contributed to the same object through their Presbyteries, or in some other form, which is a large allowance; yet more than one-half of our churches are still left as having collected nothing for this important branch of Christian benevolence. Brethren, is this right? Is it equitable? Is it according to the apostolic direction, that "as ye abound in everything, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also;" [i. e. of liberality.] Why should not all our churches, however small or feeble, contribute something to the several Boards of the Church. Paul commended the churches of Macedonia, because "in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." If this spirit should pervade all our churches, our means would be ample for carrying on our different departments of benevolent effort.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN A YOUNG MAN AND THE LORD OF THE HARVEST.

Rev. Wilbur Fisk, in Baltimore, in 1838, before the Preachers' Aid Society, rehearsed the following dialogue between a preacher and the Lord of the harvest, in which objections to entering into the ministry are plainly stated, and as plainly answered. It is understood he meant himself, as he had many struggles and inward conflicts before he entered into the work of the ministry:

"Christ. Go preach my gospel.

Answer. But, Lord, I have other engagements.

C. You are not your own, you are bought with a price.

A. But, Lord, I have been preparing myself for another profession. I have been struggling for an education. I have high prospects before me, &c.

C. What have you that you have not received?

A. Lord, I have strong domestic feelings; I hope one day to have a family and home of my own.

C. He that loveth house or lands, wife or children, more than me, is not worthy of me.

A. Lord, I have aged parents, and I am an only son. Filial love and duty require that I should look after them.

C. He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me.

A. Lord, is there no excuse? May not another answer?

C. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

A. At least let me first stop and bury my father and mother.

C. Let the dead bury their dead.

A. At any rate I must wait awhile, and acquire some property, &c.

C. He that putteth his hand to the plough, and looketh back, is not fit for the kingdom of heaven.

A. Lord, I cannot go.

C. Wo unto you if you preach not the gospel.

A. But, Lord, wilt thou not pity a poor helpless wretch who begs for an excuse as one would plead for his life?

C. Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be made rich."

Here he said the dialogue ended. The young man covered his face with his hands, and bursting into tears, exclaimed,—

"Nay, but I yield, I yield,
I can hold out no more."

The bond was signed and sealed, and the youth was consigned over, soul and body, to the Church. The next thing I saw of him he was treading a pathless forest among the Green Mountains bordering upon the Canada line, driving his horse before him, because of the roughness of the wilderness, cheerful as an angel on an errand of mercy. And I heard his song, with which he made the rugged mountain tops that hung over his path reverberate. And what, sir, do you think it was?

"No foot of land do I possess,
Nor cottage in this wilderness,
A poor wayfaring man;
I lodge awhile in tents below,
Or gladly wander to and fro,
Till I my Canaan gain.

Nothing on earth I call my own,
A stranger, to the world unknown,
I all their goods despise;
I trample on their whole delight,
And seek a city out of sight,
A city in the skies."

NOT TO MYSELF ALONE.

"Not to myself alone,"
The little opening flower transported cries;
"Not to myself alone I bud and bloom;
With fragrant breath the breezes I perfume,
And gladden all things with my rainbow dyes;
The bee comes sipping, every eventide,
His dainty fill;
The butterfly within my cup doth hide
From threat'ning ill."

"Not to myself alone,"
The circling star with honest pride doth boast;
"Not to myself alone I rise and set;
I write upon night's coronet of jet
His power and skill who formed our myriad host;
A friendly beacon at heaven's open gate.
I gem the sky,
That man might ne'er forget, in every fate,
His hope on high."

"Not to myself alone,"
The heavy-laden bee doth murmuring hum;
"Not to myself alone from flower to flower
I roam the wood, the garden and the bower,
And to the hive at evening weary come;
For man, for man, the luscious food I pile;
With busy care,
Content if he repay my cheerless toil
With scanty share."

"Not to myself alone."
The soaring bird with lusty pinion sings—
"Not to myself alone I raise my song—
I cheer the drooping with my warbling tongue
And bear the mourner on my viewless wings—
I bid the hymnless churl my anthem learn,
And God adore—
I call the worldling from his dross to turn,
And sing and soar."

"Not to myself alone,"
The streamlet whispers on its pebbly way—
"Not to myself alone I sparkling glide—
I scatter health and life on every side,
And strew the fields with herb and flow'ret gay;
I sing unto the common bleak and bare,
My gladsome tune—
I sweeten and refresh the languid air
In drouthy June."

"Not to myself alone"—
O, man, forget not thou—earth's honoured priest,
Its tongue, its soul, its life, its pulse, its heart,
In earth's great chorus to sustain thy part!
Chiefest of guests at love's ungrudging feast,
Play not the niggard, spurn thy native clod,
And self disown—
Live to thy neighbour, live unto thy God—
Not to thyself alone!

COVENANT BLESSINGS.

As to my family, says Dr. Brace, I often think of the patriarch's admiration, when "the angels of God met him at Mahanaim." "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth which thou hast showed unto thy servant: for with my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become two bands." I look around upon twenty-eight souls which God has given to me, those that have been, and those that are now the subject of my joys, my anxieties, my prayers and my hopes. My children were all received into the Church of Christ, and more than half of my grandchildren have already joined themselves to the Lord in a public profession. Four of my sons were graduated of Yale College; one at Williams College. Two sons in-law are in the Christian ministry, Rev. Samuel N. Shepherd, pastor of the church in Madison, Connecticut, and Rev. John Todd, D. D., pastor of a church in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. One son died pastor of a church in Lanesboro', Massachusetts. One died at home just as he had arrived at age. Two sons are engaged in their professions. Four of my grandsons, died in childhood. And now the mother of my family has just been taken before me. I may say that my domestic happiness has been as full as it could be in a sinful, dying state—children dutiful; grandchildren kind: ministers all of one sentiment, in the Puritan faith. I have great confidence in the covenant of God with his people, and I look for his covenant blessing upon the latest of my posterity. "I will be a God to thee and thy seed after thee."

MARTIN LUTHER.

A paragraph has been going the rounds of the press, stating that the last lineal male descendant of Martin Luther was, a few years ago, received back into the Romish communion. The Bedford, Pa., Inquirer says that Mr. John J. Luther, now residing in that place, is a lineal descendant of the great reformer, of the eighth generation, and his family consists of himself, wife, three sons, one daughter, and he is yet in the prime of life. He has also five brothers and one sister residing in Saxe Coburg, Germany, all with families. There is also one other family of the descendants of his great forefather, in Saxe Coburg, and a number of families in the State of Bohemia, Germany. There is also another family of his descendants (Dr. Luther's) in Harrisburg, Pa. They are all, both in this country and Germany, connected with the Lutheran branch of the Protestant Church, and from present appearances it will be a long time until the family runs out, or the "last lineal male descendant" will be "received back into the Romish communion." Within the knowledge of Mr. Luther, not one of his friends has ever connected himself with the Romish church.

SKETCH OF LUTHER.

A coarse, ragged, plebeian face it was, with great crags of cheek bones—a wild amount of passionate energy and appetite! But in his dark eyes were floods of sorrow; and deepest melancholy, sweetness, and mystery were all there. Often did they seem to meet in Luther the very opposite poles in man's character. He, for example, of whom Richter had said that his words were half battles; he, when he first began to preach, suffered unheard-of agony. "O Dr. Staupitz, Dr. Staupitz," said he to the Vicar-General of his order, "I cannot do it. I shall die in three months. Indeed I cannot do it." Dr. Staupitz, a wise and considerate man, said upon this, "Well, sir Martin, if you must die, you must—but remember that they need good heads up yonder, too. So preach, man, preach—and then live or die, as it happens." So Luther preached and lived, and he became, indeed, one great whirlwind of energy, to work without resting in this world; and also, before he died, he wrote very many books—books in which the true man was—for in the midst of all they denounced and cursed, what touches of tenderness lay! Look at the Table-talk, for example. We see in it a little bird, having alighted at sunset, on the bough of a tree that grew in Luther's garden. Luther looked up at it and said: "That little bird, how it cowers down its wings, sleeps there so still and fearless, though over it are the infinite starry spaces, and the great blue depths of immensity! Yet it fears not—it is at home. The God that made it too is there!" The same gentle spirit of lyrical admiration is in other passages of his books. Coming home from Leipsic in the autumn season, he breaks forth into living wonder at the fields of corn. "How it stands there," he says, "erect on its beautiful taper stem—and bending its beautiful golden head with bread in it—the bread of man sent to him yet another year!" Such thoughts as these are as little windows through which we gaze into the interior of the serene depths of Martin Luther's soul, and see visible across its tempests and clouds, a whole heaven of light and love. He might have painted, he might have sung—could have been beautiful like Raphael, great like Michael Angelo.—Carlyle.

CALVIN.

Of Calvin, Mr. Bancroft writes as follows:

"If personal considerations chiefly win applause, then no one merits our sympathy and our admiration more than Calvin; the young exile from France, who achieved an immortality of fame before he was twenty-eight years of age; now boldly reasoning with the king of France for religious liberty, now venturing as the apostle of truth to carry the new doctrines into the heart of Italy, and hardly escaping from the fury of papal persecution; the purest writer, the keenest dialectician of his century; pushing free inquiry to its utmost verge, and yet valuing inquiry solely as the means of arriving at fixed conclusions. The light of his genius scattered the mask of darkness which superstition had held for centuries before the brow of religion. His probity was unquestioned, his morals spotless. His only happiness consisted in his 'task of glory and of good;' for sorrow found its way into all his private relations. He was an exile from his country; he became for a season an exile from his place of exile. As a husband he was doomed to mourn the premature loss of his wife; as a father, he felt the bitter pang of burying his only child. Alone in the world, alone in a strange land, he went forward in his career with serene resignation and inflexible firmness; no love of ease turned him aside from his vigils; no fear of danger relaxed the nerve of his eloquence; no bodily infirmities checked the incredible activity of his mind; and so he continued, year after year, solitary and feeble, yet toiling for humanity, till after a life of glory, he bequeathed to his personal heirs, a fortune, in books and furniture, stocks and money, not exceeding two hundred dollars, and to the world a purer reformation, a republican spirit in religion, with the kindred principles of republican liberty."

LIVE FOR GOD.

For as there is no true foundation for comfort in life but in the assurance that a wise and good God governeth the world, so the more we find out God in everything, the more we apply to him in all our actions, the more we conform to his will, the more we act according to his wisdom, and imitate his goodness, by so much the more do we enjoy God, and increase all that is happy and comfortable in human life.

FOUR GOOD HABITS.

There were four good habits a wise and good man earnestly recommended in his counsel, and also by his own example, and which he considered essentially necessary for the management of temporal concerns. These are Punctuality, Accuracy, Steadiness, and Dispatch. Without the first of these, time is wasted; without the second, mistakes the most hurtful to our own credit and interest, and that of others, may be committed; without the third, nothing can be well done; and without the fourth, opportunities of great advantage are lost which it is impossible to recall.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

A PIOUS TRAINING THE CHILD'S BEST INHERITANCE.

A gentleman now living once observed to us that he could trace back his pious ancestry through an unbroken line for one hundred and fifty years, and that he regarded it as a greater privilege to him than any earthly distinction which could be named. If with his genealogy he possessed also a particular family history, we doubt not he would find that during all that period care had been taken to train up each successive generation in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The pious dedication of children to God in the ordinance of baptism, accompanied and succeeded by earnest believing prayer, proper parental discipline and faithful religious instruction and example, will seldom fail in securing for our families and descendants the inheritance of grace. God's covenant promise is, "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee;" and he always fulfils his promise, agreeably to its design, and on the conditions involved in it. A pleasing illustration of this is given in the case of Mr. William Hempstead, of Galena, Illinois, from whose funeral discourse, preached by his pastor, the Rev. H. J. Coe, we make the following extract:

Just before his death, twenty-three years ago, the father of Mr. Hempstead said, "I shall soon be laid aside. My work for the Church is almost done. My two youngest sons, though good moral young men, are not in the Church, but I have no more doubt that God will yet raise them up to fill my place, than that in answer to a father's fervent prayers, I was called to take his. They are children of the covenant." To-day we record the exact fulfilment of this faith-inspired prediction. The father was one of the founders, original elders, and, till death, chief supporters of the First Protestant and Presbyterian church in St. Louis. Those sons, though years went by, and both reached the prime of life, and the strong will of mature manhood, with hearts unchanged, were in due time brought within the kingdom of God. There, both were soon numbered among the founders, original elders, and chief supporters of churches; the oldest being one of the first elders of the Second, and the youngest of the South Presbyterian church of this city. Truly God is faithful to his covenant. The blessing of a pious ancestry is a real blessing. We may doubt it; we may abuse it; but it is a precious privilege to be a child of godly parents. It is better to leave a good name behind for our children than wealth. The one may corrupt and destroy; the other will prove a protecting shield. "The seed of the righteous," says Revelation, "shall be delivered, and his offspring shall inherit the earth."

A MOTHER'S RELIGIOUS INFLUENCE.

Every Christian possesses some influence, which he is bound to exert in favour of Christ and his cause. Its sphere may be large or small, according to circumstances; but within that sphere he is held responsible by his divine Lord, to do what he can to induce others to become religious. There is one circle at least, in which all Christians without exception, may be heard and felt; viz., at the domestic fireside. Husbands and wives, parents and children, brothers and sisters, may mutually influence each other; differing of course in the manner of exerting it according to their respective stations; but still (if they employ it faithfully and discreetly) rendering an efficient service to the cause of Christ, and saving (instrumentally) the souls of dear relatives.

Especially should Christian parents endeavour to influence their children to become pious. A sweet little boy, after reading Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, said to his grandmother, "Grandma, which of the characters do you like best?" She replied, "Christian, of course; he is the hero of the story." He responded, "I like Christiana best, because when Christian set out on his pilgrimage he went alone; but when Christiana started she took the children with her." It is better for parents to go alone than not go at all; but what additional interest it imparts to the scene, to have their little ones associated with them in their heavenly journey!

In the case of Bunyan's pilgrim, he not only left his children behind, but his wife also; though not without endeavouring to prevail upon them to accompany him. But his efforts were ineffectual. They treated his warnings very much as Lot's sons-in-law treated his, when he warned them to leave Sodom. "He seemed as one that mocked to his sons-in-law." When Christian became distressed about his soul (as this "prince of dreamers" informs us), "he brake his mind to his wife and children, and thus he began to talk to them: 'O dear wife!' said he, 'and you the children of my bowels, I, your dear friend, am in myself undone, by reason of a burden that lieth hard upon me; moreover, I am certainly informed that this our city will be burnt with fire from heaven, in which fearful overthrow, both myself, with thee my wife, and you, my sweet babes, shall miserably come to ruin, except (the which yet I see not) some way of escape can be found, whereby we may be delivered.' At this his relations were sore amazed; not for that they believed that what he had said to them was true, but because they thought that some frenzy distemper had got into his head." . . The day following "he set to talking to them again, but they began to be hardened." Thus it was not till they had refused to listen to his words, that he under the direction of Evangelist, ran out of the city alone, not only without the encouragement but against the remonstrance of his family. "He had not run far from his own door, when his wife and children perceiving it, began to cry after him to return; but he put his fingers in his ears, and ran on, crying, 'Life! life! eternal life!'"

We have here a humiliating example of a counter-influence exerted by one parent against the other; refusing herself to become religious, and preventing her children from taking this course. It is much easier to influence a child to continue in sin than to turn from it to God. But we have also on the other hand, in the pious life and happy death of Christian, an illustration of the power of such a life with its glorious termination, to influence survivors to seek and serve the Lord. Though Christiana and her children refused at first to follow the example of the husband and father, his holy character and heavenly reward became in the end the means, under God, of opening their eyes to the misery of their condition, and their hearts to receive the Saviour. They pursued the same course he had done before them; and though she had now become a widow, and her children orphans, and could not therefore enjoy his society and counsel, the savour of his pious example was like fragrance in their path, and contributed to cheer them on in their pilgrimage. Far better would it have been for them all, if they had entered upon the divine life together; and perhaps this would have been the case, if Christian had persisted still longer to warn them of their danger, and been more earnest and urgent in his expostulations with them to turn from sin and engage in the service of God. But though he was apparently compelled to leave his family behind for the time being; it was only temporary. As the head of the family, his influence was ultimately blessed to the saving benefit of all its members. This should encourage a father or mother who in some instances is the only pious member of the household, to continue to hope, pray, and labour for the conversion of the others, who in due time, though not immediately, may, like Christiana and her children, enter upon the divine life, as the fruit of those labours and prayers.

While, however, we believe Christiana and her children were largely indebted to Christian for that instrumentality by which they were saved, we approve of the sentiment, and admire the ingenious thought of the little boy, before alluded to, that "when she went on her Christian pilgrimage, she took her children with her." How sweet and precious to them was their mother's influence. Though at first it was adverse to their spiritual interests, she now made amends for that, by her successful exertions to lead them to Christ, and through him to heaven. As they had once been her followers in sin, they now became her fellow-travellers to the city of God. She pointed out the way and walked in it; and they, influenced by her example and drawn by the sweet cords of maternal love, followed on with cheerful and joyful steps, mutual helpers of each other's joy, and a mutual solace in times of trial. Though Christian was in advance of them, they overtook him at last on the other side of the river of death, and were there reunited, as an unbroken family, in the mansion of eternal joy. How beautifully does this illustrate the influence of a religious life upon those around us, especially upon members of the same family. Even if called for a while to travel alone, we must prayerfully bear in mind our unconverted relatives, and connect with our prayers other scriptural means for their conversion. Some of them will ere long, through divine grace, accompany us; others will follow after.—Presbyterian Magazine.

PATERNAL AFFECTION.

A little girl after witnessing the affection of a father towards his child, observed, "O, I wish my father would love me as N's father does her." And why did he not? She was a lovely girl, and might therefore easily win the affection of a person who did not stand thus related to her; and much more of her own father. But did not the father love her? He doubtless did; yet his manner towards her was not affectionate, but harsh and severe. Hence the inference of the child was natural, and in her artless simplicity she gave expression to her feelings in the presence of a friend who repeated it to the writer. How much is sometimes lost by a father in the government of a child (a mother is less liable to this fault) by the absence of that sweetness of manner which wins the affections. A stern, forbidding demeanour may excite fear and overawe and subdue the child by the force of authority, but the kind of subjection produced by this treatment is far from being filial, and the effect upon the child's temper cannot be otherwise than injurious. "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged."

FORMATION OF CHARACTER.

There is a law of the moral government of the universe, which ordains that all that is great, and valuable, and permanent in character must be the result, not of theoretical teaching or natural aspiration; of spontaneous resolve or uninterrupted success; but of trial, of suffering, of the fiery furnace of temptation, of the dark hours of disappointment and defeat. The character of the man is distinguishable from the character of the child that he once was, chiefly by the effects of this universal law. There are the same natural impulses, the same mental, moral, and physical constitution with which he was born into the world. What is it that has given him the strength, the fortitude, the unchanging principle, and the moral and intellectual power which he exhibits in after years? It has not been constant pleasure and success, nor unmingled joy. It has been the hard discipline of pain and sorrow, the stern teachings of experience, the struggle against the consequences of its own errors, and the chastisement inflicted by its own faults.

SCOTLAND'S DEBT TO JOHN KNOX.

Honour to all the brave and true; everlasting honour to brave old Knox, one of the truest of the true! that in the moment when he and his cause, amid civil broils, convulsion and confusion, were still but struggling for life, he sent the schoolmaster forth to all corners and said, "Let the people be taught;" this is but one, and indeed an inevitable and comparatively inconsiderable item in his great message to men. This great message Knox did deliver with a man's voice and strength, and found a people to believe him. The Scotch character originates in many circumstances; first of all, in the Saxon stuff there was to work on; but next, and beyond all else except that, in the Presbyterian gospel of John Knox.—Thomas Carlyle.

EDUCATION IS FORTUNE.

"Give your children fortune without education, and at least one half of the number will go down to the tomb of oblivion—perhaps to ruin. Give them education, and they will be a fortune to themselves and country. It is an inheritance worth more than gold—for it buys true honour—they can never spend nor lose it, and through life it proves a friend—in death a consolation."

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, New York, Sept. 13th, 1855.

China.—The most recent letters from China are dated Shanghai, June 8th, and Canton, June 1st. The missionaries at Canton were well, and were pursuing their labours as usual; but events of a painful nature were transpiring in the community around them. "The number of executions," remarks our letter, "are awful. Every person suspected of having been formerly connected in any way with the insurgents, are seized and beheaded without ceremony. Truly the judgments of God are abroad in the land."

We are sorry to learn, through our Shanghai letter, of the affliction of Mr. and Mrs. Culbertson in the removal by death of their youngest child.

Mr. Culbertson's health continues infirm, and there is very little hope now of his entire recovery, without a sea-voyage and a change of climate. He had nearly completed the translation of the New Testament into the Chinese, and he ardently hoped that he might be permitted to finish it, before withdrawing from his post for the purpose of recruiting his impaired health. We have heard from the Ningpo Mission, through a letter from Mr. Rankin, written from Shanghai of the 8th June, where he had arrived a few days previously from Ningpo. He remarks, "When I left, there were a number of inquirers, among others several in the girls' school, three of whom had applied for baptism. The school was never in so interesting a state." Mr. Happer and family, who returned to this country on account of Mrs. Happer's health, arrived in New York in September. We are glad to find that Mrs. Happer's health has been greatly improved by the sea-voyage, and they now indulge the hope of being able to return to their work next spring. Mr. Happer has been absent from the country about eleven years.

India.—Our latest letters from India are, Lodiana, July 19; Saharunpur, June 16th; Ambala, June 18th; Sabathu, June 6th; Futtehgurh, June 30th; Agra, July 2d; and Futtehpore, June 16th. We are under the painful necessity of recording the death of Mrs. Orbison. This painful event occurred at sea on the 20th of May, on the way from Calcutta to Penang. For a more full account of this afflictive dispensation, we would refer our readers to a letter from Mr. Orbison in the present number of the Record. On the 3d of July, the Rev. Charles W. Forman was married to Margaret, daughter of the Rev. John Newton.

Rev. D. E. Campbell, writing from Futtehgurh, remarks, "One of the boys, whom I mentioned in my last, comes to me occasionally for Bible instruction. His father will not allow him to come to school, but he manages to pay me an occasional visit for religious instruction. He seems to be thoroughly convinced of his need of the Saviour, and expresses a determination to unite with his people. But he has much opposition to contend with, and there are great temptations in his way. We can only pray that God may bring him off conqueror over all, through Jesus Christ."

Mr. Jamieson mentions his having had the privilege of baptizing and admitting to the church a young man of the Brahman Caste, and speaks of him as an amiable and promising young man. Our letter from Futtehgurh mentions that five recent converts were to be received to the communion of the church on the coming sacramental Sabbath.

The Rev. Gopee Nath Nundy, from his station at Futtehpore, remarks, "Our schools and other missionary operations are carried on as usual. We are thankful to say that the Lord has blessed our labours in some respects. On the 20th of May, the last Lord's day, three Brahmans were baptized at mission chapel." A full account of these converts will be given in a subsequent number of one of the missionary journals.

We are sorry to add that Mr. Nundy was suffering from a complaint not well understood, but causing severe pain in his head, and which he feared might suddenly terminate his life. He expresses a spirit of Christian submission to the will of God, and of trust in his grace under this affliction. We sincerely hope that he may soon find relief from it.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Monrovia as late as the 14th of July, announcing the safe arrival of Rev. Messrs. Wilson and White and their wives, after a short and pleasant voyage of thirty-four days. The Alexander High School was re-opened, and under circumstances of promise. Mr. White remarks, "It becomes my happy privilege to address you from the shores of Africa. A kind providence has watched over us amid the dangers and the perils of the deep; and after a comparatively brief voyage of thirty-four days, we arrive safe in Monrovia. With gratitude we would mention the goodness of God since we left the shores of America. Concerning the country, I can say but little, as my experience and observation are limited. We find a very pleasant and agreeable home with Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, and I hope we may be spared to labour in unison and harmony for the promotion of truth and the cause of Christianity. I have preached a few times since I have been here. Last Sabbath was communion in our church, and we had a profitable and precious season. My own heart was deeply affected while we contemplated the dying love of the Saviour, and I esteem it a great privilege to commemorate his death on these benighted shores."

Mission to the Chinese in California.—A letter has been received from Mr. Speer, of July 31st. There had been some sickness in his family, but all were well at the date of his letter, and his missionary labours were carried on as usual.

South America.—A letter has been received from Mr. L'Hombral, our missionary at Buenos Ayres, of the 14th June. The following extracts from his letter will be read with lively interest. After mentioning the disorders of the place in consequence of wars with the Indians, he remarks, "Our work, however, goes on. I go daily to visit our people and exhort them to bow submissively to the hand which strikes them. * * * Now that I can speak the Spanish, I mingle every day with the natives, showing them that Protestants are worthy of the name of Christians, which thing, as I have told you before, was not supposed by them. * * * Since my arrival here, I have performed five marriage ceremonies, and baptized nine children. Fourteen persons (eight men and six women) have passed from the Roman Catholic flock to the flock of the gospel."

Indian Tribes.—Letters have been received from the Chippewa Mission, August 13th; Iowa and Sac, August 17th; Creek, August 20th; Seminole, August 4th; Chickasaw, August 10th; Choctaw, August 18th.

At Grand Traverse, Mr. Dougherty writes, "Our communion Sabbath was a day of refreshing. Six natives were added to the communion, and two whites on certificate of dismission from other churches.

Mr. H. W. Guthrie, a licentiate preacher of the Presbytery of Alleghany, spent four months in this mission under appointment of the committee. He conducted public worship with the help of an interpreter, and visited the Indians at their houses. His labours were full of interest to himself, and not without benefit, we trust, to the Indians and the members of the mission, who would be glad to have him permanently associated with them in their work. For the present he returns to the Seminary to complete his course of study. Mr. Irvin had just returned from a visit to the Otoe Indians at their new settlement. He estimates the distance from the Iowa mission about ninety miles, supposes the number of the Otoes to be at least seven hundred, among whom are at least one hundred children who ought to be gathered into a school. Mr. Lilley and his family arrived at their station among the Seminoles on the 29th July, and found all well at the station. At their communion the early part of the month of August, four Seminoles were admitted to the church. A very large number of persons were present. He writes, "Our little church is still prosperous. The Lord continues still to be in our midst, and we have reason to hope more good will be done. May many of this poor people find peace and plenty in believing in Him, who gives the bread and water of eternal life to those who ask in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." He mentions the peaceful death of an aged woman, who had been sick for a long time.

The mission family at Wapanucka were all well. One of the teachers remarks, "we are spending the vacation very quietly and pleasantly, hoping to regain our strength. There is such unanimity among the members of the mission, that I am looking forward with great pleasure to the time when the children return and we shall again engage in our labours. * * * Mr. Wilson has preached twice about three miles from us, in a pleasant grove. Several of us accompanied him the last time, and with the Indians in the neighbourhood sat upon logs during the service. Hymns of praise have never sounded more sweetly to me than in such places as these, 'God's first temples.'"

THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH.

We take the liberty of inserting in our columns the following paragraphs. They were written by a friend now in Europe, whose judgment and information give the highest value to his views.

"My visit to the Valleys was long, and accordingly interesting. We were received by Dr. Revel, and every other individual we met, with great cordiality. Dr. R. accompanied me in a three days' excursion through three of the valleys. I have seen nothing which did not confirm the most favourable accounts we have had of the religious state of the pastors and people. They are now perfectly unfettered; and nothing appears to be wanting to render the Waldensian Church a blessing, but the pouring out of the Spirit of God upon the means she has in her possession. The people have been so long oppressed and deceived by their priestly rulers, that they seem afraid of moving out of their valleys, either in the way of emigration or of missionary operations; but the greater part of the pastors are of a different spirit, they are earnest missionary men, and ready, as far as means and opportunity are afforded, to carry the gospel beyond their limits. Such openings are not wanting." . . . [Our correspondent gives some details here which will be of much use to the committee, but which we deem it prudent not to publish, and then adds:] "There are Vaudois scattered everywhere in the large towns of Sardinia and Tuscany and in the south of France, all of whom ought to have, and in Sardinia and France all of whom may have pastors—who can indirectly act upon Italy."

VISIT TO THE INDIAN MISSIONS IN KANSAS, NEBRASKA, AND ON LAKE MICHIGAN, BY WALTER LOWRIE, ESQ., SECRETARY OF THE BOARD.

On the 1st of July, we spent a pleasant and profitable Sabbath at the Iowa mission. On Monday Mr. Allan left us, to make the necessary purchases at St. Louis, and remove his family from Michigan to Bellevue. Mr. Irwin and I proceeded to make arrangements to visit the Kickapoos. On calling at the agency we found that Mr. Baldwin, though still weak, and Col. Vanderslice, were prepared to go with us. Two days were required to give notice to the tribe to meet with us, and on Thursday we set out, the agents and their company, in a carriage, made for their prairie excursions, and drawn by four mules, and Mr. Irwin and myself in the same carriage and horses that took us to Bellevue. The course lay across the prairies; and Col. Vanderslice, who alone knew the way, missed the direction at one point, which caused us a long and useless travel of three hours and a half. At sundown, having travelled thirty-five miles, we reached the forks of Grasshopper Creek, the place appointed for the meeting, and encamped in a large and beautiful grove of black walnut trees. We spent all day on Friday waiting for the Indians to come in, and it was nearly sundown before they assembled. As my arrangements were made to return to the mission on Saturday, the agents kindly permitted me to bring my business first before them. On Saturday after breakfast they met at our tent, and I explained to them at some length, through their interpreter, what we were doing among the other tribes, and the results of our labours thus far—that what had been done for other tribes could be done for them—that I had been told there were wise men, and able chiefs among them, and if so, they must know that their present mode of life could not continue—that the white man was on every side of them, and their hunting was nearly over, and unless they became like the white man, in knowledge, and cultivating the soil, they must very soon perish—that we were prepared to teach their children, and to raise them up to be like white men and white women, and also to instruct themselves in the knowledge of the great God, who made both the red and the white man, and of Jesus Christ, who came into this world to redeem and save such sinful men as we all were.

After conferring among themselves, one of the chiefs replied:—That they knew I was their friend—that they knew I had spoken the truth—that they knew their condition was just such as I had described it—and that I had given them the very best advice, and they were very thankful I had come and spoken to them. But they could not decide any question in regard to the school—that they were in much trouble—that the reservation marked out for them was not the one they thought was mentioned in the treaty—that their minds were disturbed about it, and till it was settled they could not think of anything else, but they were glad I had come to see them.

I told them I had nothing to do with their reservation, but their great father, the President, would do them full justice, for both he and their agent were anxious to see them improve—that as they believed I had told them the truth, I warned them against any delay in doing good to their children; but the time was up, and I must leave them. At parting, they all shook me by the hand. We left at 10 A. M., and reached the mission before night. In a direct line the distance was but twenty-two miles.

The Kickapoos are an interesting tribe of Indians. In former years two attempts were made to have a day-school among them, but in each case the result was a failure. At present they are without any religious instruction, or education of any kind. Their present difficulty about their reservation is much aggravated by the intrigues of white men.

On leaving Bellevue, I called on the agent of the Ottoes, and learned from him that they had not yet removed to their reservation. I was anxious to have visited them at their new home, and to have selected the site for the mission. But as they were not there, I was obliged to omit this visit, and leave it to Mr. Irvin, who will see them as soon as they reach their new home. The distance from the Iowa mission is about one hundred miles, and they can be reached from that point with more facility than from any other.

At intervals I had visited the schools, and found them in the same prosperous state in which I found them when here in October last. There are children from eight different tribes here, and all are exceedingly promising. Kirwan and Rebecka have been united in marriage, and will soon commence housekeeping near the mission. The good conduct of the scholars, especially those more advanced, and the entire contrast they present, when compared with their untaught neighbours, arrest strongly the attention of the Indians, and stop the mouths of the incredulous and scoffing white man, and afford a complete answer to the infidel philosophy, that it is impossible to change the habits and condition of the Indian.

On the Sabbath the attendance of white settlers is from fifty to sixty. Instead of the usual sermon by Mr. Irwin, at the earnest request of the mission families, I made an address on Foreign Missions. On week days, and on the Sabbath, I had talked to the scholars, encouraging them to persevere and press forward in obtaining knowledge, and especially that knowledge which would make them wise unto eternal life.

Having now finished all I could do for the missions in Kansas and Nebraska, we set out early on Monday. Our stay at this mission, though longer than we expected, seemed very short, when we came to bid farewell to these kind and respected friends, and these dear children, whom we may never see again. Mr. Irvin brought us to Donophan, on the river, seventeen miles from the mission, and in an hour afterwards we were on board the Polar Star, one of the best of the Missouri river packets. We had a pleasant sail to St. Louis, where we arrived on Thursday. On Friday afternoon we left for Chicago, and reached that city at 9 A. M. on Saturday, where we were detained four days before getting a passage to Mackinac, and three days there before getting on a small propeller, running to Little and Grand Traverse bays. We left Mackinac Saturday afternoon, and it was just breaking day on Sabbath morning when we reached the station at Middle Village. Mr. and Mrs. Turner were rejoiced to see us. Mr. W. Guthrie who had come out to spend the summer in missionary labour, was also here. Owing to the absence of his interpreter, he could not preach to the Indians, but he preached in English to a small audience in the school-room. In the afternoon some twenty Indians, of different ages, who have some knowledge of English, met as a Sabbath-school. I had a class of five men who read quite well in the New Testament, and who listened with deep attention to my explanation of the chapters read.

I visited the school on Monday. The usual attendance is thirty and upward. As in similar cases, the pupils make but slow progress till they learn to speak and understand English. They are very attentive to their books, and under the circumstances their progress has been good. The children lodge at home, and at noon they receive a lunch of plain food. This no doubt makes them more punctual in their attendance, which indeed is quite regular.

On reaching this station I was much impressed with the spirit of self-denial needed to sustain the missionaries in these solitary and distant stations. On the border of a scattered Indian village, in the midst of a dense forest, mostly of beech and sugar-tree, is a plain frame house, a school-house, and a small enclosure for a garden. The whole opening, less than two acres, seems to be cut out of the solid wood, so dense is the forest. This is the residence of a missionary and his wife. Their nearest white neighbours are at the station of Little Traverse on the South, eighteen miles distant, and Mackinac on the North, forty-five miles distant. In the winter there is scarcely any communication, even with the nearest points. Surely the people of God ought not to forget, in their prayers, these labourers in the wilderness, nor consider it a burden to sustain them in their work of love.

Having engaged two Indians and a fishing boat, at 11 A. M. on Monday, we bade farewell to Mrs. Turner and Mr. Guthrie, and in company with Mr. Turner, set out for Little Traverse, some twenty miles distant by water. Part of the way the boat was drawn by a horse on the shore, but after six miles a breeze sprung up, and the small sails being spread to the wind, we were speedily at the end of our little voyage. Here also we found the mission families well, and much rejoiced at our coming.

During our stay I spent as much time in the school as was necessary. Having been commenced sooner than the school at Middle Village, the children are further advanced. In other respects, these schools resemble each other, and both are quite encouraging. The usual attendance here is thirty, and the scholars are punctual in coming to school. In both schools, religious instruction occupies a prominent place. On Tuesday afternoon, according to previous notice, the Indians in the settlement, men, women and children, assembled at the school-house, where I made them a long talk, which was interpreted by Mr. Porter. They all appeared much gratified that the meeting had taken place; especially was this the case, with the members of the church.

The whole time of an ordained minister of the gospel is greatly needed for the Indians in the vicinity of Little Traverse and Middle Village. Several other villages are in the neighbourhood, or not far distant, with a population in all of nearly a thousand souls, who could be reached by the labours of the missionary. In some of these villages the Roman Catholics have resident priests, and sometimes they have schools, in which the Indian language only is taught. Much to the credit of their good sense, these Indians see that the greatest want of their children is an English education. The opposition of the Romish priests to our schools has recoiled upon themselves. A spirit of inquiry has taken place among this people; they wish their children to learn English, to be able to read English books, and newspapers, that they may know what is doing around them; and they think it is strange that the priests denounce the Bible as a bad book, not fit for the people or their children to read. It suits the policy of Rome to withhold the Bible, and keep them thus in ignorance, but they have begun to break these fetters, and the time is at hand when, with suitable teachers, they will free themselves from a bondage so much at war with the teachings of the Bible, and so inconsistent with the spirit of our free institutions.

On Wednesday at noon, the propeller by appointment called for us, and we left Little Traverse, for the mission on Grand Traverse. The school-house is half a mile from the border of the bay, and the whole school, and pretty nearly all the Indians in the settlement, accompanied us to the boat, and with much feeling bade us farewell. At 9 P. M. we reached the mission at Grove Hill, and, as at other places, were joyfully received by our friends there.

The buildings are situate in a grove, on the west bank of Grand Traverse Bay, some seventy feet above the water. The view to the east is exceedingly beautiful. There are in the school twenty-five boys, and as many girls. In one feature it is different from all our other boarding-schools. About one half of the boys, and the girls, are young men and young women. These large scholars, greatly to their credit, are extremely anxious to get an English education. They are respectful to their teachers, pleasant in their intercourse with each other, submit to all the rules of the institution, and cheerfully employ the allotted hours for labour, in the fields for the boys, or in household work for the girls.

Miss Isbell teaches the girls, and Mr. Porter the boys. Both in and out of school the scholars of both sexes are under the best instruction and training. The influence of the ladies of the mission is clearly seen in the improvement of the young women and girls, nor is the improvement less seen in the young men and boys. The general care of the Institution by Mr. and Mrs. Dougherty, is all that could be desired. The different departments move on without friction, and to outward appearance, almost without an effort. Here, too, as at all our Indian schools, religious instruction holds its due and proper place. May the prayers of God's people be unceasingly offered for his blessing on these institutions.

When we reached the mission, one of the boys was very ill. It was not supposed that he was near death, but on Friday he felt worse than usual, and requested that the boys should come to his room, and sing hymns with him. They all came, and whilst they were singing, he quietly breathed his last. He was a quiet pleasant boy, fond of his books, and fond of singing hymns, in his own language and in English. His funeral took place on Saturday, attended by the mission and the scholars, and many of the Indians in the vicinity.

The usual religious exercises on the Sabbath, are a sermon in the forenoon, and Sabbath-school in the afternoon. Mr. Dougherty was anxious that I should say something to the Indian congregation, and to the scholars in the afternoon. The audience consisted, besides the white families, of about one hundred and fifty Indians, including the scholars of the school. I spoke to them for an hour, but half that time was taken up in interpreting what I said. Mr. Dougherty then concluded the services by reading a chapter in the New Testament, in English and Chippewa, with explanatory remarks in both languages, by himself and the interpreter.

In the afternoon I gave the scholars an account of our other Indian schools, and of the work of grace among the Choctaws and Seminoles. I pointed out to them their privileges, and added other remarks of encouragement and warning. Most of the congregation attended in the afternoon, and all were deeply interested in hearing these accounts of the other Indian tribes. On Monday I spoke again to the schools, and then bade them, and our friends at the mission, farewell. Mr. and Mrs. Dougherty accompanied us in a small sail-boat to Grand Traverse village, twelve miles distant, where the propeller was lying. We set out at 6 P. M. our friends returning part of the way in the propeller. At 8 P. M. we parted from them on the bosom of the bay, and their little boat was soon lost to our view in the wide spread waters around us. We had now left all our missionary friends, and on Tuesday at 3 P. M. we reached Mackinac. After a delay of two days, we took the new line of steamers and rail-road to Toronto, thence by Niagara Falls to New York, where we arrived on the 8th of August, after an absence of thirteen weeks.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE HARDWAR FAIR, BY REV. CHARLES W. FORMAN.

Description of the place—Great Mela—Sacred bathing place.

Hardwar is a very small village on the right bank of the Ganges (or Gangá) river. Every part of this river is sacred, being considered by the Hindus the body of the goddess Gunga; but the point on which the village of Hardwar is situated is peculiarly so. To this place the remains of the bones of the Hindus, after the burning of the bodies, are carried and thrown into the stream. Once a year, in the month of April, a Mela (or fair) is held here, when crowds resort to this place to bring the bones of departed friends, or to bathe in the holy water. Every twelfth year their Kum Mela is held, at which time there is the greatest merit in bathing in the holy water, the goddess being considered then most propitious. This year was the time for the Kum Mela, consequently an immense concourse of pilgrims was expected.

When we arrived, on the 28th of March, fourteen days before the great bathing day, there were only a few thousand pilgrims present. This number was augmented daily by large accessions, till it amounted to hundreds of thousands. It was distressing to see the crowds pressing in, their staves in their hands, their clothes covered with dust, with drums and music, and shouting "Victory to Mother Gunga." How often were the words of the Apostle suggested to the mind, "they are mad upon their idols." The time when the greatest merit was to be obtained by bathing, was from 3 o'clock to 9 o'clock, A. M. of the 12th, but as only a few besides the faqirs could bathe during that time, others had to content themselves with bathing at other times.

During the last few days the bathing place was thronged from morning till night, the pilgrims pressing upon each other, and sometimes treading each other under foot. The Brahmins, who never lose an opportunity to benefit their worldly condition, stand in the stream to receive their contributions. These consist chiefly of cows from the rich and money from the poor. Flowers and shells are thrown into the stream by the pilgrims. At such seasons as these the religion of the people seem to exercise the greatest influence upon them, and consequently its manifestations are the most disgusting.

Preaching—Desire of the people to listen to preaching.

Although the Mela was so large, showing that the Hindus have not lost their confidence in their deities, still in our intercourse with them we witnessed many things which encouraged the hope that not a few desired some better remedy for sin. The people generally listened to us with much respectful attention, frequently asking such questions and making such remarks as showed that they understood and approved of what they heard. Sometimes they would assemble at one of our preaching places, and send for us to come and address them. In the evening, when we returned to our tent, large crowds followed us and almost forced us to preach still longer. Frequently they would show the greatest pleasure when the iniquities of their gods were exhibited, and listen respectfully when the purity of our Saviour's life and character were contrasted with them. They were most ready to admit the force of our arguments against their religion and in favour of our own. A few instances may not be out of place. A Hindu cried out, "Victory to the honorable Gungá," when it was mentioned that Gunga had been imprisoned in a canal by the East India Company's order. Another replied, "Then, brethren, the next time we must shout, 'Victory to the honorable Company.'" When told to worship the Lord of the English and not their slave, the ready reply would be, "It is right, it is right."

When asked why it was that they set up some stones and worshipped them, and of others they made walls, they admitted the absurdity of their conduct. When asked whether the water really purified their hearts from sin, they would admit that incontinence, lust, pride, &c. reigned in their hearts after bathing as before. Again and again the question was asked, "How then can we obtain salvation?" or when their system's defects were exposed, they would say with much apparent seriousness, "Then tell us some thing better—tell us then the true way."

When a large audience had been listening to a sermon on the text "Seek first the kingdom of heaven," in which the importance of making this the great duty of life was insisted upon, an old man, who appeared much interested, asked with much earnestness, "But how can we obtain salvation?" The way was pointed out. He then came to our tent to make further inquiries, which he did with much apparent feeling. At last he said, "Christ has been your Saviour, do you be mine"—but he seemed only to mean, do you be my instructor and guide to salvation.

One morning an old woman and two children were reproved for worshipping a deformed cow, (which is considered a very sacred object,) they paid little attention; but a man near by, who heard the reproof, came up and said, "Sir, whom then must we worship?" The reply was made, "Worship God." He replied with great agitation, while the tears streamed down his cheeks, "How can such a sinner as I worship God?" He came to our tent and listened to our teachings, and while he heard of sin and salvation, the tears again and again streamed from his eyes. He asked me to pray for him, and when we knelt down, he bowed with us. I saw him no more. May the great Shepherd gather the wandering sheep into his fold.

There were present at this Mela, Messrs. Campbell, Caldwell, and Gordon, from Saharunpur; Mr. Woodsides from Dehra Dhoon; Messrs. Rudolph, Leavitt, and Barnes, from Lodiana; and myself, from Lahor. Messrs. Leavitt, Barnes, and Gordon were not able to preach, as they have just arrived in the country. Mr. Rudolph could do little on account of a sore throat; so there were but four of us to preach, but we were assisted by three valuable native assistants from Saharunpur.

LETTER FROM REV. J. H. ORBISON, IN RELATION TO THE LAST HOURS AND DEATH OF MRS. ORBISON.

I have written to you from time to time informing you of our sad journey and its progress; I have now to inform you that my dear wife has been taken away from the scenes of earth, and I have been left with a torn heart to continue my pilgrimage alone. The shadow of death has rested upon my house and heart, but I sorrow not as those without hope, for my dear wife was well prepared for the change, and I doubt not, to her, death was the gate of glory. The shadow only fell on this side, while all on the other side was brightness, of which even some sweet glimpses were vouchsafed, when the spirit was passing through. We left Ambala with the feeling that there was little hope of recovering, except some change, under Providence, be wrought by the voyage and residence in the Straits. This ray of hope was held out by the doctors, and we eagerly caught at the straw. On the journey down the country, we were often encouraged by the nature of the disease, and as often discouraged, I may add. But on the whole, Mrs. Orbison did not improve; indeed, when near Benares, she became so weak, that she felt her end was near, and gave directions, in case she should be then called away. At Benares the doctor was called in, who gave some medicine, which checked the dreadful fever which consumed her, and after a night of deep anxiety and trembling apprehension, she recovered somewhat, and seemed to be improving. But the cough, and perspirations, and constant expectoration and swelling of the limbs was not checked. We arrived finally, after a tedious journey, at Calcutta, where we were detained about three weeks waiting for a ship. Here Dr. Macrae, celebrated for his skill and kindness, was very attentive and afforded much relief to the dear sufferer. She was able to sit up a little and drive out a few times, and we lived in hope. Our passage was taken in the "Shelomith," as the doctor did not dissuade from the voyage. He, indeed, told us plainly that one of her lungs was nearly gone, and that the other was somewhat affected, and therefore the prospects were not cheering, but said that by going to Penang in the Straits, the patient would be put in the best position to ensure recovery, if it were possible. Having got notice that the ship would sail on Sabbath, the 13th of May, we went on board on Saturday. Mrs. Orbison could not help herself, and could scarcely sit up, hence it was very trying and painful to her. But she did not complain, she never did, though she suffered much. The ship was large, our cabin large and airy, the captain kind, and the accommodations good. Everything was comfortable, and my dear wife seemed easy and contented. She took her food as usual, though not able to eat much. She did not seem to suffer from sea-sickness, and on the fourth day after we left Calcutta, she was carried on deck in her chair at her request, but she soon began to feel faint, and was carried back to her bed, where she became unconscious for a time, and had difficulty in breathing. From this she recovered, saying, "Come Jesus, come Jesus," with great rapidity for some time, then gradually became tranquil, and afterwards asked if she had not been in heaven, with seeming disappointment. On the next day, Thursday, she was calm and easy, and listened with much interest to the Bible, and was able to join in prayer, but did not talk much. On Friday she had a severe trial of her faith, and I was called from dinner by the woman servant who attended her, to find her in great distress, her mind apparently wandering, crying loudly, "I thought I had found Christ, I thought I had found Christ! O, could I find Christ, O, could I find Christ!" with an expression of great pain and sorrow on her countenance. But God in mercy soon brushed away the clouds and filled her soul with great joy and brightness; and while I held her emaciated body in my arms, and read two of her favourite hymns from among the paraphrases at the end of her well-worn Scotch Bible, viz.

"How bright those glorious spirits shine," &c.

her spirit rose superior to disease and rejoiced greatly as if she saw those things described and felt they were given her by Christ, and her pale countenance beamed like an angel's. She afterwards asked if I saw within the veil. After this she continued calm and contented. On Saturday she talked much of death, giving various directions, and kind messages for friends. Then placing her hand on my head she prayed, "O God, comfort and support him, make him abundantly, abundantly, successful, give him many souls converted through his instrumentality as stars in his crown"—telling me not to cry, that God would comfort me, and we would soon meet in heaven. She then seemed done, and ready to depart, though hitherto she had a strong desire to remain and work with me in the missionary service of Christ. She lay quietly, not talking much, and not suffering much, until the morning of Sabbath, May 20th. About half-past six o'clock she took a little food, but did not relish it much, and appeared much as she had been for some days, so that I was not apprehensive. But soon a change came, her mind wandered and she lost her power of speech and the use of her limbs. Her countenance and limbs were painfully distorted, and thus she continued until relieved by the messenger of death, between eight and nine o'clock. Then I should have felt lost and lonely indeed, and distracted had not God prepared and supported me. I assisted in preparing and dressing the precious remains according to her directions. Some of the sailors made a shroud, and the carpenter, a Chinese, made the coffin—and there really appeared to be an expression of sweet satisfaction and composure on her pale countenance, as she lay ready for the last solemn rites. By the recommendation of the Captain it was determined that the burial should take place that Sabbath evening. So, as the sun was going down, the coffin with its treasure was brought on deck, draped in the colours of Britain—the crosses of Scotland and England. The Captain and officers (Europeans) and some of the sailors (natives) stood around respectfully, and after I had read the 15th Chap. 1 Cor. and offered prayer, the coffin was launched upon the deep waters and soon sunk to the caverns of the deep, where the remains do rest in the hope of a glorious resurrection, when mortal shall put on immortality, when the sea shall give up its dead on that great day. Thus, on her own favourite day, the Sabbath, the delight of her soul, she rested from her sufferings and from sin, and entered upon the full enjoyment of that eternal rest, where "bright those glorious spirits shine," and all tears are for ever wiped away.

Mrs. Agnes Campbell Orbison died at sea, in the 26th year of her age, and was buried in the Bay of Bengal, about 390 miles from Calcutta in lat. 16° 35′ North, and long. 90° 40′ East. Her tomb is the deep—her home is Heaven. Her example and works remain for earth.

I would like much to visit sympathizing parents and friends, at home, but now is the time for work, and I hasten back to my station.

Yours, affectionately, J. W. Orbison.

MISCELLANIES.

FOREIGN MISSIONS—SPEECH OF REV. MR. MACKAY OF CALCUTTA, IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

The following beautiful and touching address, delivered in the General Assembly by the Rev. Mr. Mackay, of Calcutta, we were not able to give in the report of the proceedings. We cannot better serve the cause of India, and of our mission there, than by inserting it entire.

Mr. Mackay, of Calcutta, then addressed the Assembly. He said—I feel as it were due to you, and due to the church, at large, that I and my brethren in the mission should stand on our defence for being here this day, when our presence is so urgently needed in our respective fields of labour. Our cases are so nearly alike, that mine may, I find, suffice for all. Laid aside from work for many months by a painful and wasting sickness, it was deemed absolutely necessary, if I hoped to be restored to any measure of usefulness in the mission, that I should leave India for a time. It was a sore trial for me to come here. I never wished, and never expected to see my native land again; and I know that I speak the mind of my dear friends and brethren, when I say that we rejoice in the hope that a few months more will see us all on our way back to that land which we claim for our Lord, and where we hope to live and to die. You will not mistake me, or suppose that I undervalue the privileges which the Lord bestows upon me, in permitting me to revisit my native land and our own favoured church, which seem all the fairer and the more precious in my eyes from their contrast with the moral waste with which I have to do, "where Satan's seat is." If it were a matter of individual liking, there are many here at whose feet I should gladly sit all the days of my life; but strong ties and deep convictions recall me to India; and I thank God for the opportunity of asking for the prayers and sympathies of such an assemblage of God's people as this house contains, in behalf of that country, the greatest beyond question, because open to us, and the most majestic and interesting of this world's mission fields. Facts and details I leave to others. My words must be few, for I am physically unable to speak much; but the Lord needs not the gifts of eloquence or much speaking to accomplish his purposes. And if he sends his blessing (and I have asked for it on my knees,) my feeble voice will find echoes in your hearts, and stir them up to plead with God for the heathen. Oh that the day were come, when the full swell of this our church's prayers shall rise up in their behalf—a holy melody! Then there would be joy in God's heaven, and not less for their sake, than for your own—for such an outpouring of prayer could only come from a church where the Spirit of the Lord dwelt—the spirit of love and compassion—the very mind of Jesus. Such a day, fathers and brethren, I fear I shall never see; but if some inspired seer, like him of Patmos, were commissioned to reveal it in the near future for the Free Church of Scotland, my heart would leap up to his words; for then I would know assuredly that you were blessed, and that India was about to be the Lord's.

There is a tendency in the human mind which leads the most dispassionate man to feel an interest in that which more immediately affects or concerns him, and to assign it an importance which to others seem far beyond its intrinsic merits. There may be no valid claim to exception from this law in other cases, but it does not apply to the Lord's work of evangelizing the world. The utmost devotion that mortal man can give is far below what he ought to feel in such a cause; its magnitude is beyond all mortal estimate. Ah! fathers and brethren, it may seem to some that missionaries cherish exaggerated notions, and use exaggerated language in reference to the great work that you have laid upon us; but if you could see us as God sees us, or even as we see ourselves, you would not wonder at our feeble and faithless walking, our short-sighted views, our lack of zeal and love. Our consciences feel it as a mockery and a reproach to talk to us of too much zeal, or too much enthusiasm. To be in the devil's visible kingdom, when all around speaks of him, with Christ's gospel in our hands, and to feel coldness of heart, and consciousness of shortcoming, that is but too often the real work-a-day experience of many a missionary of Christ. Our words, our measures, our tempers may be open to censures; our zeal, such as it is, may not always be tempered with wisdom; but our work is the Lord's work; and neither we, nor this church and people in this land, nor any created being, can ever do enough, pray enough, or embark in it with sufficient enthusiasm. For, sir, the work which this church has sent us to help in, and to which, in sending us, she has pledged herself, is to win India to Christ, and to gather its multitudinous tribes, languages, and nations into Christ's Church and kingdom. Have we ever realized, in a solemn, thoughtful spirit, the greatness of what we are about?

Change after change has swept over the material surface of this earth of ours, all hopeful, each preparing the way for an organization higher than its own; ancient dynasties and empires, of which the strange and uncouth records are now rising from underground, have overturned and succeeded each other, as Daniel saw in vision, in the order appointed by God; and their savage energy and "barbaric pearl and gold" have passed away, to give place to the iron will and the onward march of modern civilization. Faith after faith has passed into oblivion. The very names of gods have utterly perished whom nations worshipped for ages—to whom countless knees bowed, and to whom the hearts of forgotten generations turned in their fear, in their hope, and in their agony, for cyles to us unknown. Even now change seems to be at hand; and we watch anxiously for the next birth from the womb of time, thinking, not without disquiet, of that great struggle in which we are nationally engaged. But there is a greater warfare by far, which concerns us still more nearly—coeval with paradise—lasting till time shall be no more for ever: it is the warfare between the powers of light and darkness for the dominion and possession of our immortal souls. If we are led to look with dismay and bewilderment on a world lying in wickedness, where three-fourths of his intelligent creatures, after a trial of six thousand years, reject, or know not the God who gave and preserves their lives, is it not hopeful and encouraging to take knowledge that the visible church of Christ, which in the days of Noah numbered but eight souls, gradually grew into a nation, and now spreads over two continents, sending forth pioneers and colonies into all that remains of the earth! Our God acts through human agency. India numbers a hundred and eighty millions of souls. Is it not a noble, elevating ambition—a glorious, Christ-like enterprise—to sit down in his might, with our allies of other churches, to the siege of Hindustan, determined to gain these millions for him, and thus to give him acknowledged rule over the half of his own earth? It is well, engaged as you most assuredly are, in this great enterprise, whether with thought and foresight, or casually and carelessly, as a proper thing for a church to do—it is well, I say, to consider the strength of the enemy.

A greater number of our fellow-creatures live and breathe on the soil of India at this moment, when I am speaking, than have lived and died in all Scotland since the days of Knox or Wishart. With exceptions, which in the aggregate appear as nothing, they are all wedded to their superstitions; and Satan, themselves consenting, reigns and rules over them uncontrolled. Gifted, high-minded, amiable youths, like the young ruler whom Jesus loved—fair, gentle, affectionate maidens—brave and valiant men, who have stood in the front of battle, side by side with the boldest of our own race—sages keener and subtler than Rome ever produced—poets worthy to take rank with Homer and Sophocles—mutitudes so vast, that to think of them is painful and overwhelming—multitudes, taken as a nation, in every attractive and intellectual quality, inferior to none upon earth—have passed and are passing through the grave into the outer darkness,—the grim, impenetrable darkness,—knowing nothing of our glad tidings, nothing of our merciful, compassionate, blessed Redeemer, and shut out from his heaven of light. Is this to go on for ever? Can no help come? Shall we stand by and suffer Satan, unopposed, to slay, and to slay, and to slay? Sir, I love the Hindus. Debased and degraded by ages of idolatry, there is that in them which wins love, and is fitted to draw out all the kinder and gentler feelings of the heart. I speak of the heathen. What they become when born again unto Christ many here have seen with their own eyes; and I appeal to them whether that race, of which Rajahgopaul was a type—and we have others to the full as gifted as he, and as deservedly dear to us—is not as well fitted to reflect the Redeemer's brightness as any race under the sun. But even as I love them, so do I hate and loathe the foul, mean, merciless and impure idolatry which pollutes and destroys them, covering their eyes with its mantle of darkness, pouring in their veins from infancy the seething venom of every lust, killing truth and trust between man and man,—blotting out from their souls the image of God by the leprosy of sin; and, what is worst of all, associating in their minds the grand heaven-born thought of God with the vilest passions and the vilest crimes which disgrace fallen humanity.

The Apostle, in the beginning of his Epistle to the Romans, gibbets the sure fruits of idolatry. We see them at every turning, not in the abstract, but in living men and women. When I think of the multitudes—multitudes whom we can neither reach nor number, it seems as if we could only cry, with a sinking of heart, "O Lord, how long?" We are few—very, very few; they are many. They do not believe in our love. In their ignorance they would kill us, if they had the power. Their crafty master has set them against us; and between us and them interpose a hostile priesthood, the isolation of caste—the master-stroke of Satanic subtlety and superstition—striking deep into the popular mind, venerable from antiquity, endeared by custom, and in their eyes imposing and strong as the everlasting hills.

I can well understand the indignant and mocking scorn of worldly men when they heard of our Careys and Marshmans going out, as "a forlorn hope," on such an apparently desperate service. God's people have heard the same before from the lips of Sanballat and Tobiah, saying, "What do these feeble Jews? will they sacrifice? will they fortify themselves? will they make an end in a day?" But the walls did rise; and the temple was built, and the sacrifice and offering were laid reverently on the altar of the Lord in his own city of Jerusalem; and feeble though our means seem, and vast and arduous the task before us, if this Church will but take the work to heart, as Nehemiah did, and believe like Nehemiah, and wrestle in prayer like Nehemiah, our work, too, shall be finished, through the good hand of our God upon us; and the Christian Church of Hindustan, with its hundreds of millions of living stones, shall rise up in fair and stately proportions—fairer and more stately than man has seen in all ages of the past. When that shall be, in how many years, or in how many centuries, I know not; God knoweth. But be it shall, I believe with all my heart; we all believe and rejoice in it. The meantime is the time for work. While the last command of Christ to his disciples stands unrepealed, "Go ye and teach all nations," while God gives India into our hands, while the Spirit of the Lord is working in our missions, gathering in souls from the heathen and building them up in the faith; where such a harvest of teeming millions is spread out before us inviting the sickle—fathers and brethren, is it not as certain that God calls us to the work as if we heard an audible voice from the upper sanctuary? If, as I believe, the Lord hath laid this duty upon us, of that it is for you to judge; if he calls upon British Christians to win India for him, and to make his name glorious in the sight of all his people, then, I say, if this Church, or any Church in Britain professing to be his, reject the call or shrink from the responsibility, the blood of souls lies at that Church's door. Let her candlestick be removed from its place—the love of her Lord is not in her. He will give the work and the honour to others when she is low in the dust.

Brethren and fathers, I have no reproach to bring against the Free Church of Scotland. Kindly and generously has she dealt with us personally; the Lord reward her for it! Something we may miss in the outward expression of sympathy and communion; for to us, in Calcutta at least, nothing, except from our Convener, reaches us across the sea. But a very brief residence here removes all misapprehension, and teaches that there is no lack of affection for the missionaries, and no lack of deep interest in their work, on the part of our brethren and friends in Scotland. I know that the shadow of a great sorrow, or the weight of a great care, may lie upon the heart, while the outward man seems cold or indifferent; and O, brethren, I should wish to believe, though it does not come forward in public demonstrations, that a deep and solemn feeling of care and responsibility for the perishing millions of India lies near the true and living heart of this Church, and that prayer rises in secret, which the Hearer of prayer, at no distant day, will answer openly. Verily, the Lord hath heard. Sir, if you and the members of this House had sat down at the Lord's table with our native Church in Calcutta, or been present with Mrs. Milne and myself on that day, only three months ago, when we saw (alas! for a last time on earth) our beloved friend, John Anderson, in the midst of his colleagues, and the spiritual children whom the Lord has given them, you would have felt a delight, rare and precious on this sinful earth, and a hopefulness swelling into conviction, that the might of Jehovah was with us, and the Spirit of the Lord in our midst. The world may boast of its pleasures; it never knew a pleasure like that which filled our breasts that day. All toil seemed light in the prospect of such a reward. But why speak I of toil? ours is a labour of love. Sir, if the Lord puts it into the heart of any of his servants in this land, to go forth to the heathen, like Paul and Barnabas, and the whole company of the apostles—let no fear of hardships, no dread of life in India, keep them back for an hour. India is no place of punishment and sighing; it is a country that has a strange power of winding itself round the heart. Let me refer for a moment to my own experience.

If ever man had reason to love India I have. India, under God, has opened to me a field—perhaps the only field—in which I can be useful. It has given me dear friends and pleasant acquaintances. It has blessed, richly blessed, me in my household. It has associated me with the labours, and won for me the affection of the saints of God—of such men as John Macdonald, and John Anderson, and other honoured and beloved living friends, whose shoes' latchet I am not worthy to loose; so that I often tremble to put my hands with theirs on the ark of the living God. It has given me the delight of seeing heathen children growing up into Christian men and Christian women; and the high privilege of hailing the youths whom I once taught as friends and colleagues in the ministry, aye, and faithful guides and counsellors in our great mission work. I have seen the infant Church of India; I have known many whose names will have honourable mention in the acts of her apostles, and are already written in the Lamb's book of life; and I believe, with faith as firm, that the land where they laboured shall yet be the Lord's. Therefore it is that in my own native land, and even in this Assembly of God's people, I feel like an exile and a stranger, and long to return to my Indian home, trusting, if the Lord will bestow such mercy upon an unworthy man, thence to rise to the home which is above.

In conclusion, sir, let me call the attention of the Assembly and of the Church to the peculiar position of the Mission at present. We asked for success—we asked for a native ministry: the Lord has granted both. As Mr. Wylie told you, all wide India lies open before you to occupy for the Lord. Men are found—a handful, it is true, yet of the right seed—but the means to send forth even these few are wanting. What shall we do, then? Shall we ask for more success, when that which we have brings us to a standstill? I am not careful to answer in this matter. It is His work; and I know that the Lord will provide. The silver and gold are his; and, when they are wanted, they will be forthcoming. Such was the dying conviction of that true man and that true missionary whom the Lord has taken to himself. I accept and believe it. I say not a word of money; the consciences of Christian men and women shall determine their offerings—not any appeal of mine. What I have seen of them shows me that they are fitter to teach me than I to teach them. But, sir, I do ask from this Assembly, and from our beloved Church, solemnly, and in the name of Christ, one thing alone, and for this let me hope that the Lord has sent me here. Not money, not men, not tongues, not miracles—even if you had them to bestow—one thing, and one thing alone—the prayers of this Church in behalf of India. That is a weapon in which I have unbounded confidence, of which no Church on earth has ever yet fully proved the edge and the power. Nothing is impossible to prayer—nothing within the omnipotence of God. But such prayer must be the pouring out of the very heart, the wrestling, the agony, the strong cry of the soul for other immortal souls.

Now that the large hearts of Gordon and Anderson, so full of love to India, have ceased to beat, and Duff is laid aside for a season—fathers and brethren, will ye take India to your hearts as they did? O! what a comfort, what a joy, it would be to us, who must soon leave the work to others, to know that our beloved Church, feeling and acknowledging her share of responsibility, had risen up in faith, and sworn by Him that liveth for ever, that while her candlestick abode in the place, she would never abandon her mission, or give God rest by day or by night, until the great work of the Lord in India needed no foreign aid. Let her but pray for us in this spirit, and then we shall have all that we want—money poured into your treasury, and godly missionaries, and godly converts, and an influx of zeal, and love, and prosperity, like the influx of the waves of the sea. Let the knell of the dead, which hath rung through the land, be a call of the living to prayer. Brethren, you have stood up like men for Christ as your Head and King. May he honour you to be the foremost missionary church on earth, resolved and determined, for his sake, and in his might, not only to feed the Church of Christ, but to restore to him his ancient people the Jews, and to bring the unhappy Gentiles under that blessed and loving dominion.

We extract the following from the "Church Missionary Record" for July.

WESTERN AFRICA—YORUBA MISSION.

Ibadan.

In this large and densely-populated town, inferior only to Abbeokuta in importance, we have located a few, yet earnest, labourers—the Rev. D. Hinderer, and the Rev. J. T. Kefer, assisted by the native catechist Mr. James Barber, and other native agents.

Sickness of the Missionaries.

In the prosecution of the work during the year ending September 1854, there have been the discouragements and difficulties which are inseparable from missionary operations at every stage, and more especially in their commencement. The missionaries have been severely tried by illness. Mr. Kefer had a severe attack of fever in December 1853; so much so, that his life was considered to be in great danger. It pleased God, however, to hear the prayers offered on his behalf, and bless the means used. A change to Abbeokuta was, however, requisite, where he remained two months before his strength was sufficiently restored to admit of his return. During his absence Mrs. Hinderer was brought low from severe indisposition, and when sufficiently recovered, was also removed to Abbeokuta, where she remained a month. In September last Mr. Kefer was again visited with a dangerous attack of fever, and again there were the same sympathy and unwearied attendance which he had experienced before from Mr. and Mrs. Hinderer.

Erection of a dwelling-house and church.

In the earlier part of the year their time was far more occupied in secular matters than they could have wished, yet they were indispensable matters; such as the completion of a missionary dwelling sufficiently weather-tight and comfortable as to afford the prospect of better health than they have hitherto enjoyed, and the erection of a church, under the roof of which the people who desired to be instructed might have the opportunity of assembling. We are happy to be able to state that these objects have been accomplished. In the beginning of May, after hard manual labour for several weeks on the part of Messrs. Hinderer and Kefer, the dwelling-house was deemed so far finished as to be habitable, and Mrs. Hinderer set to work to make calico doors and windows, in the absence of wooden ones. "Thus," writes Mr. Hinderer, "by such and the like contrivances we are at length enabled to inhabit a comfortable Europeanized dwelling near the bush of Ibadan, with a large town and a big work before us, and trusting in the 'Help for ages past,' as 'our hope for years to come.' Yet the old house ought not to be forgotten neither. Strange impression, that the last farewell glance at it makes upon its former inmates, to see part of it breaking down, and the rest occupied by a horse! Still we look at it with the mingled reflection on past sorrows and joys. There it was where we all were brought low, even to the brink of eternity; and there also it was where a joyful noise and melody was first made in this place of pagan darkness unto the Lord Jehovah."

Mr. Kefer, on the same subject, adds, April 15—

"It is really a great enjoyment for us to move now about on dry-floored ground, and to breathe fresh air, and to have such nice and lovely views from our very rooms; and especially to know ourselves sheltered under a roof which will protect us against the rain. All our people rejoice with us."

We introduce these details in order that our readers may be better enabled to identify themselves with the actual circumstances of the missionary's position, and sympathize with him in his labours and difficulties.

The church was also so far completed that service was held in it for the first time on Lord's-day, July 23. This indeed was a most welcome attainment, as the preaching-shed, or temporary church, close by the old dwelling, had been broken down by one of the heavy tornadoes which occasionally visit them, and levelled with the ground, and the missionaries were compelled to have service in their compound, which prevented many from attendance.

War with Ilorin.

The great hinderance, however, has been the war in which the Ibadan people are engaged with Ilorin. The first mention of this war we find in the journal of Mr. James Barber, who thus speaks of the dreadful rites which introduced it—

"Feb. 26, 1854: Lord's-day—I kept this evening service, and before the service commenced there was a perfect silence in the town, for the people were going to offer that abominable sacrifice of a human being to their god of war, called Oranmiyan. Oh, when shall such abominable sacrifice be ceased in Ibadan? May the Lord grant that it may be soon ceased!"

In another paragraph he refers to the cause of it.

"March 19: Lord's-day—During this month the people of Ibadan are going out to make war with the people of Ilorin, at a little town which belongs to the people of Ibadan, which the Ilorin people intend to destroy; the town's name is Oton. The chiefs of Ibadan sent often to tell the Ilorin people to leave the town, but they would not; therefore they are going to try in order to deliver the place by force of war."

It appears, also, from Mr. Kefer's journal, that the Fulani, or Phula, the great scourges and devastators of the Niger and Tshadda districts, are amongst the enemies of the Ibadan people.

This war has in several ways interfered with the proceedings of the missionaries. It has diminished the number of workmen, and thrown on the missionaries, in the erection of the necessary buildings, a great amount of manual labour. In certain districts of the town, where the head chiefs are absent on the war, it indisposes the people to hear the gospel message. Thus we find, in Mr. Hinderer's journal the following passage—

"July 30—Went with Mr. Barber to the chief's neighbourhood to preach, where we had hosts of attentive hearers. In the afternoon I went with Mr. Kefer to the northern part of the town, which is separated from our station by a chain of hills, and where we therefore intend to establish regular preaching on a Sunday. We commenced under some trees, as the erection of sheds is impracticable for the present, the head war-chief, whose district it is, being in the war. This lamentable war is a sad hinderance to our work, for often are we told, 'We cannot join you now; we cannot serve God now; our masters are in the war, and we cannot do anything without them.' Even in the worst case, that of its being a mere pretext, it is an evil not without its immediate ill consequences for us; but I would fain hope it is with most not a mere excuse only. Some days ago one of our neighbours, a heathen, quite unprovoked on my part, told me my church was not very full now; 'but wait,' added he; 'when the war comes back, plenty people will join you, and serve God.' God grant it be so!"

General progress of Missionary work.

Notwithstanding these hinderances, missionary efforts have been persevered in, and results have been yielded which encourage the missionaries to believe that they are only the drops of the coming shower. Mr. Hinderer's testimony on this point is cheering.

"We have been much encouraged by a pretty good attendance on our Sunday services, and a few diligent Sunday scholars, as well as more earnest inquirers into the truth. Eight persons have lately put their names down as candidates for baptism, at which Satan seemed to be alarmed, and therefore began to persecute some of them. Some others are kept back by the same means; and of one, a Mohammedan, it may be said, 'Yet not openly, from fear of the Jews.'

"June 25: Lord's-day—To-day we celebrated the Lord's Supper, for the first time in Ibadan, in a familiar circle in our sitting-room. Nine natives and three Europeans approached the Lord's table, and one was absent from illness. May we not rejoice and take courage by this, as the harbinger of better things than war and bloodshed for this place?"

Again, in his journal for the quarter ending September 1854, after adverting to various perplexities, he thus concludes—

"Nevertheless, I have spent a few happy hours, in the midst of sorrow and vexation, in the thought of an ever-present help and never-failing God, who 'doeth all things well;' also in a brighter prospect for the future, to which our regular little Sunday congregation, under present adverse circumstances, must be an earnest. My candidates for baptism have also increased from eight to twelve, which, considering that the present war causes everything to be at a standstill, is some encouragement too. So at least one more little bark in the great missionary ocean has set her sails, and once more,

'Cheerful and blithe thy way pursue,
And, with the blessed land in view,
Singing to God, return.'"

RESIGNATION.

The Rev. John H. Rice, who has been actively employed since the first of March last, as an agent for the Board of Publication in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, has resigned his agency, after five months of useful service. Mr. Rice has recently received a call to a vacant church in the city of Louisville. Whether he intends to accept it or not, we are not informed. Wherever he goes, he leaves the service of the Board with our best wishes for his health, happiness, and usefulness.

DEATH OF AN AGENT.

The Rev. John C. Eastman, died at Hanover, Indiana, on the 22d of July last, in the forty-third year of his age. For some years past he had been disabled from the pastoral work, and had been employed successively in agencies for Hanover College and for the Board of Domestic Missions. Early in the last spring he was appointed an agent for the Board of Publication, but had hardly put his hand to the work before the further failure of his health compelled him to desist therefrom. Mr. Eastman was a native of New England. He is represented by all who knew him, to have been an excellent and spiritually-minded brother. He had taken an active interest in the operations of the Board of Publication, and had done much to promote the circulation of its books in the region where he dwelt. His end was peace.

COLLEGE STUDENTS AS COLPORTEURS.

A larger number than usual of students from various colleges have been spending their summer vacations in the service of the Board as colporteurs. In general their reports indicate that the time has been happily as well as usefully spent. Many of them seem to have gained a new insight into human nature, and new views of the self-denying terms of gospel service. It is well for these youthful disciples, especially for such of them as think of setting their faces towards the ministry, to learn early to "endure hardness" for Christ's sake, and for the sake of the souls of their fellow-men. We trust the time is approaching when all the pious young men in our Colleges as well as Theological Seminaries will feel the importance of making a wise use of their vacations, so as not only to be themselves recruiting in body and mind, but also doing good to their fellow-men and gaining spiritual refreshment. Life is too short and too uncertain, to allow of such opportunities being devoted to any inferior end. May our strong and enterprising young men thus learn whatsoever their hands find to do, to do it with their might.

We extract a few sentences from a detailed and interesting report rendered by two college students who have this summer been engaged in exploring three counties in the State of New York. These sentences will afford some incidental glimpses of colportage labours.

"At P—— we called upon an elder of the church. He came in, and with an air of harshness said he did not want any books to-day. We were not, however, to be turned off, and offered him the Home and Foreign Record. He said he took a great many business papers, naming a number, and he had no time to attend to anything of this kind. We said 'it is no doubt, sir, proper to attend to business, and be familiar with every change in the markets, but we think every Christian should also have an interest in knowing how the kingdom of Christ is advancing in the world.' He did not express any concurrence in this opinion.

"Judging of the character of the population here, we would consider them generally not great readers, but almost wholly absorbed with business. But 'the times were so hard' and they were 'pretty well supplied with books.'

"We next went on to L——, where we disposed of from one to five volumes in almost every house at which we called. This is an interesting neighbourhood. Dr.——, the former pastor, has left an indelible impress of his character on this people. They are a model community in a religious point of view, as he was a model pastor. They are an intelligent, reading people, and the church is munificent in its contributions for benevolent objects.

"We made it a rule never to pass by the house of a poor man, for 'unto the poor the gospel is preached.' In the humble cottage we always met with a hearty welcome, and took our leave with warmer feelings and more assured hope of having done some good, and received benefit ourselves in a spiritual point of view.

"We were quite encouraged in the latter part of our work, and have reason to bless God for our success. We pray that our labour may not have been in vain. The hope that we might be the means of doing some good was the only thing that sometimes kept us going. We remembered the words 'cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days.' May the seed which we have sown spring up and bring forth fruit an hundred-fold to the glory of God." E. P. & J. R.

COLPORTAGE IN OREGON.

In May last the Board appointed a colporteur near Eugene City in Oregon. He had been warmly recommended for this service by one of our laborious pastors of that region. A first instalment of about $500 worth of books was at once sent on with the colporteur's commission, and a letter has just been received from the pastor above alluded to, announcing the safe arrival of the box, and his joy at its receipt. He says there is a wide and needy field awaiting this kind of labour in that region. He is confident that this first supply will be immediately disposed of, and that further and larger quantities will be rapidly called for.

The Board is warmly disposed to enter and widely occupy that inviting field, where there seems to be every prospect that its publications would be welcomed by thousands of families. But alas! where are the men who will go for us? If there are any men anywhere in the Church, who have the needful qualifications for the work, and who feel disposed to undertake it, we trust they will make themselves known to us.

THE BEST SOCIETY.

"In the best books great men talk to us, and with us, and give us their most precious thoughts. Books are the voices of the distant and the dead. Books are the true levellers. They give to all, who will faithfully use them, the society and presence of the best and greatest of our race. No matter how poor I am—no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter my obscure dwelling—if learned men and poets will enter and take up their abode under my roof: if Milton will cross my threshold to sing to me of Paradise; and Shakspeare open to me the worlds of imagination, and the workings of the human heart; and Franklin enrich me with his practical wisdom—I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship, and I may become a cultivated man, though excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live."

So wrote somebody. There is however for the pious heart, a better society than that of Franklin, Shakspeare, or even Milton. The believer may, in their books, commune daily with wise and holy men of every age. Not to speak of Him who is infinite in wisdom, and who is above all, and in every age the Sinner's Friend, and who speaks to us from the pages of inspiration, there are also prophets and psalmists, evangelists, and apostles, all ready daily and familiarly to pour the treasures of their knowledge into his mind. There too are Augustine, and Luther, and Calvin, and Knox, and other intellectual and spiritual giants of olden time ready to talk to him of their battles for the truth of God. Baxter and Bunyan, Owen and Doddridge, Flavel and Charnock, Wilberforce and Richmond, and hosts of others their contemporaries and successors, all are ready, by the printed volumes and tracts they have left behind, to impart heavenly counsels and instructions. Fathers whose faces we once saw, but whose forms have passed away, still reprove us and exhort us. Brethren whom we love for Christ's sake, and who are separated from us by hundreds or thousands of miles, are still by their writings at our sides.

Here indeed is the best society. Let it be well selected and diligently improved.

Here is a relief for the loneliness of the retired hamlet, or for the dreary silence of a backwoods home. Let these undying and faithful companions be multiplied by the press, and sent to cheer and comfort and instruct all the families of the land.

Here is profitable society. It will fill the vacant mind with large thoughts, and wise aspirations, and generous purposes. It is a society whose tone is good, and which will elevate the most degraded and grovelling. Let its advantages be fully and cheaply offered unto all.

THE PRESBYTERIAN ALMANAC.

The Presbyterian Family Almanac has just been issued by the Board of Publication, and orders are now solicited for it. In the quality of its material, attractiveness of illustration, and general value and arrangement of its contents, it will compare very favourably with the issues of former years. Pastors and sessions who desire their churches to be well-informed in regard to the statistics and existing arrangements of the Presbyterian Church, cannot do better than to secure the distribution of the Almanac in all their families. And it is important that all who may desire its distribution in their vicinities, should send in their orders as soon as they can make it convenient to do so, as the edition is limited. The price is six cents singly, or four dollars per hundred.

VALUE OF GOOD BOOKS IN HOSPITALS.

An English chaplain writing from one of those large hospitals in Turkey where the mutilated victims of war are stretched on beds of pain, among other things remarks:

"It is comfortable to be able to tell you that up to the present, I have only met one Presbyterian who could not read. How inadequate to his task would the minister be in large hospitals, if the sick could not read, and if he could not call the tract and good book to his aid. The Assembly's Shorter Catechism, of which I brought out a considerable number with me, is much prized. The parcel just arrived contains, I am happy to find, some more of the same little books."

Would that those who enjoy the opportunity would avail themselves of it to furnish abundantly the publications of the Board of Publication to the hospitals in our cities and to other humane institutions. The Reports of the Board in past years have mentioned that some of its issues have annually taken this direction, but it is to be desired that far larger numbers should henceforth be thus placed within reach of the sons and daughters of affliction.

OUR BOOKS IN ILLINOIS.

An excellent and industrious colporteur, who has for some time past been labouring in Illinois, has just written us a long and interesting communication which presents his work and its results in a very encouraging aspect. The following sentences will give our readers a glimpse of his work and its reception:

"I have thus far been greatly blessed in my labours here as it respects the sale of books, and hope by continued effort and divine favour, that similar success will continue to attend my labours. I find that our Old-school Presbyterian churches are thirsting for your books. I have been surprised to see their anxiety to obtain them, and verily believe that had it not been a time when money has been exceedingly scarce, more so than at ordinary seasons, it now being harvest, I should have sold as many more. Never before did I feel so encouraged in the work as at present. I feel daily that I have God's favour and the prayers of his people for support, and that therefore I must prosper. A kinder people I could not wish for than I meet in Illinois."

This worthy colporteur has been a number of years in the service of the Board, and although his compensation has been small, and his labours toilsome, he seems to find more and more enjoyment in serving his divine Master in the work of colportage.

GIFT FOR A SABBATH-SCHOOL.

It gives us pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of $20.15 from a gentleman of Bridgeton, New Jersey, for which we are instructed to send a Sabbath-school Library to a needy Sabbath-school in Wisconsin. The intention of the generous donor shall be faithfully regarded. Are there not other individuals, and are there not also some of our able Sabbath-schools ready to forward further funds for a similar purpose?

LATE PUBLICATIONS OF THE BOARD.

WHAT IS PRESBYTERIANISM? An address delivered before the Presbyterian Historical Society at their anniversary meeting in Philadelphia, on Tuesday evening, May 1st, 1855, by the Rev. CHARLES HODGE, D. D. 16mo. pp. 80. Price 15 cents.

This is a very able and instructive discourse by the Rev. Dr. Hodge of Princeton Theological Seminary. It has already been published in several Presbyterian journals, but in this neat and preservable form it should be procured and treasured up by every Presbyterian. We cannot avoid inserting here the paragraphs with which, after an exposition of the cardinal principles of Presbyterianism, the discourse is concluded.

"We have now completed our exposition of Presbyterianism. It must strike every one that it is no device of man. It is not an external frame-work, having no connection with the inward life of the church. It is a real growth. It is the outward expression of the inward law of the church's being. If we teach that the people should have a substantive part in the government of the church, it is not merely because we deem it healthful and expedient, but because the Holy Ghost dwells in the people of God, and gives the ability and confers the right to govern. If we teach that presbyters are the highest permanent officers of the church, it is because those gifts by which the apostles and prophets were raised above presbyters, have, in fact, ceased. If we teach that the separate congregations of believers are not independent, it is because the church is, in fact, one body, all the parts of which are mutually dependent.

"If this is so—if there is an outward form of the church which corresponds with its inward life, a form which is the natural expression and product of that life, then that form must be most conducive to its progress and development. Men may, by art, force a tree to grow in any fantastic shape a perverted taste may choose. But it is at the sacrifice of its vigour and productiveness. To reach its perfection, it must be left to unfold itself according to the law of its nature. It is so with the church. If the people possess the gifts and graces which qualify and entitle them to take part in the government, then the exercise of that right tends to the development of those gifts and graces; and the denial of the right tends to their depression. In all the forms of despotism, whether civil or ecclesiastical, the people are degraded; and in all forms of scriptural liberty, they are proportionably elevated. Every system which demands intelligence tends to produce it. Every man feels that it is not only one of the greatest advantages of our republican institutions that they tend to the education and elevation of the people, but that their successful operation, demanding popular intelligence and virtue, renders it necessary that constant exertion should be directed to the attainment of that end. As republican institutions cannot exist among the ignorant and vicious, so Presbyterianism must find the people enlightened and virtuous, or make them so.

"It is the combination of the principles of liberty and order in the Presbyterian system, the union of the rights of the people with subjection to legitimate authority, that has made it the parent and guardian of civil liberty in every part of the world. This, however, is merely an incidental advantage. The church organization has higher aims. It is designed for the extension and establishment of the gospel, and for the edification of the body of Christ, till we all come to the unity of the faith and knowledge of the Son of God; and that polity must be best adapted to this end, which is most congenial with the inward nature of the church. It is on this ground we rest our preference for Presbyterianism. We do not regard it as a skilful product of human wisdom; but as a divine institution founded on the word of God, and as the genuine product of the inward life of the church."

HYMNS ON SMALL SHEETS.

The Board has published, on loose leaves, several very beautiful Hymns, which are not contained in any of our Hymn Books. They have been found very useful, when printed in this form, for private distribution by pastors and others. Some of them have also been found of special service when distributed in seasons of peculiar religious interest throughout a prayer-meeting or a lecture-room, to be afterwards sung by those assembled. We have direct information that one of the Hymns, entitled "The Spirit Quenched," said to have been composed by a distinguished living divine of our own connection, was used in this way with blessed results. An edition of it was printed at the expense of a pastor, and distributed by him during a season of revival in his congregation, and many permanent and hopefully saving changes were afterwards distinctly traceable to those little sheets. A second is entitled "Look to Jesus," and a third, "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." A fourth, which has been translated from the German has been considered by competent judges as exquisitely beautiful and expressive of the feelings of the newly regenerated soul. We append it entire.

HERE IS MY HEART.

"My son, give me thine heart."—Prov. xxiii. 26.

Here is my heart!—my God, I give it thee;
I heard thee call, and say,
"Not to the world, my child, but unto me:"
I heard, and will obey.
Here is love's offering to my King.
Which, a glad sacrifice, I bring—
Here is my heart.

Here is my heart!—surely the gift, though poor,
My God will not despise;
Vainly and long I sought to make it pure,
To meet thy searching eyes;
Corrupted first in Adam's fall,
The stains of sin pollute it all—
My guilty heart!

Here is my heart!—my heart so hard before,
Now by thy grace made meet;
Yet bruised and wearied, it can only pour
Its anguish at thy feet;
It groans beneath the weight of sin,
It sighs salvation's joy to win—
My mourning heart!

Here is my heart!—in Christ its longings end,
Near to his cross it draws;
It says, "Thou art my portion, O my Friend,
Thy blood my ransom was."
And in the Saviour it has found
What blessedness and peace abound—
My trusting heart!

Here is my heart!—ah! Holy Spirit, come,
Its nature to renew,
And consecrate it wholly as thy home,
A temple fair and true.
Teach it to love and serve thee more,
To fear thee, trust thee and adore—
My cleansed heart!

Here is my heart!—it trembles to draw near
The glory of thy throne;
Give it the shining robe thy servants wear,
Of righteousness thine own:
Its pride and folly chase away,
And all its vanity, I pray—
My humbled heart.

Here is my heart!—teach it, O Lord, to cling
In gladness unto thee;
And in the day of sorrow still to sing,
"Welcome my God's decree."
Believing, all its journeys through,
That thou art wise, and just and true—
My waiting heart!

Here is my heart!—O Friend of friends, be near,
To make each tempter fly,
And when my latest foe I wait to fear,
Give me the victory!
Gladly on thy love reposing,
Let me say, when life is closing—
Here is my heart.

Rev. T. H. Newton, of Berwick, Pa., has been invited to the pastorate of the Bethel church, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. L. D. Potter has resigned the Principalship of the White Water Presbyterial Academy, on account of ill-health; and will be succeeded by the Rev. R. B. Abbott of New Castle, Ind.

Varieties.

Rev. J. Martin Connell.—This estimable young minister was one of the victims of the recent sad catastrophe on the Camden and Amboy railroad. His father is the Hon. John Connell of Wilmington, Delaware. Suddenly, in the morning of his days and bright in hope, he is called hence. We deplore the recklessness which led to the calamity. No part of this, however, belonged to the deceased; and, so far as he was concerned, we recognize a Father's hand put forth to bring his child home, to rest and joy.—Presb. Banner.

Another Munificent Legacy.—The late Thomas P. Cushing, of Boston, left the munificent sum of $150,000 to the town of Ashburnham, Worcester Co., to endow two seminaries of learning, to be located in Ashburnham; the one for males, and the other for females over ten years of age.

Receipts of the A. B. C. F. M.—The receipts of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, during the year ending July 31st, were $310,427 77, and the expenditures during the same period were $318,803 18. The debt of the Board on the first of August, 1854, was $12,042 49. By the excess of expenditures over receipts during the past year, this debt is increased to $20,507 90 on the first of the present month.

Belgium is said to have now nearly forty Protestant Church congregations, where, twenty-five years ago, not one could be found.

Western Theological Seminary.—The new building in Alleghany City, Pa., for this institution, erected in place of one destroyed by the fire last year, is now finished.

Religion in Pittsburgh and Vicinity.—There are fifty-two churches in the city of Pittsburgh, twenty-three in Alleghany, and nine in Birmingham, South Pittsburgh, and Temperanceville. They are numbered among the various sects as follows.

German Reformed,	2
Disciples,	3
Ind. Welsh,	1
Reformed Presbyterian,	6
Associate Presbyterian,	2
Zion of Evan. Asso.	1
Bethel,	2
Roman Catholic,	7
Episcopalian,	7
New Jerusalem,	1
Universalist,	1
Presbyterian,	9
Associate Reformed Presbyterian,	5
Cumberland Presbyterian,	3
Methodist,	25
Lutheran,	4
Baptist,	5
Total,	84

Proposal to the Jews.—It is reported that Professor Petavel, of Neufchatel, has addressed a letter to the Jews of France, Holland, and part of Germany, inviting them to appear, by their Rabbies, at the "Conference of Evangelical Christians," to be held at Paris this month. He asks them to take into consideration the points in which Christians and Jews agree, and those in which they differ, with a view to a union between them.

The Missionary Family.—The Scudders are still going. Two sons of the late Rev. Dr. Scudder, Jared and Ezekiel, who were recently licensed, will be ordained to the work of the ministry in the missionary field, on the evening of Sabbath, the 16th of September, in the Reformed Dutch Church, corner of Fifth Avenue and 29th street, and expect to sail for India about the 1st of October.

Dr. Nott.—The Rev. Dr. Nott, of Schenectady, N. Y., is a very fortunate individual; he no sooner endows Union College with a large part of his fortune, than it is suddenly increased in an unexpected way. The Troy Whig says that a copper mine, worth a million of dollars, has been discovered on some of Dr. Nott's land at Bristol, Connecticut.

The Bible in Spain.—A clergyman who has recently visited Spain in order to know whether copies of the Bible may be freely introduced there, says that he visited Malaga, Grenada, Madrid, Seville, and Cadiz, and that he was not only kindly received, but found a general desire to possess the Scriptures, and great facilities for distributing them.

Sunday Observance.—A work has recently been published in France, on Sunday observance in that country, and particularly in Paris, from which it appears, that in all buildings undertaken at the expense of the Government, working has been stopped long ago on that day; and the number of stores closed has considerably increased in al the departments.

British and Foreign Bible Society.—The income of the British and Foreign Bible Society the last year was $622,000, being $40,000 more than that of any previous year. The Society has been the means of issuing nearly twenty-nine millions of copies of the Scriptures in one hundred and seventy different languages.

The relative Statistics of the New and Old-School, as drawn from their Minutes, just issued, are as follows:

	New-School.	Old-School.
Synods,	24	30
Presbyteries,	108	148
Ministers,	1,567	2,261
Churches,	1,669	3,079
Licentiates,	111	237
Candidates,	238	435
Total Communicants,	143,029	231,404

The net gain or loss of the two bodies, compared with the preceding year, may be seen from the following:

	New-School.		Old-School.
Synods, increase of	1		2
Presbyteries, no change	0	Increase of	2
Churches, less by	2	Increase of	103
Ministers, increase of	5	"	58
Licentiates, less by	3	Increase of	2
Candidates, increase of	40	"	45
Communicants, increase of	1552	"	6000

Total number of communicants added on examination during the year, by the New-School, 5816; by the Old-School, 13,085.—Presbyterian.

Dr. Wayland, the distinguished President of Brown University, has resigned his office, upon the duties of which he entered in 1827.

NOTICE.

Subscribers in arrears will oblige by attending to the payment of the bills which have been sent in this and previous numbers. If paid, the Home and Foreign Record will support itself; if not paid, the deficiency must be paid by the Boards from funds contributed for other purposes. Could ministers and elders not devote a little time to their collection? We know that many only want an opportunity to remit.

From the Christian Observer.

"GO, SCATTER THE SEED."

"Go, scatter the seed,"—by the highway side,
In the open field—in the shaded nook;
Go, sow it well all waters beside—
By the ocean strand—by the pebbly brook—
For some will grow to reward thy toil,
Though cast by chance on an arid soil.

"Go, scatter the seed," tho' the winged bird
May seem to gather as fast as they fall;
Not void shall return that precious word,
Which the sower's hand would dispense to all,
For the yielding heart may receive some grain,
That may spring to life in "the latter rain."

Go, scatter it well, with a liberal hand,
On the barren rock—in the fertile glade;
Go, break the depths of the fallow land,
With the broad plough-share which truth has laid,
For the human heart, in every clime,
Has its winter gloom and its harvest time.

Go, scatter it there, in the "grand old woods,"
Where the unhewn temple of nature stands;
And there, mid the dim, wild solitudes,
Fling the golden grain with a sower's hands—
For the miner may turn from his lumps of dross,
To gather the seed ye may count but loss.

Go, scatter it there—'neath the humble spire,
Where the sons of labour are crowding in;
Where the feast but waits for the "tongues of fire,"
To waken the soul to a sense of sin—
Where the "smoking flax," and "the bruised reed,"
Will find the heat and the balm they need.

Go, scatter it there, 'mid frescoed walls,
Where fashion hath reared her costly fane;
And the free sun-light discolour'd falls,
Thro' the rich stained window's violet pane—
For many a heart 'neath a jewelled zone,
Pants for the peace ye can give alone.

Go, scatter it there, 'mid the haunts of sin,
Where banded together the doomed ones dwell—
While Promethean anguish rends the soul,
With vulture gnawings none may tell;
Go scatter it there—for the blessed seed
May spring on the soil of the vilest weed.

FLORENCE.

Wilderness, Ky., August, 1855.

SUSTAIN YOUR PASTOR.

1. Aid him in his labours. Do not leave him to toil alone. Be with him heart and hand in every enterprise to build up the cause of Christ. It will encourage his heart, and add vigour to all his efforts.

2. Let him know that he has your esteem and confidence. You are commanded to esteem him highly in love, for his work's sake. How much it will add to the boldness of a minister in declaring the truth, to know that his people revere his character, and love his instruction! How can he labour unembarrassed, unless assured he has a place in the affections of those for whom he labours? Let him know by your conduct that you have an affection for him; speak well of him to others, especially to those of the world, that they respect him also; it will add to his influence and give authority to his preaching.

3. Attend upon his ministry. Here is a duty you owe to him, yourself, and to others. If he is bound to preach, you are equally bound to hear. If a trifling excuse should not detain him from the house of God, it should not you. How discouraging to the minister to find his congregation careless about their attendance at the sanctuary; to see the seats of the members of his church often vacant. Be constant, then, in your attendance. Then your minister, as he sits down to prepare with careful toil for the returning Sabbath, will be cheered with the encouraging thought, that his church with a full congregation will be present to hear. Thus you will add efficiency to his efforts.

4. Pray for the blessing of God upon his labours. However talented, faithful, and beloved your minister may be, without God's blessing, all his labours will be fruitless. You should, therefore, offer earnest, persevering prayers, that the seed sown may bring forth fruit to the glory of God. How much the apostles of our Lord felt the need of the prayers of the saints. "Brethren, pray for us," was often and earnestly repeated by them. When you retire from the world to hold communion with God, forget not him who ministers to you in holy things.

5. Set home his preaching by the example of a holy life. How often the minister is discouraged, his instruction worse than lost, in consequence of the unholy lives of church members. What confidence the minister feels, as he warns the impenitent, and dwells upon the power and glory and influence of the gospel, when he realizes that he has around him, in the persons of the saints, a cloud of witnesses, whose holy lives testify to the truth he proclaims! How powerfully such preaching is enforced! How much, in this way, you may add efficiently to the efforts of your minister!

6. Lastly, aid him by freeing his hands for the work. Remember he is under a solemn charge to give himself wholly to the ministry. His business is to watch for souls and feed the flock of God. He cannot be an able minister of the New Testament without time and toil. Time to visit his people and know their wants; toil in study, prayer, and careful preparation for his work. And while he thus sows unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if he should reap your carnal things? Does not the Bible declare the labourer is worthy of his hire—that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel? If, then, you demand his services, if you desire his visits, and ask of him a careful preparation for the duties of the Sabbath, render him such aid as will leave him full time to devote himself to the work.—Presbyterian Advocate.

JEALOUSY AMONG MINISTERS.

We have read Sunny-Side and Shady-Side, and we have sometimes thought that we could write an Under-Side—that might contain revelations not brought to light in either of these volumes. Ministers have troubles enough, it is true, but these troubles do not all come from restless churches and meddlesome deacons. With sorrow we confess it, there is among ministers, as in every other professional class, an unworthy jealousy of the reputation and success of those who are more popular. In conversations about brethren, we sometimes mark with pain a disposition to criticise and disparage, rather than to approve and to rejoice in their success. We know sincere and good men who are yet so extremely sensitive to their own reputations, that they cannot bear to hear any body praised but themselves—as if whatever was added to another's fame was so much taken from their own. They seem unwilling to concede the talents of superior men. If a distinguished preacher is named, they throw in abatements to qualify the general praise. These criticisms may be just, but they seem to be made in an unbrotherly spirit. Not that jealousy is peculiar to one profession. On the contrary, we think ministers have far less of it than either lawyers or doctors, for they do not so often come into close contact as immediate rivals. But it is a portion of human infirmity which cleaves even to good men, and which stains the whiteness of their garments.

Is it not time to have done with this miserable feeling, and to cherish a noble and generous pride and joy in the labours of others? The world is wide enough for us all. A body of men, organized and combined for a great moral end, ought to be animated by the noblest passions and by the most generous spirit towards each other. Comrades in war, brave champions in arms, they ought to be so intent on the general victory as to forget their petty claims for promotion. In the Christian Church there is ample space for thousands of the gifted good. The more strong men we have in the pulpit the better. Our numbers are all too few for the battle we have to fight. We hail therefore every mighty man as a new champion in the Christian host, and our hearts swell with joy as we see a fresh young giant rushing into the battle. All honour to the learned and the eloquent, whose pens and tongues are wielded for the truth. Most humbly do we give thanks to God, whenever we see a man of power rising up in one of our cities. Our hope for the church revives, as we think how many such are scattered over the land; and when one by one they depart, we mourn their death, and pray that God would raise up others of equal courage to fight over the same battles for the next generation.—N. Y. Evang.

Think not, because you admire the gilded skies, that your hearts are necessarily drawn closer to Him who sitteth upon the throne of heaven; that because you gaze with delight on the painted petals of a flower, you love Him more who is emphatically the "Rose of Sharon" and the "Lily of the Valley." It is possible, very possible, to have a heart overflowing with sensibility and joy when contemplating the gifts of God, without feeling one particle of love to God, and to his Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.
Associate Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.
Treasurer—Samuel D. Powel.
Address, Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut st. Philadelphia.
Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.
Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:
J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.

STATE OF THE TREASURY.

From the last monthly statement received from the Executive Committee at Louisville, it appears that their treasury is nearly exhausted (the balance in hand on the 1st of October, being only fifty-four dollars and ninety-one cents,) and the committee have advised us that they will be under the necessity of drawing largely upon the Treasury at Philadelphia to meet their accruing liabilities.

The amount in the Treasury at Philadelphia has been greatly reduced since the beginning of the present fiscal year, (the balance having been diminished more than one-half,) so that unless contributions are speedily and liberally remitted, the Board will soon be unable to meet their liabilities. To the friends of the cause, this simple statement, we presume, will be sufficient to induce them to furnish, promptly and adequately, the aid which is obviously indispensable.

FISCAL YEAR ENDS ON THE 1st OF MARCH.

We desire thus early to remind the churches, that the fiscal year of the Board of Domestic Missions will terminate on the first day of March. The reason for this change may be found on page forty-one of the last Annual Report of the Board. All who wish to have their contributions included in the account of this year, will please forward them in season. As the cash account will be closed on the first of March, no remittance received at the office after that date can be included in the report for this fiscal year.

We would also respectfully call the attention of the Presbyterial Treasurers to this matter, and request them to forward their accounts as promptly as possible.

SOUTHERN AID SOCIETY.

The Southern Aid Society have recently sent to the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and have also published in the newspapers, a reply to the resolutions of the Board assigning their reasons for declining to receive the proffered donation, by the Southern Aid Society, of a thousand dollars, for distribution among Old-school Presbyterian Churches in the South. In their reply, their original letter conveying the offer, is said to have been a private note of inquiry, and the Board are apparently complained of for having given publicity to the correspondence. They endeavour, moreover, to show that there is a great necessity for their specific organization, and that it does not occasion a waste of missionary funds. They deny that there is any essential difference between their voluntary Association and an ecclesiastical Board, and express surprise that the Board of Missions should not comprehend and appreciate the constitution and objects of their Society.

The communication of the Southern Aid Society (of which the foregoing is a brief synopsis) having been laid before the Board of Missions, at their monthly meeting held on Monday, the 8th inst., it was referred to the Corresponding Secretary, for the purpose of answering it. The answer is subjoined:

Mission Rooms, Philadelphia,
October 9, 1855.

Rev. Joseph C. Stiles, D. D., General Agent of the Southern Aid Society.

Rev. and Dear Sir—Your official communication, in reply to the resolutions of the Board of Missions declining to accept the donation of a thousand dollars from the Southern Aid Society, for distribution among the Old-school Presbyterian Churches in the South, has been received; and in accordance with the instructions of the Board, I have the pleasure of forwarding to you the following answer, with the request that the same may be presented to the Society which you represent.

In the commencement of your reply, you describe your original letter as a "private business note," and seem to complain of our having published the correspondence which had passed between us. In vindication of our conduct, we make the following remarks:

Your letter was not marked private, nor did it contain any intimation that you wished it to be so considered. The letter sent by you was official, addressed to a public body, and related to a public matter; and the minute adopted by the Board of Missions was of the same public character: and therefore we judged it not only consistent with courtesy, but in conformity with our duty also, to give publicity to our official action.

Besides, the subject matter of your official letter had been previously published, either by the officers of your Society or its confidential friends. Prior to any action of our Board, the newspapers had announced that the Southern Aid Society had made a donation of a thousand dollars to the Old-school Presbyterian Board of Missions. It seemed to us expedient to give equal publicity to the actual truth, that the Board of Missions had not accepted the proffered donation, and our reasons for declining to receive it.

Moreover, it is the habit of Old-school Presbyterians to act openly and frankly, to let the public know candidly what they do, and why they do it; and as such is our custom, our conduct with reference to this particular matter is just what might have been expected of us, and ought not to be regarded as an intended personal offence to you.

If the publicity we have given this matter has made such an exposé of the constitution and objects of your Society as will greatly hinder, if not entirely prevent the collection of funds by you, from the Old-school Presbyterians, you ought not to reflect upon us, who never sought the occasion; but rather find fault with yourselves, for having so unwisely placed us in circumstances which could not but oblige us publicly to declare the truth.

In the course of your reply, you insist upon it that the Southern Aid Society is necessary. In one sense, my dear sir, we do not question that it is. We have no doubt that the supporters of the American Home Missionary Society, who are abolitionists, do object to the expenditure of the funds of that Society in the South; nor do we doubt that the well-known anti-slavery policy of that Association has greatly prejudiced the people of the South against the men who are commissioned and aided by it. We can readily perceive, therefore, the necessity of some other organization for the purpose of raising funds for the support of New-school churches in the South, and the further extension of New-schoolism in that section of our country; and we admire the frankness with which you acknowledged, in your first letter, that "most of the funds" raised by your Society "have been expended upon New-school churches." We will not deny that it may be necessary for the better accomplishment of this object, for all the New-School Presbyterian abolitionists to co-operate with the anti-slavery Home Missionary Society in promoting their denominational interests in those sections of the country where such sentiments are more or less popular; and at the same time to organize another Missionary Society for the purpose of collecting funds from the Old-school Presbyterians, which shall, for the "most" part, be expended upon New-school churches in the South.

Whether it would not have been more wise, under all the circumstances, for the New-school General Assembly to have established an ecclesiastical Board of their own, by which they could furnish aid to all their needy churches wherever located—or whether it would not have been more candid to have prefixed the title "New-School" to the present ecclesiastically vague cognomen of the Southern Aid Society, it is not, perhaps, for us to say. Sure we are, that if by doing either, New-schoolmen had suffered pecuniarily, by the non-cooperation of Old-school Presbyterians, neither that denomination, nor its present voluntary auxiliary, would, in either case, have had less of the respect and confidence of intelligent and guileless men.

But when we affirmed that the existence of the Southern Aid Society is "unnecessary," we expressly referred to our own denomination. Our language was, "so far as our branch of the Church of Christ is concerned, there is not, in our judgment, any necessity for any other organization besides our Board of Missions for the purpose of aiding our churches in this country. All who desire to assist our churches can contribute directly to the Board of Missions, established and controlled by our General Assembly."

So, with respect to the extravagance of an unnecessary multiplication of organizations and agencies; our reference was to our own denomination. As all who wish to aid our churches in the South, can do so through their own ecclesiastical Board, it is unnecessary to employ other agencies, and a waste of funds to do so, so far as such agencies involve any expense in their management.

You allege that there is no material difference between your voluntary Association and our ecclesiastical Board. We are not surprised at this, as it is a common opinion with Congregationalists and many New-school Presbyterians. We think, however, that there is a very great difference between a voluntary Association, such as the Southern Aid Society, and an ecclesiastical Board, which is under the control of a divinely constituted court of Jesus Christ—between a Society which may be composed of men holding various and conflicting views of truth and order, and willing to propagate Arminianism, semi-Pelagianism, &c., and a judicatory of the church, whose members solemnly vow that they believe and will maintain the doctrines of the Bible, as taught in our venerated Standards—between a voluntary Association which has no power to repress the errors and restrain the irregularities of its officers and members, and an ecclesiastical Board, which is under the absolute control of the supreme Judicatory of the Church, which court, by divine right, has power to discipline all who acknowledge its jurisdiction, for any departure from the faith and order revealed and established by God.

You express surprise that we should confess our inability to know "fully" the objects and aims of your Society, inasmuch as its Constitution, objects, &c. have been repeatedly published. Allow us, my dear sir, to remind you that the American Home Missionary Society, during the agitation, and prior to the disruption of our Church, also had its Constitution and publicly professed ends. We found, however, to our sorrow and well nigh to our ruin as a Church, that their practice was widely different from their profession. Their secret plans and purposes—their heretical affinities and tendencies—their revolutionary and schismatical measures, led to results which are too well known to you to require specification, and which have taught us a lesson which we cannot soon forget! Is it any wonder, that with this painful experience, we should be unwilling to enter into any entangling alliance with other voluntary Associations, which might be used, in process of time, for similar purposes and with the like disastrous results? We do not accuse the brethren who now manage the Southern Aid Society, with any such spirit or designs; but as such agencies, without any effectual ecclesiastical control, may become thus corrupt and corrupting, we deem it unsafe, as well as unnecessary, to form any official connection with them whatever.

You are pleased to remind us of the fact, that the Board of Missions have accepted, from time to time, donations of Bibles from the American Bible Society, for the purpose of distribution. Our answer is, that the Bibles, without note or comment, furnished by the American Bible Society, contain our Calvinistic doctrines, and Presbyterian principles of Church government and mode of worship, and nothing to the contrary: and hence we can consistently, safely, and profitably receive and distribute them. If the Constitution of the American Bible Society allowed them to publish and circulate various and conflicting versions of the Sacred Books—and especially if a similar voluntary Society, with a like Constitution, had actually printed and distributed erroneous and heretical versions of the Scriptures, we should certainly refuse to encourage our people to contribute to their funds, by accepting donations from them. It is because the American Bible Society cannot, according to their constitution, publish any other than the authorized version, and that without note or comment, that we can safely accept and distribute the copies of the Scriptures donated to us by them. But what security have we that the Missionaries aided by the Southern Aid Society will preach the doctrines revealed in the Scriptures, and taught in the Standards of our Church? Is it a sufficient guarantee, that "most" of the funds raised by your Society, "have been expended upon New-school Churches in the South?"

While writing of the great destitutions of the South —the prejudices of the North—and the consequent necessity of some missionary organization to supply the wants of the Southern portion of our country, you appear, my dear sir, to overlook, or at least greatly to undervalue, the existence and capabilities of the Board of Missions. The Presbyterian Church has long had her Board of Domestic Missions in efficient and successful operation. She has no sectional prejudices—and is as ready and as able, so far as organization is concerned, to assist one portion of our country as another. We know, thank God, no North, no South, no East, no West. To us our beloved conntry, like our venerated Church, is one and indivisible! Old-school Presbyterians, therefore, need no other missionary organization for the purpose of assisting their existing congregations, or establishing new ones in any part of the land—and they have great reason to be thankful that neither their prejudices nor their denominational interests, require any other agency than the one they have—an agency which God has signally blessed throughout our whole country, and which we humbly trust he will continue to preserve in its purity and efficiency, and render still more a blessing to our entire land.

Notwithstanding our refusal to accept your proffered donation, we again "heartily bid God speed to all who are endeavouring to extend the Kingdom of Christ." We assure you that we are sincere and earnest in our prayers, and can see no inconsistency between our official action upon your propositions, and our supplication for God's blessing upon all his people in their various efforts to do good. We have no disposition to find fault with your Society for collecting funds from New-school Presbyterians, for the purpose of sustaining churches of that denomination in the South; but we do object, as a Board and as members of the Presbyterian Church, to forming any alliance with your Association, by which you might feel authorized and encouraged by us, to collect funds from Old-school Presbyterians, for the purpose of propagating New-schoolism. So long as your Society avoids all interference with our Church and its denominational interests, and we have reason to hope that, on the whole, you are doing good in your legitimate and proper sphere, we shall continue heartily to bid you God speed. But we have our own settled ecclesiastical polity; and prefer, with God's help, to manage our own affairs in our own way, and by our own responsible agencies.

Believing that the foregoing answer ought to be satisfactory to you and the Association you represent, I will now close the correspondence on this subject, by wishing you, personally, every needed blessing from our Heavenly Father.

I remain, Rev. and dear Sir, respectfully yours,

G. W. Musgrave,

Cor. Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VISIT OF THE REV. R. HAPPERSETT, ASSOCIATE SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS, TO MINNESOTA TERRITORY AND A PORTION OF WISCONSIN.

Immediately above the Falls of St. Anthony we crossed the Mississippi on a good, substantial wire-bridge. We found the man who had charge of it familiar with all the localities around, and as ready, as he was able, to give us the information we desired. Here, too, all was life and energy, and every evidence of its becoming, at no distant day, a large and flourishing town. Some six miles below—after passing over a beautiful prairie—we reached the Minne-ha-ha Falls. The name is characteristically expressive, and the little cataract extremely beautiful. We were charmed with the wildness and variety of the scenery. The stream itself is considerable, and falls some eighty feet perpendicular, in a narrow ravine. The rock over which it shoots is semi-circular, and projects out far enough to enable a person to walk without any inconvenience under the stream. Here we had the roar, the spray, and the rainbow—a miniature Niagara, amid an immense range of wild natural scenery. We left with reluctance this very pleasant place, to make a passing call at Fort Snelling, on our way back to St. Paul. The fort is situate at the confluence of the Minnesota and Mississippi Rivers, on the west side of the Mississippi. The buildings for the garrison, which are substantial, are on a high bluff, probably two hundred feet above the water level of the rivers. We found nothing worthy of note either in or around the fort. After visiting a cave on the west bank of the Mississippi, we returned to St. Paul.

As so much had been said and written about the valley of the Minnesota—of the immense extent and fertility of the land obtained from the Sioux Indians, by the treaty of Traverse des Sioux in 1851—we determined to explore at least a portion of it. And although our visit to this vast country was comparatively limited, yet it was extensive enough to convince us of its resources and great prospective importance. The tract ceded embraces not less than twenty millions of acres, and is probably unequalled in agricultural value by any public lands now held by the government. The provisions of the treaty by which it was ceded, are not only wise, but honourable, and liberal on the part of our government, and eminently calculated to promote the best interests of the Indians. We expected to see a beautiful country, and our expectations were fully realized. We found a succession of rural landscapes of pleasing and varied beauty. The scenery all along the river is not bold and craggy like that of the Mississippi, but smooth and picturesque. Here are the wide spreading prairies with sloping banks down to the water's edge. There again are extensive meadows covered with rich grass, and immediately beyond the ground rises up in smooth and graceful bluffs. Here and there oak groves, resembling cultivated orchards, with a back ground of apparently dense timber, add greatly to the beauty of the picture. There is nothing monotonous in the whole diorama. Every place had its charms, and seemed to await with impatience the adorning hand of civilization. They need not wait long. Already these lands are being settled, and small towns are springing up all over the country. It is but a little more than a year since, that the Indians were removed to their new homes, and even now these lands are not actually in market. Still the tide of immigration there is truly astonishing. One year ago, in all Scott county there was not a white settlement, save here and there a trading post or two. Now there are near 2500 of a white population. Nor is this county at all remarkable in this respect. We here insert the astonishing result of the recent census in those counties lying west of the Mississippi, and to which we have now particular reference.

Winona	County	returns	a population of	2442
Goodhue	"	"	"	2112
Dakota	"	"	"	3099
Wabashaw	"	"	"	963
Rice	"	"	"	1393
Carver	"	"	"	1121
Fillmore	"	"	"	2600
Houston	"	"	"	2400
Olmstead	"	"	"	2500
Scott	"	"	"	2442

Let it be borne in mind that all this is the result of but a year or two. Five years ago the population of the whole Territory was only about six thousand. Now it is fifty-six thousand. And all this when scarcely any of the resources of the country were known. What may we not expect during the next five years?

We were therefore not surprised to find many flourishing towns springing up all along the Minnesota river. Shockapee, Henderson, Le Seur, St. Peters, Mankato, Traverse des Sioux, and others, are all places of promise, and inviting fields for missionary work. No minister of the gospel here need fear of building on another's foundation. The field is not only entirely new, but open, and it is desirable that no time should be lost in spreading over it the blessed influences of the gospel.

At Shockapee we found quite a number of the Sioux Indians of both sexes. They love their old home, and still linger around the graves of their ancestors. Should they continue there for awhile, it will be only to pass away entirely before the white population, and add another leaf to the mournful history of this strange race. Why they were there on that particularevening, we know not, unless it was to hear the result of the trial of a man who was charged with selling them ardent spirits. The Court assembled in a little hall, and from its dignity and proceedings afforded us amusement enough to make us forget for the time the fatigue of a hard day's travel. The next day we returned again to St. Paul, and on the day following, in company with the Rev. Mr. Riheldaffer, visited White Bear lake, some distance northwest, where we found a settlement entirely destitute of any public means of grace, but increasing rapidly, and promising quite a fruitful field to a faithful minister.

The time had now come when we were to direct our attention to an important field in western Wisconsin, and to part with our friends in Minnesota, who had shown so much kindness, and studied to make our visit profitable as well as pleasant. A few hours sail, on a fine boat, down the Mississippi, brought us to Prescott. The town is located on the east bank of the river, immediately opposite Point Douglass, and just at the confluence of the St. Croix and Mississippi rivers. The land all around is proverbial for its fertility. About a year ago a colony of Presbyterians from Ohio, consisting of some twenty families, located here. They brought with them their former pastor, Rev. J. A. Stirratt, a man eminently fitted for this new and promising enterprise, and devoted to his work. No sooner had they purchased their lands than they selected a place in a beautiful grove for their church. Every thing around is wild; the broad prairie is still unbroken. Here and there a little hut indicates the new home of one of the colonists. Still, the Church has its place, and the first place not only in that grove, but in the hearts of these pious people. Although they have no house whatever in which to worship, yet an appointment was made, when we were there, for all to meet on the second Sabbath after, in the open air, to worship publicly Almighty God. Peace and prosperity will doubtless be theirs. For some months this excellent brother has been preaching at Kennickinnic, twelve miles east of Prescott, where they pressed him to remain, and where the colonists had for the time worshipped. But the time had come to gather around their own standard in their own grove. We shall not soon forget the Sabbath we spent with them at Kinnickinnic. For ten and twelve miles around they come up in their common road wagons to worship, and then spend nearly the whole day. It was good to be there. They gave evidence that they valued the preached word, even when proclaimed in an humble school house. We could not but rejoice that a country like this, so full of promise, should be first settled by such a people; and as we rode around from place to place with Brother Stirratt we could see the happy influence already exerted on the whole community. Here every kindness was shown, and every facility afforded to attain the object of our visit.

But our space will allow of no more extended traces of travel, and of but a few words in closing these hasty sketches. Where can we find a more promising field than the one under consideration? Here are all the elements of prosperity. The health—for no spot on earth is freer from all causes of disease than Minnesota—the climate, so pleasant and invigorating—the soil, so well adapted to all cereal grains—the abundance and cheapness of the lands—the facilities for manufacturing purposes—the immense lumber business, and the means for reaching good markets, together with the liberal provisions for educational purposes, all conspire to give a bright future to this important portion of the great West. A little while, and hundreds of thousands of immortal souls will be there. And shall our Church stand still and put forth no corresponding effort to meet the present demands, and provide for the future? By no means. The time for vigorous, energetic action, is at hand. One active minister of the gospel, with God's blessing there now, will accomplish more than ten a few years hence. There now are to be laid, broad and deep, the foundations of the glorious institutions of the gospel. The whole field is white for the harvest. Shall we not gather it? Let the living preacher go forth, in God's name, to every town and rising community, and then shall we soon see the "wilderness and solitary place made glad, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose."

CHURCH EXTENSION.

Since the publication of our last number, the Committee of Church Extension, located at St. Louis, have authorized and requested the Treasurer of the Board of Missions (Samuel D. Powel, Esq.,) to receive contributions for them. Those, therefore, who may find it convenient to send their contributions for Church Extension to the office of the Board of Missions at Philadelphia, can do so, and Mr. Powel will remit them monthly, to the Treasurer of the Church Extension Committee at St. Louis.

We embrace the occasion to renew the expression of our earnest desire, that the important cause of church erection may receive the liberal support of all our churches.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

OUR WESTERN CHURCHES.

It may be interesting to you and the friends of the Board whose interests are committed to your care, to learn something of the material which compose our Western churches.

There is a small Presbyterian Church at Marengo, Illinois, organized only a few years ago. One member of this young church was a member of Dr. Chalmers's church, and a member of his family. Another one had been a member of Dr. Cummings's church in London. Another member of this church had been a member of the church to which the devoted McCheyne ministered—trained by the care of that godly man. And yet another had sat under the ministry of McCheyne's biographer, Bonar, and had been a member of his church.

I need not stop to speak of the other members of this church. Some had been members of Congregational, Episcopal, and Baptist churches, if I mistake not. Others were gathered from different parts of the United States. One was at the laying of the foundation of the first Presbyterian church of St. Louis, and his memory is filled with precious historical facts in relation to the founding of Presbyterianism in that city.

In the West, Christians are more disposed to attend upon the ministry of an able man, than to be particularly sectarian; hence it is very important to send able men to the West. While Christians love the truth, they want that truth presented in a clear, forcible manner, and by one in whose integrity and piety they have confidence.

Another feature of the Western character, is, that Christians are anxious for the means of grace, and in new districts, will unite together in church fellowship, under a good preacher, though hitherto belonging to different denominations. J. J. H.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CHOICE OF A PROFESSION.

"I should like to become a preacher if my father will let me," said a youth who had been attending an academy at ——— some ten or twelve months. He was asked by a gentleman present, "Will not your father let you?" His reply was, "I have not asked him, but I fear he will not, because I have heard him say that preaching is a poor business."

Preaching a poor business! thought I; poor in what sense? True, ministers are generally poor; but does this make their business poor? If the sole object of business is to accumulate property, the gospel ministry offers small inducements. But business ought to have higher ends than this. The acquisition of wealth is not the chief purpose of human life. That is a good business which has in view the good of society, and which is successfully prosecuted to the accomplishment of this object. The Apostle Paul says of himself, "As poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things." Christ has promised his ministers bodily sustenance, but their real treasures consist in the possession of spiritual blessings; and their official work is to enrich others in the same manner. Is this a poor business? The lame man to whom Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk," felt no doubt that the Apostle was engaged in a good business. And his "walking and leaping and praising God" in the temple were no stronger evidences of the value of the Apostle's ministry than are often seen now, of the value of a preached gospel, in the expressions of grateful praise to God from his people for sending to their neighbourhood one of his ministering servants to dispense to them the bread of life, and to gather into the gospel banquet their friends and neighbours who were perishing in their sins.

Again, that is not a poor business which, when carried out faithfully, secures a rich reward in heaven; and this is promised to the devoted and successful minister. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as stars forever and ever." It will prove to have been a good business, if after having "gone forth weeping, bearing precious seed, we shall at the evening of life come again with joy, bringing our sheaves with us." And such is the divine promise to the diligent and faithful labourers in the Lord's harvest. Let those therefore who are disposed to pronounce the work of the gospel ministry a poor business, contemplate its glorious results in a future world. And let them beware moreover lest the spirit which leads them to object to the ministerial office on this ground, should exclude them from a participation in the rewards of heaven. To seek earthly treasures without becoming rich towards God is pronounced by Christ as consummate folly. If parents in giving advice to their children concerning the future, and if children in forming their own plans for life, would have a proper regard for eternity as well as for time, the office of the gospel ministry would be less repugnant to their feelings. Archdeacon Hare relates the following incident, which we commend to the attention of those who object to this office on the ground that it is a poor business.

"A story is told," says he, "of a very good and pious man, whom the Church of Rome has enrolled among her saints on account of his great holiness. He was living at one of the Italian Universities, when a young man, whom he had known as a boy, ran up to him, with a face full of delight, and told him what he had been long wishing, above all things in the world, was at length fulfilled, his parents having just given him leave to study the law; and that thereupon he had come to the law school in this University on account of its great fame, and meant to spare no pains or labour in getting through his studies as quickly and as well as possible. In this way he ran on a long time; and when at last he came to a stop, the holy man who had been listening to him with great patience and kindness said—'Well! and when you have got through your course of studies, what do you mean to do then?'"

"Then I shall take my Doctor's degree," answered the young man.

"And then?" asked St. Filippo Neri again.

"And then," continued the youth, "I shall have a number of difficult and knotty cases to manage, and shall catch people's notice by my eloquence, my zeal, my learning, my acuteness, and gain a great reputation."

"And then?" repeated the holy man.

"And then," replied the youth—"why then, there can't be a question I shall be promoted to some high office or other; besides, I shall make money, and grow rich."

"And then?" repeated St. Filippo.

"And then," pursued the young lawyer—"then I shall live comfortably and honourably, in wealth and dignity, and shall be able to look forward quietly to a happy old age."

"And then?" asked the holy man.

"And then," said the youth—"and then—and then—I shall die."

Here St. Filippo again lifted up his voice, and again said—"And then?" Whereupon the young man made no answer, but cast down his head and went away. This last, And then? had pierced like a flash of lightning into his soul, and he could not get quit of it. Soon after he forsook the study of the law, and gave himself up to the ministry of Christ, and spent the remainder of his days in godly words and works.

ENCOURAGING FACTS.

The following interesting facts have been communicated by the Rev. H. Maltby, of Oxford, Ohio. "During the time of interest in our church last winter twenty-one were added to the church on examination, of whom seven were young men. Of these seven, six have now the ministry in view, and the seventh has just entered college, I trust, for the same object. And of four young men who joined at that time on certificates, three at least are now ardently looking forward to this work. The case of the seven is rather extraordinary, and affords matter of encouragement."

PREACHING BY UNLICENSED STUDENTS.

The following was put on record by the Presbytery of West Lexington, at their late meeting:

"Whereas, it has come to the knowledge of this Presbytery that a candidate for the ministry under our care, now at the Seminary at Danville, has been publicly preaching the Word, therefore, Resolved, That in the judgment of this body this course is disorderly, and cannot be countenanced."

"CANDIDATES" FOR THE MINISTRY.

There are no less than six thousand men in Protestant Germany, who, having finished their theological studies, and undergone the examination required by the rules of the University, have obtained the title of "candidates" for the ministry, but have no regular pastoral duties. They are doing nothing in their profession, and though the moral vineyard is perishing for lack of cultivation, they are "standing all the day idle." This is a shame to a Protestant ministry.—Exchange paper.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

"Present Christ in every sermon," is part of his directions to preachers, whose success gave value, almost authority, to his opinions. Those to whom he is precious will never weary of the theme. Things both new and old are there, which experience and Scripture knowledge bring forth. And by presenting Christ something more is meant than teaching his precepts. The presentation is more personal, dwelling on his love, his power, his fellowship, his glory.

Walking away from church, on a beautiful Sabbath in company with a friend, the subject of conversation was the sermon just listened to: how profound, how searching, and how scriptural, too. "Yes," he said, "but did you notice one thing? it lacked Jesus' name. The blessed Saviour was not mentioned once." And so it was.

A minister of the gospel, some time since, on going into his pulpit, found a slip of paper on which were written the following words, from St. John xxi. 21—"Sir, we would see Jesus." The hint brought a consciousness to his fault, which was acknowledged the next Sabbath by an evangelical sermon from another passage: "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord."

Dr. South gave some good directions of his own on preaching Christ:

1. He is the text; and all preaching beside Christ, is beside the text: therefore keep to your text.
2. Christ is the very foundation and subject matter of preaching; and preaching without Christ is building castles in the air.
2. Christ is the life and soul of preaching; and all preaching without him, is like a body without life and spirit.
4. Christ is the great end of preaching; preaching is to manifest his glory; and when Christ is not preached, the great end is lost.

PROF. DAVIES' RULES FOR STUDY.—The other evening, Prof. Davies, the eminent mathematician, in conversation with a young friend of his upon the importance of system in studying, as well as in everything else, took a piece of paper and wrote off for him the following important rules:

1. Learn one thing at a time.
2. Learn that thing well.
3. Learn its connections, as far as pssible, with all other things.
4. Believe that to know everything of something, is better than to know something of everything.

TRUE ESTIMATE OF PREACHING.—Preaching is good or otherwise, not as estimated by mere classical, rhetorical, or logical standards, but according to its adaptedness to a desirable impression, and to the ultimate end of preaching. In preaching, he is the most truly eloquent who speaks most effectively to the purpose which the preacher should have in view. And one of the highest attainments of pulpit eloquence consists in bringing the lofty grandeur and power of gospel themes down to the reach of the humblest minds. Bellamy appears to have been one of the most eloquent preachers in this country. And the highest compliment ever paid to him, may be found in the following anecdote, which is not new, but which may be found in the memoir attached to the recent edition of his works.

The anecdote is related of Backus, the successor of Bellamy, that soon after his settlement in Bethlehem, as he was one day riding out, he met an old negro, eminent for his piety, who had long attended on Bellamy's ministry; and as they were going in the same direction, fell into conversation with him.

Perceiving very soon that he was not recognized, he asked, as a matter of curiosity—"Well, how do you like your new minister here?" "Very much," was the reply, "but he does not preach as well as massa Bellamy. Massa Bellamy, he make God so great—so GREAT!" "A most discriminating estimate," said a minister who had often listened to Bellamy; "for of all preachers I ever heard, Dr. B.

was the most successful in making God great, great in his character and great in his government."

How long might one live with some persons who are looked upon as very good Christians, and not know whether they had any souls or not!

That religion (if so it must be called) which a man keeps to himself, or which is confined to acts of kindness towards the body, will never cause the least offence; but in proportion as any person is active in furthering the salvation of others, he is sure of making himself obnoxious in the eyes of the world.

Ministers are stars, and Christ knows best in what part of the firmament of the Church to fix them.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, NORTH CAROLINA.

This Institution has been in existence, as per charter, fifteen years. Its Trustees are nominated by the Presbyteries of "Concord, Bethel, Morgantown, and such other Presbytery or Presbyteries" as may become associated with them.

The catalogue for 1855, gives the College Classes: Seniors 12; Juniors 18; Sophomores 19; Freshmen 25; Irregulars 7—total 81.

The Faculty consists of—

1. Rev. Drury Lacy, D. D., President and Chaplain, and Professor of Moral Philosophy, Sacred Literature, and Evidences of Christianity.

2. Rev. E. F. Rockwell, Professor of Latin Language and Literature, and Modern History.

3. Maj. D. H. Hill, Professor of Mathematics and Civil Engineering.

4. John A. Leland, A. M., Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy.

5. C. D. Fishburne, A. M., Professor of Greek Language and Literature, and Ancient History.

6. Rev. A. Gilchrist, (Troy) Professor of Intellectual Philosophy, Logic, Belles Lettres, and Elocution.

7. ——— ———, (Chambers) Professor of Chemistry, Mineralogy, and Geology.

The recent very large bequest of Mr. Maxwell Chambers, has enabled the Trustees to add the two Professorships last named, to increase the salaries of the President and Professors, and to enter upon other improvements which will render Davidson College a place highly desirable for young men, in which to advance their education.

CENTRE COLLEGE.

The 31st Annual Circular of this Institution has just made its appearance. Its Faculty and Teachers are as follows:

Rev. John C. Young, D. D., President, and Professor of Moral and Mental Philosophy, Evidences of Christianity, &c.

Ormond Beatty, A. M., Professor of Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, and Geology.

Rev. Alfred Ryors, D. D., Professor of Mathematics.

Rev. James Matthews, A. M., Professor of Belles Lettres and Political Economy.

Rev. Jacob Cooper, Ph. D., Professor of Ancient Languages.

J. L. McKee, A. B., Principal of the Grammar School.

S. McKee, A. B., Assistant in the Grammar School.

The students in attendance during the past year number 250, viz:

Seniors,	27
Juniors,	35
Sophomores,	72
Freshmen,	18
Irregulars,	21
Preparatory,	47

We gather the following facts in regard to the history of the College:

It was chartered by the Legislature of Kentucky, in 1819. Jeremiah Chamberlain, D. D., the first President, went into office in 1823. In 1824 the Board of Trustees, according to an arrangement with the Presbyterian Synod of Kentucky, procured an act of the Legislature modifying its charter, so as to secure to the Synod, on its payment of $20,000 to the funds of the Institution, the right of appointing the Board of Trustees. This condition having, in 1830, been completely fulfilled on the part of the Synod, all the members of the Board have, since that period, been appointed by the Synod, as their terms of office have from time to time expired. One-third of the Board are appointed each year.

Dr. Chamberlain resigned his office in 1826, and the Rev. Gideon Blackburn, D. D., succeeded him in 1827, the office having, in the meantime, been temporarily filled by the Rev. David C. Proctor. On the resignation of Dr. Blackburne, in 1830, John C. Young, D. D., present President, was elected.

The graduates amount to four hundred and fifty-two. Upwards of sixteen hundred have been connected with the Institution, nearly all of whom have received all their higher education from its instructions.

The original amount paid by the Synod to obtain the right of appointing the Board, was entirely consumed in the building, apparatus, library, and current expenses, and in 1830 the College was entirely destitute of means. Since that period, funds have been contributed by the liberality of various individuals, which, as invested by the Board in stocks of various kinds, and notes, form an endowment equivalent to about eighty-five thousand dollars. The funds are increasing from legacies, donations, and scholarships—and there is every prospect that the amount of one hundred thousand dollars, contemplated by the Synod as the endowment of the Professorships, will soon, through the exertions of their agents, be secured.

There are three Literary Societies connected with the College. They occupy halls, large, commodious, and fitted up with taste and elegance. The societies hold public exercises on the 22d of February, and on the Tuesday preceding Commencement each year. Each of them possesses a well-selected library of about 1,700 volumes. The College Library contains about 2,000 volumes, among which are a number of rare and valuable works.

The Annual Commencement is on the third Thursday in September. The winter session will open on the first Monday in November, and close on the last Thursday in April. The summer session opens on the first Monday in June, and closes with the Commencement Examinations at the close of each session.

The students are all required to attend, on Sabbath day, on the preaching of the President, unless their parents expressly desire that they shall attend one of the other churches of the village.

ARANAMA COLLEGE.

The Presbytery of Western Texas have a College chartered and located at Goliad. A minister writing from that region to a friend in Tennessee, says of that place:

"It is the head of navigation. The rapids there will always preclude navigation higher, unless a canal should be cut around the Rapids, which are nearly a mile long, and falls over large rocks, from one to five feet high. Besides, this section is in the heart of superior lands even for Texas. We have located our College there, and have about forty thousand acres donated for its endowment. If we succeed, it will be one of the richest institutions, if not the richest endowed institution, in the State. If you should come out, I would advise you to go there. For there are already erected large stone buildings and handsome; one a Female College, and the other our College, under the care of our Presbytery. We have three Professors, and on account of these institutions no town in Texas is improving more rapidly. Superior white limestone for building is abundant and accessible, and most of the houses are erected of this material. Lands around can be bought cheaply now; but a few years more, and they will, I think, be a fortune to their possessors."

He offers the following as inducements to Presbyterians to locate in that region:

"First, we have one of the finest climates in the world, airy in the Fall, mild in the Winter, cooler in the Summer than even the mountain regions of Virginia, and a luxuriant vegetation the year round. You think that it savours of exaggeration to say that a southern latitude like this has cooler weather in the summer than you have in Virginia, but our ever-refreshing sea breezes make it so: our Summer nights, too, are longer, and heavy dews, by evaporation, cool the atmosphere. Then we have as fine a soil, and perhaps more connectedly extended than any in our entire confederacy. I have been through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Arkansas, as well as Virginia, and if there be better lands, or as extensive as those around me, I never saw them, and yet I have seen what were said to be the best of the land in those States. Just think of a country bordering on the Gulf Coast, nearly two hundred miles long, and extending towards the mountains, more than one hundred and fifty miles besides, the soil in many places for scores of miles as black as your boot, and varying from three feet to eighteen inches deep, and carpeted ten months of the year with the richest verdure, and even during the months of January and February, with grass enough not killed by the frost to sustain thousands upon thousands of cattle, for which their owners on this account never provide a nubbin of grain, or a blade of hay.

"Again, lands are low, yet steadily rising in value. At this very time, when all things else seem to depreciate in consequence of the momentary derangement of the country, yet very few settlers will part with their lands. The best lands with improvements now sell for five to fifteen dollars; unimproved, from three to ten dollars; and they are such lands as will not wear out in forty years incessant culture of corn or cotton. Other lands, not bordering on the river, sell from one to five dollars, unimproved. I am persuaded that the first mentioned lands, in five or ten years will be worth fifty dollars per acre. They consist of low grounds free from overflow, with steam navigation to your door, and back of them exceedingly rich prairie, carpeted with grass knee high and as green as a wheat field. The low grounds on the river vary from one to six miles wide, and heavily timbered. There are springs more or less all over the country, which never fail; and hence our rivers have about as much water in them in summer as in winter; hence, too, to certain points, the navigation in such streams is uninterrupted. Still, we find it best to use cistern water, as more healthy, indeed the healthiest water in the world, and can be made convenient to every dwelling.

"You would be mistaken if you should deem us a very backwoods people. We have access weekly to New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, &c., and sell our cotton, beeves, and wool at good prices. Sugar has at present such a demand at home, that but little is sent abroad.

"Our society in many places is very good, in others rough, civil, and peaceable. We are a prairie people mostly, and hence can hardly be said to be backwoods in any sense."

HARVARD COLLEGE.

Of seventy-two members of the class of eighty-one graduates of Harvard College, the present year, it is ascertained that there are thirty who belong to Unitarian churches, or whose sympathies are with them; that of the Episcopalians, there are fifteen; Orthodox Congregationalists, seven; Baptists, six; Swedenborgians, four; Christians, two; Friends, Universalists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Reformed Presbyterians, and Scotch Presbyterians, four each; and there are two whose preferences are for Theodore Parker.

THE WORK OF TEACHER.

At a recent meeting of the Alumni of Brown University, Providence, R. I., a number of addresses were delivered, and Dr. Wayland made the following remarks on the occasion.

Dr. Wayland said "his heart was liquid and he could pour it out like water." As, however, every body demanded something from his lips, he proceeded to give the secret of that success which all agreed had been attained by Brown University in the last thirty years. I can only give an outline of the great thoughts and principles which Dr. Wayland uttered with a simplicity and candour which showed the secret of his power. I beg every one—especially every young man—whose eye may run over this letter, to ponder those weighty words of one of the wisest of teachers.

Dr. Wayland referred to the fact that when he entered on the Presidency there were but three professors and two college buildings; the library was small and seldom used, and there was no apparatus. There were no recitation-rooms; but recitations were held in the rooms of students week by week in rotation. Now, in its grounds and buildings, its library and lecture-rooms, its apparatus and its professorships, Brown University is as well furnished as any college in New England. The secret of this success so far as he was concerned, was as follows:

1. A resolute and honest consecration to the work to be done. He had cut loose from whatever interfered with that work. He kept himself from amusements —for which he had no taste—and even from favourite studies, and gave himself to the work of building up the University.

2. A dogged instinct to do his duty. He had a fixed determination to go through with what he had begun, and to take up every duty as it came. No doubt, in the matter of discipline, some had thought him a "regular old despot." But God only knew the agony he had endured when called to inflict pain on any student or his friends. But the pain they had suffered was nothing when compared with his. He had tried to avoid discipline, but could not help it. And now as the rejected suitor appealed from Philip drunk to Philip sober, so he appealed from impetuous and excited young men to the men he saw before him, matured and subdued by experience. They must decide on his acts as an instructor; and there was no pupil of his whom he would not be glad to meet anywhere, for he knew that toward all he had done his simple duty.

3. Never to act for to-morrow, or next month, instead of to-day. It has been my rule to do to-day what I have to do as well as I know how. The way to prepare for to-morrow is to do with a whole heart the duty of to-day. Sometimes young men take up teaching as a temporary employment, while preparing for a profession; but their heart is not in it, and consequently they break down as teachers, and carry with them into their profession the reputation of men who have already failed. Do your present duty, and never be mousing around for something else.

4. Adherence to general principles. Have confidence in general principles. Our wisest men—for I presume our politicians are our wisest men—often mistake from want of confidence in principles. THINGS FOLLOW THEIR TENDENCIES. Take a law of right and carry it through, and take the good and bad together. You cannot have the good of a principle without the evil. But follow the principle. It will bring you into narrow places and up steep defiles; but keep on, and you will see a glory beyond that will repay the labour and toil of the ascent. For myself, I am built railroad fashion. I can go forwards, and if necessary I can back; but I can't go sideways.

5. Whatever of knowledge I have of men or mind, I have got from the New Testament of the Lord Jesus Christ. Study the Bible if you would be wise. Count it your highest honour to be useful to your fellow-men.

These remarks were received by all with deep emotion.—Independent.

MIAMI UNIVERSITY.

A writer in the Presbyterian of the West sends the following account of Miami University.

"I have just received the Triennial catalogue of Our Alma Mater Miami University, which is always a welcome visitor to her Alumni. And, as many of your readers are either Alumni, or friends and patrons of Miami University, I note a few items which have attracted my attention in looking over its pages, which may be interesting to them.

During 28 years, there have been 532 graduates; being an average of 19 annually since 1826.

Of the Alumni, there were graduated, during the Presidency of Dr. Bishop,	302

Presidency of Dr. Junkin,	60
Presidency of Dr. McMaster,	72
Presidency of Dr. Anderson,	98
Total,	532

Of these, have deceased, 108

Being nearly one-fifth of the whole number.

Of the deceased, were ministers of the gospel, 28

Being more than one-fourth of the deaths.

Over one in six of the ministers have died; and over one in four of those who were not ministers.

Nearly one-third of the whole number of graduates have become ministers of the gospel, and a number more are now students of theology. This shows that a sound, moral, and religious influence has always pervaded that Institution; and that while it has done much for our country, and for the world in other departments, it has also been instrumental in doing much for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. But we observe that not one entire class down to 1850, has escaped the hand of death; while the small class of 1844 has been remarkably afflicted, having lost eight out of thirteen of its members, nearly two-thirds.

All of these deceased Alumni, were in the very prime of manhood—most of them were engaged in the active and useful pursuits of life; but their career was short—they were speedily called to give account of their stewardship. How true the inspired declaration, "As the flower of the grass he shall pass away," James i. 10. And those of us who survive, should be reminded that "every man at his best state, is altogether vanity," Ps. xxxix. 5. We should be admonished, that our day for labour is short; that much of it is already spent; that what we do, either for ourselves or for others, must be done quickly.

A. R. NAYLOR.

Piketon, Ohio, June 26th, 1855."

JESUIT TRAINING.

Theodore Parker makes the following severe, but just, remarks on the effects of Catholic training on the intellect:

"Look at the Catholics of the United States in comparison with the Protestants. In the whole of America there is not a single man born and bred a Catholic distinguished for anything but his devotion to the Catholic church. I mean to say, there is not a man in America, born and bred a Catholic, who has any distinction in science, literature, politics, benevolence, or philosopher, naturalist, orator, or poet, amongst them.

The Jesuits have been in existence three hundred years; they have had their pick of the choicest intellect of all Europe—they never take a common man when they know it; they subject every pupil to a severe ordeal, intellectual and physical, as well as moral, in order to ascertain whether he has the requisite stuff in him to make a strong Jesuit of. They have a scheme of education, masterly in its way. But there has not been a single great original man produced in the Company of Jesuits from 1545 to 1854. They absorb talent enough, but they strangle it.

Clipped oaks never grow large. Prune the roots of a tree with a spade, prune the branches close to the pole, and what becomes of the tree? The pole remains thin, and scant, and slender. Can a man be a conventional dwarf and a natural giant at the same time? Case your little boy's feet in metal, would they grow? Plant a chestnut in a tea-cup, do you get a tree? not a shrub even. Put a priest or a priest's creed as the only soil for a man to grow in; he grows not. The God provided the natural mode of operation—do you suppose he will turn aside and mend or mar the universe at your or my request? I think he will do no such thing."

PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMIES.

The main object in establishing these institutions is to secure thorough religious instruction to the youth of the church, according to the Presbyterian standards. Our church has never undertaken to erect a platform on which errorists may occupy an unrebuked position; nor has she ever aimed in her official capacity to get up a comprehension or compromise scheme, to include all evangelical denominations. Our maintenance of the truth professes to be founded upon the love of it, and to be firm and conciliatory. There is as little sectarianism in our standards as can be found in those of any denomination. But what our church believes to be true, she does not hesitate to teach to be true. The Bible being the great text-book of faith and practice, is the basis of all religious instruction, at home, in the school, and in the Church. Our Presbyterial Academies should make much of the Bible and of the studies which naturally centre around it. A regular course of biblical instruction is of the highest importance in forming right Christian character, and in anticipating the suggestions of error, so common to the natural heart in all periods of life. No student ought to pass through a regular academical training without obtaining a good knowledge of Biblical history and doctrine. Nor can this knowledge be obtained without systematic study. The religious part of a liberal course of education has claims to a place in the regular course of academical studies. One recitation daily is demanded by the importance of this branch of human knowledge.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, New York, Oct. 13th, 1855.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Liberia as late as the 10th of August, and from Corisco to the 17th of July.

Rev. Messrs. Wilson and White and their families, who had arrived at Monrovia two months previously, were in the enjoyment of good health, and were prosecuting their labours without interruption from any cause.

Mr. Clemens makes the following very encouraging remarks in relation to the health and prospects of the Corisco Mission. "The health of our mission has been good since I wrote to you last. Mrs. Clemens is the picture of health, and I have nothing to complain of. Mr. McQueen keeps on the even tenor of his way, and Miss Bliss has had no sickness since her arrival in the country. We have abundant reason to thank God for his goodness to us. I think whoever looks at his providences in the history of our mission, cannot fail to rejoice in the prospects of success that are now opening before us. Already have we had evidences that our labour has not been in vain in the Lord." Mr. McQueen, writing on the same subject, remarks that he had not been prevented from preaching by ill-health a single Sabbath since he had been in the country. Mrs. Clemens and Miss Bliss have the joint charge of the female boarding-school, which is now in a prosperous condition.

Mr. McQueen devotes a portion of his time to the male boarding-school, but is chiefly engaged in preaching on different parts of the island.

Mr. Clemens, besides preaching on the island, also has made a weekly visit either to the island of Ilobi or the mainland, for holding religious services. He is much encouraged by these visits. The people give good attention to what they hear, often ask for fuller expositions of divine truth, and they are universally desirous of having Christian teachers settle among them. Our brethren feel great pleasure in sowing the seed of the word among these dark minded people, feeling assured that it will, in God's own time, produce abundant fruit.

India.—Our latest dates are Lahor, July 29th; Mynpurie, July 18th; Sabathu, July 29th; Lodiana, August 2d; Agra, July 19th; and Futtegurh, August 2d.

There had been some sickness in the missionary families at Agra, but all were well at the date of our letters from that place. Mr. Fullerton remarks in relation to the schools there, "Since you heard from us last, the boys' high-school has been holding on the even tenor of its way. The season has been fearfully hot, and the small-pox has raged in the community with unusual severity, but the number of pupils has not decreased. In the girls' school we have twenty-five boarding and eighteen day scholars, making in all, forty-three. It is now more popular, and promises to be more useful than at any former period, if we can keep it up efficiently."

Mr. Walsh mentions the death of a young man of much Christian worth, whose dying words were, "Jesus is very precious." Mr. Rudolph has been compelled to change his residence for a time, from Lodiana to Sabathu, both on account of his own and Mrs. Rudolph's infirm health; and Mrs. Porter had been compelled to resort to the same place on account of the illness of her son, all of whom have experienced much benefit from a change of air.

China.—Our latest letters are Canton, July 7th; Ningpo ; Shanghai, June 20th. Our letter from Canton speaks of the good health of the mission families there, and states also that their missionary labours are going on as usual, but gives the following painful statements in relation to the disturbances in the country. "The Imperialist troops are carrying everything before them in this neighbourhood, and the Insurgents have lost all spirit. The number of executions here daily are heart rending, often as many as four hundred are executed in one day. During the past month, the number of executions in this city has probably averaged from two to three hundred per day. Besides this, permission has been given of late, to execute in other parts of the province, so that the work of blood is going on at a fearful rate." Dr. McCartee was at Shanghai, awaiting an opportunity to visit Japan, whither he had been instructed by the committee to proceed, for the purpose of ascertaining the desirableness and practicability of establishing a mission in that part of the world. The missionaries at Shanghai, except Mr. Culbertson, whose health is still feeble, were well, and prosecuting their labours in quietness.

Indian Missions.—Letters are on hand from the Chippewa Mission, September 29th; Omaha, September 19th; Iowa and Sac, September 16th; Creek, September 16th; Chickasaw, September 15th; Spencer, September 13th; and Goodwater, September 15th.

The missionaries at all these stations, with a few slight exceptions, were in the enjoyment of their usual health; preparations were being made to resume the schools among the Creeks, Chickasaws, Seminoles and Choctaws, after their summer vacation. A letter from Mr. Wilson gives an account of a series of religious meetings held in different parts of the Chickasaw country, which have been attended with very encouraging results, and we invite attention to the appeal he has made for more help. Mr. Theodore Jones and Miss Mary J. F. Thayer, both connected with the institution at Wapanucka, were united in marriage on the 13th of September.

Sailing of Missionaries.—Rev. James L. Mackey and Mrs. Mackey, who had been on a visit to this country for the purpose of recruiting their health, Rev. C. De Heer, Mrs. De Heer, and Miss Carrie Kaufman, sailed from New York in the barque Mendi, on the 4th inst., for the Corisco Mission. These Christian friends and the work to which they have devoted themselves, is commended to the prayers of the people of God.

CALL FOR A MISSIONARY.

We earnestly invite the attention of young men about to enter the ministry to the following communication from Rev. Charlton H. Wilson, who has recently entered upon his labours among the Chickasaw Indians, and who now feels the need of an associate in this arduous, but very promising field of missionary labour.

"I have preached mostly, either in connection with Mr. Copeland, or in filling appointments made by him in the field formerly occupied by Mr. Burnes. I have assisted him at two large meetings, one at the Depot, and one at Cherokee Springs, twenty miles off. At both these meetings I could not help feeling that whoever preaches to the Chickasaws, would have a pleasant work. God's Spirit was evidently present. Some three or four were received at both places, and several others were deferred for better instruction. The people are anxious to have the gospel preached to them. I am to supply the Depot one Sabbath per month until January, and have one other regular place besides the Institution. There is quite an interesting place three miles from us. There are no professors of religion, but all seem serious and attentive. At least six regular stations could be formed in twenty miles of this place, if we had the means of filling them. I cannot do it. I dare not promise more than three places besides the Institution, and it would be much better if I had only two. I cannot tell oftentimes how to answer the application of those who come ten, twenty, and thirty miles, to ask for the gospel. Now is undoubtedly a favourable time to have a minister in this field. It is a pressing time. Is there no one to come?"

CIRCULAR.

The following circular was sent a few weeks since to all the Ministers and Sessions of the churches. We now lay it before the readers of the Record and earnestly ask their particular attention to the facts and statements which it contains. The time is near when most of the churches will make their annual collections for the Board, and we are sorry to report that the receipts of the Treasury for the last five months are materially behind what they were the corresponding months of the last year, whilst the expenditure of the present year must unavoidably be greater than the last.

Mission House, No. 23 Centre street,
New York, August 15, 1855.

Rev. and Dear Sir—It is customary for the Executive Committee of the Board of Foreign Missions, about this season of the year, to address a circular letter to the Ministers of the Church and their congregations, informing them of the condition, progress, and wants of the great work in which they are engaged; and they enter upon the discharge of this duty at the present time with feelings of special interest and gratitude, knowing they will meet a cordial response on the part of those to whom this circular is addressed.

We need scarcely remind you, that the great work of spreading the knowledge of the Gospel among all the nations of the earth, is a duty in which we all have a common interest. It has not only been enjoined by the blessed Saviour himself, but is undoubtedly one of the great objects for which the Christian Church was instituted, and for the faithful discharge of which she will be held accountable in the day of judgment. And whilst there is abundant cause of gratitude for the heartiness and liberality with which a very considerable portion of our beloved Church have entered upon this work, and for the many rich tokens of Divine favour that have been conferred upon the labours of our Missionary brethren in distant lands, we are not to feel satisfied, nevertheless, until the ample resources of our whole Church are more heartily enlisted in this great cause; nor will our work be finished so long as any portion of the human family remains in ignorance of the Christian salvation. We ought to aim at the universal dissemination of the Gospel; the Saviour expects this of us, and this is the standard of duty to which the Committee would aim to conform their own and the views of all who cooperate with them in this great enterprise.

The last Annual Report furnishes a full and detailed account of the state and progress of the Missionary work up to the period when it was published. In looking over that, you cannot fail to have been impressed with the goodness of God, as manifested in the preservation of the health and lives of our Missionary brethren during the year; in the signal outpouring of his Spirit upon several of our stations, and in the accessions, in less or greater numbers, to almost all of the Mission Churches; in the extension of Christian education by the establishment of new schools and the enlargement of others previously existing; in the progress made in the translation and circulation of the Scriptures and other religious books, and the more serious attention given by the people generally to the preaching of the Gospel. Nor would we fail to enumerate among these tokens of the Divine favour, the generous and liberal support which has been extended to this cause by the Churches, notwithstanding the great commercial embarrassment of the past year. We are happy to add, too, that more recent intelligence from the Missions assure us that all these varied departments of Missionary labour are carried on under circumstances of the greatest encouragement. The reviving influences of the Holy Spirit are still felt, in an unusual degree, at the Choctaw and Seminole Missions, whilst there is an ingathering of souls in many of the Churches of India, China, and Africa.

Since the Annual Meeting of the Board, one company of Missionaries, consisting of Rev. Charlton H. Wilson, of South Carolina, and Rev. Edward Eells, of Kentucky, their wives, and five female assistant Missionaries, have taken their departure for the Indian country, for the purpose of strengthening the Mission among the Chickasaws, and forming a new station among the Choctaws. As many more Missionary labourers are expected to join the different Missions among the Indians during the coming autumn. Rev. David A. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, who had been in this country on a visit, and Mr. David White, a licentiate preacher, and his wife, have sailed for Liberia. A still larger company of Missionaries are expected to sail in the course of a few weeks for the Corisco Mission. Another Missionary band, consisting of Rev. Messrs. A. O. Johnson and William Calderwood, and their wives, Rev. Messrs. J. Loewenthal and D. Herron, and Miss Browning, are on their way to India, and it is expected that one or two Missionaries will leave for China and Siam in the autumn. Measures have been taken for the establishment of two new Missions among the North-western Indians; one in Bogota, the capital of New Granada, in South America, and the Committee are not without hope, that, at no very distant day, something may be done towards the establishment of a Mission in Japan.

These plans show a material enlargement of the Missionary work, as contemplated by the Committee. They have been led to assume these increased responsibilities, partly from following out a great Missionary principle, upon which they have acted in all previous years, and partly from the wants and necessities of the Missionary work itself.

The general principle referred to, (one which every enlightened friend of Missions will heartily approve,) is that of availing themselves, to the full extent of their means and agents, of every providential opening in the condition of the heathen world, to extend the knowledge of the Gospel among mankind, and hastening the subjugation of the whole world to the dominion of the blessed Redeemer. This principle is so obviously proper in itself, and accords so fully with the command of the Saviour to make known the Gospel to all mankind, that any formal vindication of it would be altogether out of place. These new enterprises of Missionary labour were so clearly indicated by the providence of God, that the Committee could not, if they had been so disposed, turn away from them, without a manifest disregard of the Divine will. Difficulties to the spread of the Gospel, which had existed for centuries, were suddenly removed, and under such circumstances that no one could fail to recognize the hand of God in it. Missionary candidates, who seemed to possess the necessary qualifications, offered themselves, and what could the Committee do, but go forward, relying upon the liberality of the people of God to sustain these new enterprises? Have they gone too far or too fast? Have they gone beyond what the Saviour expects of them, or beyond what the perishing condition of their fellow-men demands at their hands? Have they incurred responsibilities which the Church will not heartily approve? No, we feel assured they have not, if the Church is true to herself, true to her Divine head, and faithful to a dying world.

But this expansion of our labours grows also out of the nature of the Missionary work itself. Heretofore our work has been somewhat preparatory, and the number of labourers required comparatively few. But the seed-time (in some of the Missions at least) is passing away, and as the harvest season is approaching, the labourers must be multiplied, or much of the rich fruits of past labour will be lost. The very blessings which God has bestowed upon our labours, call for increased and renewed effort, and if we do not come up to the exigencies of the case, we shall prove ourselves utterly unworthy of his favour. As the result of the great revival in the Choctaw country, more than one hundred converts have been gathered into the fold of Christ, and now need a faithful pastor to watch over them. The same want has been created in the Seminole Mission, and may not be overlooked without great detriment to the cause of Christ among that benighted people. The same is true, in a qualified sense, in most of the Missions of the Board. Wherever the Scriptures are translated and printed, an additional agency is needed to give them circulation. As soon as the native youths in the schools receive a Christian education, they need some one to guide and supervise them, that their attainments may be turned to a good account; and whenever the spirit of inquiry on the subject of religion is awakened and begins to extend itself among the great masses of mankind in the East, a large number of ministers of the Gospel will be needed to guide them in the right path, or their inquiries will only lead them into errors worse, perhaps, than those from which they have escaped.

We need scarcely remind you, dear sir, that these enlarged plans of operation call for a material increase in the ordinary receipts of the Treasury. To sustain all the Missions that have already been established, and carry out the new enterprises just mentioned, will require at the very least $200,000, or an increase on the receipts of the last year of something like $20,000. To the brethren in the ministry and the sessions of their Churches, must we look for such a presentation of the subject as will secure the requisite contributions. We would remind you, too, that the Board have no collecting agents in the field. They assumed the responsibility of dispensing with them the last year with no little anxiety and trepidation. But the result was so encouraging, that they entered upon it the present year with much less hesitation; and if the brethren in the ministry will only assume the proper responsibility in the matter, there is no reason why this may not become the permanent policy of the Board, the advantages of which, in very many respects, would be immensely great.

You are aware that there are not a few Churches in almost all our Presbyteries, which do not contribute at all to the cause of Foreign Missions. Many of these Churches are undoubtedly poor, and are scarcely able to support their own pastors. From such, of course, very little could be expected; but small as their contributions may be, if given from right motives, they will be acceptable to the Lord, and should not be kept back. The practice of giving will be beneficial to themselves, and their prayers and sympathies will be as valuable to the Missionary cause as their contributions. We know not how these Churches can be stirred up to take part in this great work, unless the subject is brought before the Presbyteries, and some plan be adopted by which every Church may be induced to do something, however small, for this great cause. We urge this particularly at the present time, as we notice with anxiety some falling off in the receipts of the Treasury for a few months past, compared with the same months of last year.

There are one or two other points of great importance to this cause, which we would mention before closing this communication. One of these is, the duty of promoting, as far as possible, a spirit of prayer and sympathy among your people in the Missionary work. The contributions of the people of God to this cause, however liberal they may be, will be of little avail, unless they are accompanied by a sincere and hearty interest in the work itself, and earnest prayer to Almighty God that his blessing may attend it. If an interest can be awakened in this cause, the necessary support will follow almost as a matter of course. But without this, we cannot expect any steady or efficient coöperation. This interest may be awakened and maintained by a frequent presentation of the subject to your people, and by laying before them information in relation to the progress of the work itself. The Manual of Missions, prepared for the Board, the Annual Reports and the Missionary Journals, furnish much valuable information, and, if systematically presented to the minds of your people, can scarcely fail to interest them in this work.

Another point is, that of urging upon your congregation, and especially the rising generation, the duty of personal engagement in this work. Most of the young men of the Church who enter the ministry, have this subject brought before their attention either in College or in the Theological Seminary; and it may safely be supposed, that few of them settle down in the ministry at home, without having pondered the question, whether they ought not to go abroad. But others besides ministers of the Gospel are needed to carry on the Missionary work; and perhaps it will never be carried on as actively as it ought until they are induced to coöperate more heartily in it. Laymen are needed as teachers and assistants in many departments of Missionary labour. Females are needed as teachers, and especially in the Boarding Schools among the Indians, which could scarcely be carried on without them. But how will this class of persons have their interest awakened on the subject, unless the pastors of the Churches themselves will call their attention to it? We would, therefore, earnestly entreat you to bring this subject before the attention of your people, and endeavour to make them feel the full extent of their responsibilities in this great matter.

In bonds of Christian regard,

WILLIAM W. PHILLIPS,
Chairman of Committee.

MISSION TO THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. W. SPEER.

March 8.—Returned from a visit to Sacramento; the object of which was to confer with some of the members of the Legislature in regard to various measures relating to the Chinese. It was hoped that as five dollars each of "hospital money" has been paid on their arrival by the fifty thousand that have come to California, some portion of it could be obtained for the establishment of a separate institution for their benefit; inasmuch as so few are permitted entrance to the "State and Marine Hospital" of this port. It was considered very important to the Chinese and to our State officers, and "foreign miner's tax collectors," to have the laws affecting the former translated and distributed among them, and also to have copies of the Oriental laid upon the desks of the members of both houses. By these several means an immense amount of suffering would be relieved; the Chinese would be prevented violating laws, of which now they are ignorant; and our law makers would be able to act more intelligently in framing laws affecting the interests of both classes. Some of the best men in each house have been warmly in favour of these objects; but it is considered impossible to do anything this winter that will seem like benefitting the Chinese. The prevalent feeling is a determination to check the immigration, and to drive them from the mines; some say, from the country.

13*th*.—The Presbytery of California met in the Chinese Chapel. Lai Sam takes his place as an elder, and behaves with dignity, though the old gentleman does not comprehend one word in a hundred of what is said. He will, however, learn forms that may receive their application in the assemblies of churches, whose members are yet ungathered, and whose idols are not yet dethroned.

16*th*.—Lam Chuen, an assistant of the mission, sailed for Hongkong. He suffers greatly from dyspepsia, and the remains of an old fever, contracted probably in the mines. He has been a consistent follower of Jesus Christ; sometimes irritable and capricious, but still a man endowed with an unusual faculty of prayer, well acquainted with the Scriptures, and very firm in his opposition to all the vices and absurdities of his superstitious countrymen.

29*th*.—Went to Stockton, by invitation of the "Young Men's Christian Association" of that city, and delivered two lectures; one on the "Providential History of the United States," the other on the "Chinese in California." Both well attended. Some visits were paid to the Chinese, of whom there are sixty or eighty residing in the town. They have three or four stores, as many wash-houses, and a restaurant for whites. The keeper of the latter is a pleasant, intelligent looking man, who has just married quite a pretty young Spanish girl. The ceremony was performed by the Roman Catholic priest; and through his influence "John" does not seem inclined to favour us, and refuses to take the Oriental.

April 16.—Collections have not been taken up regularly at our Chinese monthly concerts. By the steamers of this morning, however, we have been enabled to remit a contribution of thirty dollars to the Mission Rooms at New York, in answer to the late appeal in behalf of the Waldenses. The members of our little church have been much interested in a narrative of the history and sufferings of those saints, and Lai Sam has addressed a letter to the Rev. Dr. Revel, which will be calculated to warm the hearts and encourage the faith and missionary spirit of the dear brethren among the Alps. The letter is as follows:

"To Rev. Dr. Revel, Minister of the Waldenses.

"We have seen the letter concerning the believers of the Church of the Waldenses in Europe. We desire that God, our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, may grant to each of you grace and peace. The letter states, that from the joy of your hearts in the doctrines of the Lord you purpose to establish a Seminary for the instruction and religious benefit of your people. Thanks be to God, our Father, who has granted to you wisdom and grace, and secretly revealed this to your hearts, for the glory of the Most High and the profit of his church. Being informed of this matter we have humbly subscribed a small sum to the fund of your church, (literally 'to complete your inheritance,' compare Ephes. i. 11, 14, and Col. iii. 24.) May you uphold the doctrine of the Lord. You and we believe in the same Lord, and possess the same comfort and trust. May you have resolution to maintain the love of the Lord, and may its fruits appear in its churches, and may you prosper through all coming years. Amen.

"This epistle is addressed to you in behalf of the Chinese Church of the city of San Francisco, by its elder. LAI SAM."

Sabbath, April 22.—The attendance at preaching this morning was twenty-one. They heard with apparent interest a discourse on Gen. xix. 17. "Escape to the mountain." They listened as if the truth were not wholly lost. In the street afterwards I met one of the number, a young merchant, named Yeung Faé, and asked him if he understood and applied the warnings. He replied that he did. I renewed them. He says that he reads and prays sometimes; but cannot pray like Lai Sam, (the elder of the church;) and that his room is small and other persons sleep in it, which interferes with private devotions. I recommended him to rise earlier in the morning. This evening he was out again, perhaps the first time he has come out twice on a Sabbath. The discourse was on the centurion's faith, (Matt. viii. 5—13.) It was long, and heard with carefulness by all. The Sabbath services have been very pleasant of late. I feel encouraged by the signs of earnest attention in some to what pertains to their salvation. This evening I told them something about Brainerd's preaching, and warned them lest in the judgment day, many Indians (whom they fear and hate) should be in heaven, and they with all their privileges and pride, cast out to wailing and gnashing of teeth.

May 3.—A case has been brought before my notice of phrenitis, or low and continued inflammation of the brain, brought upon an intelligent and pious American by over-anxiety in regard to his family who are residing in the east. It is remarkable how many there are of a similar kind in California. This person fancies himself pursued by enemies, by dogs and other animals, and by malicious spirits that rattle the windows, ring bells, and make unearthly noises, wherever he passes. He does not believe in the doctrines of spiritualism—seemed to take much comfort from an explanation of the physical causes of his disorder, and submitted to be taken to the State Hospital, where he will probably be soon restored to soundness of mind. The emigration of large numbers of men without their families to this State, is the cause of many calamities and of much of the abounding vice. We trust that every man, and more especially, every Christian coming to California to make his fortune, will bring his family with him. The presence of Christian families is what is more needed than any other element in order to make California one of the most delightful residences, and most promising missionary fields that the world can offer.

May 12.—Returned from a visit to the Northern Mines, during which the Rev. Mr. Syle superintended the Sabbath services (the only time I have yet been absent from the chapel on that day, except during a similar journey last fall) and the other operations of the mission. The object was to give some lectures at Nevada and Grass Valley, in answer to urgent requests during the past two years from Christians there, interested in the welfare of large numbers of Chinese. The houses were filled and handsome subscriptions were made at the close of the series of lectures in each place, towards the liquidation of the balance of debt upon the Mission House. Efforts of this kind are much needed in all parts of the State where there are Chinese miners and residents. It is strange to observe the misapprehension of everything that relates to this people. Half their trouble I might almost say, arise from the want of information and want of consideration among our own people.

Previous to going to Nevada, it may be stated, addresses were also made before the Congregational Association, the New-school Presbytery, and the Conference of the Methodist Church South; all of which were in session at the same time in Sacramento. Strong feeling was exhibited among the ministers of these bodies in regard to the religious condition of the Chinese in this State; and committees were appointed by the two former to draw up appeals to the public and to Christians in reference to that subject. It is to be hoped the good influence of these appeals will be felt throughout California.

May 14.—The legislature, which adjourned last week, passed two bills which must greatly interfere with the immigration and present employments of the Chinese in California. The first is the requisition of fifty dollars each from those landing in San Francisco after January 1st, 1856; the other is the increase of the foreign miner's tax, after October 1st, from four dollars monthly to six, with an addition of two dollars a month each year afterwards, until they are all expelled from this field of labour. Both are oppressive, probably unconstitutional, and not approved of by a great number of our citizens, even in the mining districts. The Chinese occupy chiefly refuse or worked out diggings; add largely to the trade, both interior and foreign; are the most industrious and inoffensive people in the country; and must suffer greatly if driven into the cities, towns, and merely agricultural districts, before they are prepared for the few kinds of labour in which they are allowed to engage. Still these measures may prevent others more severe, and will allay the popular excitement until both sides better understand each other, and it can be seen just what is best to be done with this strange and as yet insoluble element. Indeed the expulsion of the Chinese from the mines and from the country would be scarce less to be deprecated by the Christian, than the excitement, fear, and animosity towards our race, generated by the present state of things in the mines.

June 16.—Ho Cheung, another church member, sailed for his native land. He was long a pupil of the Rev. Dr. Legge's school at Hongkong, speaks and writes English well, and has mingled much with Christian families here. Yet he says he will never come back to California; he cannot bear pelting with stones by unruly boys, elbowing off the pavement by rowdies; being struck on the wharves, or robbed in the mines; the insults, inconveniences, and losses, of trading here. When complaints of this kind are made, it is a palliation to state that missionaries endured the same things in China; yet we feel ashamed to confess that that Christian country, of whose superior privileges we so often spoke there, exhibits the same temper and vices which were characterized as the opposite of the fruits of the gospel.

June 20.—In view of the interest in religion which some of the scholars in the evening-school exhibit, a copy of Matthew, with the commentary of Mr. Dean, was given to each of them present. They all promised a careful morning and evening reading of it, accompanied with prayer.

July 6.—A learned German, expatriated on account of his republican principles, called to read some extracts from a book, yet in manuscript, intended to advocate the scriptural view of the unity of the human species; which amidst all the excitement and temptations of California life, he has been quietly composing in the pleasant retirement of the Valley of San Jose.

July 14.—The "Oriental," which has been published in Chinese on one side, and English on the other since the first of January, was, at the beginning of this quarter, changed to a monthly. Thus, we trust it will attain a much wider circulation among our own countrymen. The price (two dollars per annum) puts it in the power of almost any person interested in the missionary work to subscribe for a copy. We call upon our friends in the Eastern States to remember our work; this will aid to inform and interest them in "these" who have "come from the land of Sinim." At the late meeting of the Presbytery of California (O. S.) it was

"Resolved, That the religious interests of the Chinese population in California, and the need and desire for information relative to them and to the lands of the East, make it important to maintain the 'Oriental,' a newspaper published at the Chinese Mission House, in San Francisco, and devoted to the dissemination of information relative to Christian Missions and the Eastern hemisphere, and to the religious and general improvement of the Chinese; and this Presbytery therefore recommend this paper to their members for their support and encouragement, and commend its objects to their sympathy and prayers."

July 28.—On dispensary days, (Wednesday and Saturday) there have been of late an unusual number of women; on one occasion two settees full. But these poor creatures are of a class so depraved that one almost doubts whether it is mercy to themselves and the community to heal their diseases. They are bought of the Tanka, or boat people, on Canton River, and have no choice but the most abandoned lives. Yet Jesus had mercy on such. The only apparent good to be derived from their coming to this country, is their preparation of the way for Chinese merchants and others to bring their wives and families.

August 11*th*.—During this week four young Chinese, one a church member, the rest inquirers, have distributed tracts to nearly every Chinese house and shop in the city. Two of the latter give me much satisfaction in the earnestness with which they have pursued the investigation of Divine truth during a few months past, and the zeal with which they undertake the duties of disciples of Jesus Christ.

August 15.—Some Chinese were making very merry this evening over the tricks of white merchants. One said he had been employed in packing salt that had been procured on this coast, in bags made in this city, that were marked here with the label of a merchant on Long Wharf, Boston, and sold for Eastern salt. He told of another Chinaman who had obtained a contract to repack a lot of yellow and bad rice, that had been purchased for about two cents a pound. Lime was mixed with it, so that it looked quite white and good; but, said he, laughing heartily, "as soon as it was put in water it would begin to bubble, and the smoke would rise." It was sold at four times its cost, some of it coming into the hands of Chinese, who were angry that a countryman of their own should have aided a foreigner to impose upon them. These stories help to form their estimate of Christianity. It is judged by its fruits. How little merchants and others, in stooping to practices which only need consideration in order to be condemned, imagine how remote and how pernicious the influence for evil.

16*th*.—By the steamer of to-day, the Treasurer of the Board has been informed of the contribution of thirty dollars to its funds by the Chinese church; which, from having been interested in an account of the Moravian Missions at the last monthly concert, they wish to be devoted to the education of an Indian boy. The name to be given to such a one is "Thomas Lai Sam," the latter name for the elder, who has returned to China; the former in remembrance of the apostle who is said by some church historians to have probably preached the gospel "in India, Tartary, and China."

August 20.—Yesterday was a marked day in our Calendar. For the first time a number of Chinese women were present at our Sabbath services. We had never before been able to get them into the chapel. It is rarely a female is seen at our churches or in any public assembly in their native land; and the low vicious class of them in California would naturally avoid such places. But after repeated invitations, three who had received much benefit from medicines bestowed at the Dispensary, yielded their prejudices. They gaped and whispered, and laughed occasionally. The Chinese men, as they came, eyed them at once contemptuously. But we may trust that the way will now be opened, and themselves and others obtain future benefit.

August 25.—There were twenty-four at preaching yesterday. The attention to the truth seems increasing. There are few stragglers present, and a number are gradually learning to come out every Sabbath, some twice in the day. O, for the prayers of dear Christian friends. Many as are the difficulties here, yet they do not seem greater than those Brainerd encountered in preaching to the Indians. And what is to hinder the Spirit from being poured out here, as it was upon the sons of the wilderness?

September 3.—At the Chinese monthly concert, yesterday, twenty-two dollars were given; which makes eighty, during six months. These are but a few poor men, without steady employment. Surely there is a working of Divine power, when a race that is so covetous, thus warms toward perishing souls. Yeung Fo, a few days since asked to be baptized, and made the inquiry, Whether in that case he would be expected to give up his business as a rice-packer. He seemed ready to "count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ." He appears more stirred up in soul than any Chinaman I have seen. May he have grace from above to persevere!

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

LETTER FROM REV. J. F. ULMANN.

Conversion and baptism of a Mohammedan and his wife.

In my last letter I told you of several persons who were inquiring after the truth, both in the city and also some of our boys in the High-school. I am now thankful indeed, to be able to tell you, that two have been baptized on the first of July, Baber Khan and his wife.

Baber Khan has been an inquirer for years, and was long since convinced of the truth of Christianity, but though he knew that Mohammedanism was false, and Christianity true, yet he had never felt the power of the word of God in his own heart, until about five months since; or, as he in the accompanying letter, written to the Juvenile Missionary Society, Second Church, Steubenville, Ohio, says, his reason has been long convinced of the truth of Christianity, but his heart felt not its power. About a year since, he with two more of the schoolboys came to me, requesting that I would give them more instruction in the doctrines of the Bible, and this led me to commence a course of public lectures in the city, of course in the Hindustanee language, which with some unavoidable interruption, I have continued up to the present day. The Lord, in great mercy, has been pleased to bless these my poor efforts, both in the lectures and also private interviews which I had from time to time with the young converts, and also one or two others who are in an earnest inquiring state. Baber owns that the instructions of the Bible in his own Hindustanee language, first touched his heart. He feels indeed thankful to every one under whose tuition he has been, but as English was the medium through which he was taught, these instructions did not come home to his heart. He had also studied the evidences of Christianity in English, but though he understood what he read, yet the often expressed remark, that evidences are more for believers than unbelievers, was verified also in regard to Baber Khan; it had apparently no particular effect upon him. I have no doubt that all these various means of declaring the truth were more or less instrumental in bringing about his conversion, but it was only five months since, that he commenced really to consider his sinful state, and felt the necessity of a Saviour. He began then to pray, and that earnestly, and was often affected even to tears, because his unremoved load of sin made him feel extremely miserable. The Holy Spirit was evidently working in his heart.

Whilst he himself was very much engaged in thinking about his own salvation, he neglected not to teach his wife. He married a few years ago, and one of his first cares then was to teach his wife to read and to write. Several times he brought her to me, though rather stealthily, as it is a breach of Mohammedan etiquette to expose a wife to the view of another man; and on these occasions I examined her as to the progress she had made. The books in which he taught her, were Dr. Barth's Bible Stories, and Mrs. Sherwood's Indian Pilgrim, an imitation of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, adapted to the natives of India. Thus, by teaching her the history of our Lord, he gradually prepared her for the great change that was to take place; and as soon as he had resolved on becoming a Christian, he informed her of his intentions, and received a somewhat reluctant promise that she would follow him. Bunnoo—this is her name—thought much of her mother, brother, sister, and other friends and relations among the Mohammedans, who, in the case of her becoming a Christian, would not only forsake, but hate her. Baber Khan had passed through this contest before, and found now no difficulty whatever in separating from friends who had nothing in common with him but a name which he hated, as he had received it from an imposter. In an educational point of view he was far above them all. One great anxiety was, that his wife should be baptized at the same time with himself. He knew that if he were baptized, and she remained a Mohammedan, her relations would take her at once away, and perhaps marry her to another, whether she liked it or not. He often told me about his troubles, and that he was willing at once to receive baptism, if his wife would also receive it with him. I exhorted him to pray much for her conversion, for the Lord could do wondrous things; and at the same time to teach her faithfully; but in case she should not be willing or hesitate, he should remember the word of the Lord, "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple, &c," and leave the consequences to Him who had numbered the hairs of his head. Since then Baber Khan prayed much for the conversion of his wife, and I went there from time to time to have a religious conversation with her. She being of an inquiring turn of mind, wanted first to read and hear more, before she resolved; and when at last she came to the conclusion that she would become a Christian, she asked at least for some delay. Baber Khan prayed most earnestly for her, but it was, however, not until with a true heart he could say, "Lord, I will confess thee before the world, though all men forsake me, though even my beloved wife leave me; I will be baptized soon, without delay; then, my precious Saviour will not forsake me"—I say, it was not, until he was willing to forsake all and follow Christ, that the Lord answered his prayer. I still remember, when one day, with a face beaming with joy, he told me, sir, my wife has commenced to pray herself; I know its power, now I have hope; yet—yet, I am determined by God's grace, that whether she follow me or not, I shall come forward before your next sacramental occasion and make a public confession. The Lord heard his and our prayers, and blessed the instruction given to her, so that Bunnoo decided she would be baptized at the same time with her husband. But they had first to go through trials and temptations which have often with others proved effectual. Some one offered him two hundred rupees, if he would remain a Mohammedan; this he treated with contempt. Friends and relations visited him frequently, and tried to dissuade him from becoming a Christian, some by threatening, some by entreaty, some by lamenting and weeping. To the first he did not reply; the second he listened to and answered them properly; with the third he wept sometimes, but told them, that in order to save his own soul he could not gratify them, but must become a Christian. These very relations and so-called friends now tried to influence his wife. Bunnoo could bear everything except the sight of her distressed crying mother, who intreated her not to forsake her and the religion of her forefathers, and bring thereby disgrace upon her family. Bunnoo was much moved, but she remembered that even if there were no religious question to be considered, her duty to her husband preceded that to her own beloved mother, and she recoiled at the idea of what would become of her, if taken from her husband, as there were only two ways open to a poor young woman, either to be married again, or to lead a life of sin. Her mind, however, was changed in so far by her mother, that she requested me to delay Baber Khan's and her baptism a little. To this I objected, for I knew that delay was dangerous. The first half of June was nearly gone, and the 1st of July had been fixed for his baptism. About that time some of his wife's relations, rude Mohammedan villagers, hearing of what was going to take place arrived in Furrukhabad, and wanted to speak with Bunnoo. Baber Khan was rather afraid of them, and requested his wife not to tell them the day fixed for the baptism of both, as he feared they would prevent it by carrying her away by force one or two days before. And here it was where the woman showed that she had more moral fortitude than we expected. I distinctly remember the morning, when, in the presence of her husband, I asked her, Now, Bunnoo, will you delay, or will you come forward with your husband? "Yes," said she, "I will be baptized with my husband, but—addressing him—why must I hide it; why do you want me to hide it from my mother and relations? Let me tell any one who asks me, not only that I shall be baptized, but also the day when it is to take place. What can my relations do to me? I am not afraid of them." Baber Khan felt humbled yet happy. He said and acknowledged that his wife had more moral courage than he himself. From that time it was settled that they would both together become Christians, and have at the same time also their little boy, Inayut Oollah, (God's gift) baptized.

Trials of Converts from Mohammedanism.

There was another young man, a Mohammedan, in one of the higher classes of our city school, who had also, after long searching, made up his mind to follow Christ. I rejoiced to see that he was not ashamed to confess Christ before others. His boldness in this respect increased so much, that he publicly attacked the Mohammedans in that part of the city where he lived, and had controversies with them. I did not like it, and would have rather had Hussoo—this is his name—keep quiet, and first learn; yet I felt not at liberty to forbid him. I had indeed serious misgivings respecting him, and whilst instructing, I requested him to be watchful and prayerful. All went on well for a time, and he had even begun to teach his young wife, until the time of baptism approached. Then the trial came. His wife's relations, hearing of his intentions, came and reasoned with him, and finding argument in vain, took at last his wife away. This was too much for Hussoo. To love Christ more than a much beloved wife, was too hard for flesh and blood. He wavered, and at last, only a few days before the time of baptism, told me with shame and sorrow, that he could not be baptized then. My first question was, Have you given up prayer? He confessed that for the last five days he could not pray, and that now he was in a very sad state of mind, without peace, without joy, without friends, (for neither Mohammedans nor Christians now trusted him) but instead of that, an upbraiding conscience, fear, anguish and shame. I had a very serious conversation with him, but he had come to the decision, and would abide by it, that without his wife he would not become a Christian; and as she and her parents objected to it, he would wait a little longer, until she agreed with him. Poor young man! I see him every day, and teach him in the school; every Sunday he attends also divine service twice, but he looks miserable, like a man who carries a great load of guilt about with him; and bold as he was before, he is now fearful. I have indeed still some hope of his coming one day forward publicly with a confession, but that hope is very faint. May the Lord have mercy upon him!

A third one, a Hindoo of the low sweeper caste, was also a candidate for baptism. I liked the man very much; and together with Baber Khan and Bunnoo, he appeared before the church session for examination. The decision of session was, however, that his baptism had better be deferred, and that some time hence he might again apply for it. This, I think, will do him good, and I have reason to believe that he will again come before the next regular session. Meanwhile, he attends divine service every Sunday, and receives private instruction from me. I shall not tell you anything about his very interesting history, until he really is baptized, for it is my conviction, that the less is said of any inquirer before he has really joined the church, the better it is in every respect. At any rate such news will do good to no one, and may do harm. I was very sorry, to find in the March number of the Record something mentioned about Baber Khan and "many others in his situation, not far from the kingdom of God." Such news, even, if not exaggerated, are premature, and may lead to disappointment. As it is, you see, Hussoo, one of the "many," withdrew.

Third Convert from Mohammedanism.

Together with Baber Khan and his wife and child, we baptized also Nunnoo, the wife of one of our native Christians, who had been baptized some time since. She is a simple-hearted but good woman, who, though she is unlearned, and cannot even read, yet knows and believes that she is a poor sinner, and that Jesus is her Saviour.

There were, besides our native Christians, a large number of Hindoos and Mohammedans present in the church, to witness the ceremony of baptism, which we hope they did not entirely without benefit to themselves. I have several inquirers now, but the future will show whether they are of the truth or not.

Trial of young Converts from Heathenism.

It has always been my desire, that if the Lord should bless our labour, and give us converts from the city, they should, if possible, continue in the city, that they may become a salt in it. Their mere presence there would be a constant witness for Christianity. This, my desire, is now beginning to be fulfilled. Baber Khan with his family lives in the city, and occupies a part of the house which was rented for the new girls' school, and in which Bunnoo herself is a teacher. But the consequences have been as could be anticipated. Their baptism has enraged the Mohammedan part of the residents of the city, and they cannot bear their presence among them. Baber Khan has had much to suffer, but bears all with Christian resignation, and we doubt not but it will have a good effect. He is visited occasionally by inquirers, and tries now himself to win souls for Christ, since he experienced the great change which made him so inexpressibly happy. But the enemies of the gospel do what they can to injure the cause of Christ. One of the first things was to threaten every one who would send his daughter to our girls' school, to exclude him from their community. This proved effectual, and the girls' school is almost broken up. Gradually, but with great difficulty, we had succeeded in collecting about eight or ten girls, and were on a fair way to obtain more, when suddenly the storm broke out, that almost swept our school away. Whether it will rise again, we do not know. We hope it will, and meanwhile, we teach the two or three girls who attend it.

The High-school has also been affected, though not to such a degree. A small number of children of respectable natives have been taken away. By far the most of the scholars, however, remained at the school, and some of them are more than ever engaged in examining Christianity. All are as before, instructed in it, in which work, besides our steady Christian head teacher, Dhankulpershed, now, also, Baber Khan takes part. Some of the most hostile Mohammedans told me repeatedly, when I was preaching in the bazar, that we were spreading nets in every possible way to catch Hindoos and Mohammedans. Well, said I to one of them, you Mohammedans must at least admit that we Christians are zealous for what we believe to be the truth, whilst you sit quietly at home, eat and drink, and are merry, not caring the least about spreading Mohammedanism. In Christianity, you see there is life, in Mohammedanism, death. He angrily admitted that we were more zealous than they.

Notwithstanding my repeatedly inviting them to a conversation or controversy at my house, none of them venture to come forward, though they promise to do so, again and again. They are evidently afraid. In preaching in the city, Hanukh and myself boldly proclaim the truth publicly in the streets, and there we find no opponents either. There is at present a great excitement in the city caused by these baptisms, but no Mohammedan has the courage to come forward in defence of Islam. They threaten to kill Hanukh and me, but see we do not heed their threats. Some think that I bewitch the people, for what else, they think, could make natives so bold, to renounce their former religious system and to believe in Christ, though they stand alone; and to defend it and to be zealous for it in spite of all opposition and enmity from the whole city.

May the Lord keep the new converts and increase their strength and number. We have now also, once every Sunday, divine service in the city girls' school, for Christians and inquirers. May the Lord bless this also. Of one thing I am afraid, that the owner of the girls' school house, which is our little chapel, may perhaps, as he is himself a Mohammedan, from enmity, oblige us to leave the house. He cannot do so for about a year, as I took the house on that condition; but if he should afterwards, no one I fear will rent us another house, as they all dislike Christians. The best plan would be to buy the little house, which answers our purpose capitally, but it would cost eight hundred or a thousand Rupees, and where shall we get that sum from? We should have a kind of Asylum in the city, and this house would be the very thing we want.

MISCELLANIES.

WESTERN AFRICA: YORUBA MISSION.

Open-air preaching.

The great work of open-air preaching has been diligently prosecuted, and with increasing energy as the missionaries became disembarrassed of secular duties. Mr. Kefer, in his journal for July 4th, thus expresses his sense of the great importance of this department of labour:

"As we were able to disengage ourselves a little more from secular work, we continued our lately resumed town preaching as often as we can during the week, and on Sunday too, taking the services at home by turn. We consider it as one of the most important branches of our missionary work in this great town, in order to acquaint the people in general with our intentions; and may it please God to gather a congregation by simply preaching the gospel and familiar conversation on the way of salvation through Christ, in opposition to their system of idolatry!"

At a later date, September 29, we find Messrs. Hinderer and Kefer engaged in the selection of suitable preaching places throughout the town. "We fixed," writes Mr. Kefer, "on ten trees in the different districts, so that, by regular preaching, every quarter of the town will be visited with the gospel once a week."

The manner in which they are received by the people is, on the whole, encouraging. Opposition sometimes occurs, but it is seldom of a violent or obstinate kind, and soon gives way before the exercise of meekness and wisdom on the part of the missionary. Often remarks are uttered, and admissions made, which show that they feel the truthfulness of gospel teaching, as contrasted with their own unprofitable superstitions. We shall introduce some extracts from the journals, illustrative of the reception the missionaries meet with. The following extracts are from Mr. Hinderer's journals:

"July 13—Went out this afternoon with a special view of visiting some relatives of one of my servants. Not only my visit, but also my message of peace and happiness, was very welcome; but some proud Mohammedans soon derided the word of God, and I could only stop them at last by exposing their evil deeds and lies, and by forewarning them of the day of judgment, a knowledge of which most of our ignorant Mohammedans boast of.

"Aug. 15, 1854—This morning I went into the middle town, where at present one does not get that ready ear as elsewhere, owing to most of the men in those quarters being in the war, and the women and slaves are afraid, in the absence of their masters, to listen to us. I had, however, quiet listeners in two large compounds, consisting chiefly of young people, surrounding their masters, who are slave-traders.

"Aug. 17—An instructive lesson. This morning I went through some streets of the Ijebu quarter, conversing with several groups of people about the 'one thing needful.' My hearers were always quiet, and approved of what I said; but with such a smile of ridicule did they accompany their answers, which is at once painful and disheartening to observe. From the Ijebu quarter I went to one of the outskirts, inhabited by Yoruba farmers: the contrast was striking. Not only were they attentive listeners, but at one place, where they had a feast, they stopped their proceedings to hear, and the head-man of the party, when I wanted to go, asked me to stop, and to go on speaking, for they all wanted to hear more. I went home with the thought not soon to go again to that unprofitable Ijebu ground, while that of the Yorubas seemed to be so much better prepared for the good seed. Having reached home, and before mentioning a single word, my wife asked me to listen to the following piece:

'Sow in the morn thy seed,
At eve hold not thy hand;
To doubt and fear give thou no heed,
Broadcast it round the land.

Beside all waters sow,
The highways, furrows, stock;
Drop it where thorns and thistles grow,
Scatter it on the rock.

The good, the fruitful ground,
Expect not here and there;
O'er hill and dale by plots 'tis found:
Go forth, then, everywhere.

Thou knowest not which may thrive,
The late or early sown:
Grace keeps the precious germ alive,
When and wherever sown.

And duly shall appear,
In verdure, beauty, strength,
The tender blade, the stalk, the ear,
And the full corn at length.'"

Mr. Kefer, in the following extracts, affords us further information:

"Oct. 27, 1853—Went to Balogun's quarter, and spoke, for the first time, under the tree we had fixed upon. A nice and very attentive congregation surrounded me in no time. My subject was, Christ, who has received power over all flesh, to give eternal life: John xvii. 2. When I had almost finished, a man forced his way through the people, and, having reached the free place in the middle, he said, 'I am sent to drive all the people away, and you,' turning to me, 'may preach this word in your own quarter: here we won't have it. But,' added he, rather in an apologizing manner, 'I have not to interfere with you.' When asked who sent him, he gave no answer, and pushed some people away. But seeing he could not prevail on them, he left us. Some few encouraging words restored the greater part of the congregation to their former attention and quietness. On leaving they begged me to come again soon. Nothing else followed.

"May 28, 1854—As I had regained sufficient strength, and the most urging work of building was over, I could now pay more attention to the vast crowds of ignorant people in the town. I went, therefore, out in the evening; but, prevented by rain from going about freely, I visited some compounds. The master of the first one I called on said, when I had talked to his people, 'This must be from God, that white man meets me now the second time in my piazza. After his first visit I was not able to make any country fashion again, but now I am still more convinced of the truth exhibited in your words.'

"To the second compound I went at random, being stopped on my way by a shower. I told the master, an old man, the reason of my coming, and preached the gospel of our salvation in Christ to him and all the people in the yard. He listened well, and said at last, "This is certainly a good word: neither our fathers nor we have heard of such things before: we ought therefore to be thankful for it. I did not know the reason of white men coming to this town; but, convinced of your friendship, and struck by your good words, from this day I can fight for you."

"Aug. 6: Lord's-day—Went to our fixed place in Ijaye quarter, close to the hill, more than two miles' ride from our station, a very populated, but nevertheless, as we thought, quiet district. Mr. Barber and Mr. Puddicombe accompanied me there, and we commenced, according to our promise on Sunday last, something like a service. Mr. Barber read the confession and some prayers. When he had finished with the general thanksgiving, I asked whether they did understand it; but, as is generally the case, they could not at once comprehend what was going on. I commented, therefore, on the thanksgiving, enumerating the there mentioned distinguished graces and acts of God's goodness and loving-kindness—creation, preservation, &c. Mr. Barber concluded with a short address. The congregation was numerous, and the attention paid was quite satisfactory. Before we left we afforded opportunity to everybody for asking questions about anything they wished to know in particular. Some men freely made use of this offer, and we could be only pleased with the subject of their inquiries.

"Aug. 13, 1854: Lord's-day—Went to Ijaye quarter, and read, as usual, some prayers; after which I addressed the people on Isa. xxxv. 8, 9, telling them of the new and safe road God has made in the redemption through Christ; and advising them to leave their old perilous road, that they may not become a prey of the enemies, and be lost for ever. Some defended their orishas with great eloquence, but were put to silence by others, to whom I explained the matter, and made them decide the question. I must also mention, that when I reached the place, the priest of the house close to it wanted just to make sacrifice on the same spot, but, seeing us, he ran back to the compound, and threw the whole on the ground, where it was taken up by birds.

"Aug. 27: Lord's day—Went again to our fixed place near Ijaye gate. Mr. Barber had told me last Sunday that the people are anxious for their orishas since my talk with them the Sunday before; but he explained to them, and, as he said, settled the matter, and composed their minds. I intended, therefore, to dwell this time entirely on simple gospel truth, and selected for this purpose the two sentences in the communion service, 1 Tim. i. 15, John iii. 16, for my subject. It seemed they all were much pleased in hearing such words, and I could go on to the end of my discourse without considerable interruption. When I had finished, a young man began again to defend their orishas, stating that it is an institution of God for the Yoruba people, and that they and their fathers derived great blessings from this religious system. This new word seems truly to be good, and they will follow it and serve God, but they cannot part with their orishas. In my reply I entered fully, and proved that the one God cannot give different institutions to men, who are all of one blood, but that it is the invention of man, and the more clever now take advantage of the ignorant to get their money: it is also clear that the orishas could not protect their country; and to serve God and orisha together cannot be, just as a traveller cannot leave the bush which is in his way and prevents him from going on, but he must clear it away, or he will never reach his destination. At last he asked me to pray for them, that they may be able to follow God's word, and also that they may overcome the Mohammedans—Fulani at Ilorin. Another man said to me, 'You must take courage, and not get tired if we don't know at once how to follow your word; by and by it will come.' This he illustrated with two parables: 'God made men,' he said, 'and beasts, and herbs, and grass. The latter is food for beasts: men may eat herbs, but meat they like best. This, however, was only the case when they had tasted first all herbs. If your religion is found better than ours, we prefer it, as we do meat. But now we are like babies; when it is born the father utters the name into the child's ear, though it does not understand the word. But the word is often repeated, and, as the child grows, it knows the name. Therefore go on: if we have not sense enough to comprehend it now, time will come that we understand what we at present only like, because it touches our hearts.' Whilst we were thus going on, the priest of the neighbourhood approached the quiet congregation, calling out, as loud as he could —'Death comes! Buku'—his goddess—'will kill you! Make sacrifice! Fetch cowries and palm oil! Hail orisha!' The people were frightened, and many called out, 'Hea! hea!'—hailing orisha—and some ran off.

THE COLPORTEUR FUND.

As the season is approaching when many of the churches are making arrangements for taking their collections for the Boards, we again call their attention to the necessities of our Colporteur Fund. During the spring and summer the receipts for this fund have been encouraging, and there was a steady gain upon the arrearages of last winter. A large number however of students, and other colporteurs, having been employed throughout the summer months, larger drafts than ordinary have recently been made upon the fund, so that it is now again nearly twenty-five hundred dollars in arrears.

We rejoice to learn that very generally our Synods and Presbyteries have recently taken action intended to secure collections for all the Boards from all their churches. May we not then rely upon the pastors, one and all, to make such arrangements as will secure general and effective aid for this important fund?

The Board has at this time not a single agent in the field. One of the agents last spring appointed having relinquished the work for a pastoral charge, and the other having died, it finds itself providentially obliged to rely upon the attachment of our pastors to this cause, and their willingness, each in his own sphere of labour, to look after its interests. Without any settled determination of its own to dispense with the services of agents for the future, it now finds itself in circumstances well adapted to test the theories of those who believe the Boards would prosper better with no agents in the field. Such being the case, will not our brethren constitute themselves each one an agent for his own pastoral charge, and secure and transmit a collection for the Colporteur Fund at as early a day as may seem practicable within the current financial year?

COLPORTEURS WANTED.

Notwithstanding the fact that our Colportage Fund is about twenty-five hundred dollars in arrears, such is the urgency of the calls for additional colporteurs in various parts of the country, and especially in our newer States and Territories, that we do not feel at liberty to hold back our hands from the work, or to decline to do all that is within our reach. We may add too, that such is our faith in the pastors and churches generally, and above all, in the providence of God, which plainly beckons us forward in this work, that we are not only ready but anxious to increase the present number of colporteurs in the service of the Board. The Board is therefore desirous to engage the services of pious and zealous men, who may, in any part of the country, be found ready to engage in the work of colportage for the sake of Christ and of souls. It is particularly desirous to engage suitable colporteurs for the following States and Territories, viz. Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska, California, and Oregon. If any pastor should know of suitable men in his congregation, or in his vicinity, he may render an important service to the cause of Christ by directing their attention to this important work. Possibly this notice may meet the eye of some individual disposed himself to engage therein. If so, he is requested to obtain a recommendation from his Presbytery, or its Colportage Committee, or at least from two Presbyterian clergymen, and forward it, with a communication from himself. In return he may expect to receive particulars respecting the service and its pecuniary compensation, from

W. E. SCHENCK,
Cor. Secretary of the Board of Publication,
265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

IMPRESSIONS OF CANADA.

In the latter part of August last, the Rev. Wm. Blackwood, D. D., of Philadelphia, being about to visit Canada, was requested by the Board of Publication to attend to certain business arrangements for it in those provinces. Having accomplished the matters entrusted to him much to the satisfaction of the Board, he has since his return sent us a communication, from which we make the following extract.

"In every district of the provinces which I visited, I was delighted with abundant evidences of material and spiritual prosperity. In Upper Canada especially, there are wonderful manifestations of progress. In the towns and villages you everywhere observe an incessant bustle, connected with the formation of new streets, the erection of stores and dwellings of the most substantial character, while the price of land has risen amazingly, in consequence of the influence of railroad openings and the stimulus of the Reciprocity Treaty. In the western part of the province, forest lands are rapidly bought in immense tracts for actual settlers; and it is an undoubted fact, that into these districts several thousands of the inhabitants of the States of New York and Pennsylvania, have lately gone with the determination to make Canada their home.

"In spiritual things our brethren of the Presbyterian Church appear to be greatly blessed. The Pastors and Elders whom we had an opportunity of visiting, are evidently engaged with great zeal in the Master's work. They appear to realize the magnitude of the field in which they are placed, and to put forth such vigorous efforts as are commensurate with the wants of a rapidly growing community. As an evidence of their zeal, it may be stated, that the Presbytery of London, in the western part of the province, now possesses as many ordained pastors in its bounds as the whole Church could reckon when in the disruption year, 1843, the brethren were obliged to choose their ecclesiastical connection. Now there are nine strong Presbyteries, and their missionary stations are so numerous, that if qualified pastors were available, in a short time the ministry might be doubled in numbers. One most gratifying fact should not be omitted in this connection. In the matter of the sustentation of the ministry the Eldership take an intelligent view of the Church's duty, and they are always foremost in Presbyteries and in the Synod in their efforts to procure adequate support for Ministers in new charges. Lately, an overture was brought into the Synod by the Elders and sustained by their influence, to the effect that owing to the social changes which were rapidly taking place in the country, no Presbytery should be at liberty to ordain any person to any charge where the support would be less than £150 per annum, and a committee was formed to visit the bounds of the Church and take efficient steps so as to secure a liberal support for all the Pastors of the Church. So also, in relation to the Widows' Fund, which was commenced and is sustained chiefly by the Elders. In fact there is no part of the Church's labours which requires to be sustained by money, in which the Elders do not display an intelligent and praiseworthy desire to free the Ministers from any needless anxiety on such subjects, by such vigorous efforts as the circumstances may demand.

"The importance of the Colportage system of our Board is fully realized by the leading minds in all the Presbyteries; and the action of the late Synod in Montreal, relative to a Board of Publication for the Church in Canada, will, we doubt not, be productive of most beneficial results. Our books are well known and duly appreciated. The brethren are aware that no committee sits in judgment on our publications in order to cast out of them any statement which would displease a Methodist or alarm an Episcopalian, or excite a Baptist brother. Our Confession and our books are known to be harmonious, and, therefore, there is a ground of confidence in the constitution of our Board, which no voluntary society made up from different denominations can possess. The different Presbyteries seem resolved to enter on the Colportage system forthwith. They see that all that is needed is to procure the agent, and a small fund for salary and a supply of books, and a field may forthwith be occupied. It is not necessary to wait until a Publication House shall be procured in Toronto, or elsewhere, with its officers, its stock of books, and its costly apparatus. So long as the books of our Board can be procured on easy terms, and such works as the exigencies of the provinces require, may be had elsewhere to supplement them, the work of colporting, as above described, may go on."

BOOKS FOR INDIA.

It was gratifying in passing through the Depository a few days since, to see a large box of books packing for Lahor in Northern India. How pleasing is the thought that these volumes and tracts, issued by an Agency of the Presbyterian Church, and teeming with precious truth derived from God's holy word, are not to be confined within the limits of our own beloved land. To-morrow those pages, in one of the vehicles by which commerce is so rapidly and wonderfully interchanging the ideas as well as all other productions of all parts of the globe in these days, will be on their way to a far off heathen land. And when they shall have reached its shores, then borne still farther upon the bosom of the Ganges, an object of Pagan worship for thousands of years, they will at last be scattered and read far up towards the centre of Asia, among the warlike races of the Punjáub. May the providence of God carry these mute messengers of love and mercy in safety; and may the Spirit of God give them power to enlighten and to renew many souls.

We are glad to inform our readers that it is no longer a new and strange thing for a box of the Board's publications to take so long a journey. To several of our Missions in India, and other countries, we are now sending a regular annual supply of religious reading; and we trust the time is not far distant when we shall have the precious privilege of knowing that wherever the feet of our missionaries tread a heathen soil, there also our books and tracts are aiding them in dispersing the gloomy superstitions of Paganism.

A COLPORTEUR FOR THE LAKE SUPERIOR REGION.

The vast region along the shores of Lake Superior, begins, in the progress of enterprise and population, to attract the notice of men of wealth and intelligence, and ought likewise to attract in good season the eyes of the pious. This region, abounding with incalculable mineral wealth, is now in rapid process of settlement. Towns and cities which yesterday were unheard of, to-day loom up before us with thousands of busy and energetic inhabitants. The numerous copper and other mines which are opening in every direction are employing hundreds and thousands of miners, who with their families, are living in hastily constructed villages, remote from many of the influences of religion. The whole population is just now in that forming condition in which it must be cared for and supplied with the gospel. The Domestic Missionary and the Colporteur are urgently needed there. Gentlemen who have lately returned from summer travel in that region, represent the opening for useful colporteur labours as being of the most inviting and needy kind.

The Board of Publication is now desirous to send a colporteur to the Lake Superior region just as soon as a suitable man can be found. A benevolent lady has placed in our hands a portion of the funds needful to sustain him. And it is very desirable if the right person can be secured, that he be upon the field he is to occupy before the Lake navigation shall have closed. Who is ready to go?

For the Home and Foreign Record.

THE BOOKS OF OUR BOARD.

Who can tell the amount of good they are effecting? This question often occurs to the mind of the writer; and it is very natural that it should, for twice has he been commissioned by the Board, and laboured as its Colporteur. Thousands of pages of its well written matter has he scattered within the bounds of one of our Presbyteries in New Jersey. Now the question comes to him, as it doubtless does to many others, Is it possible that such books as "Baxter's Call," his "Saint's Rest," "Doddrige's Rise and Progress," "Alexander's Religious Experience," his "Evidences of Christianity," and other books of a like stamp, should lie unread, or, if read, produce no fruit to the honour and glory of God?

Now as often as this question arises, the writer feels, after a moment's reflection, obliged to answer with an emphatic No. He has been assured by Christians that they have been edified by these publications. And he has faith to believe that if he should be so happy as to reach his Father's house in heaven, he will find some there who will be able to trace their regeneration to the instrumentality of some of these good books. Should there be found but one such, he will be ten thousand times rewarded for all his hours of toil through scorching heat and raging storm.

Are these books read? I answer, Yes. Numbers within the pale of our own Church find in them nutriment for their souls, and their graces growing from its use. They find themselves becoming also rooted and grounded in the doctrines of grace so precious to our branch of Zion. Many there are, too, out of the Presbyterian Church, who read these books and are glad to get them, that they may know the truth about that Calvinism which they have often heard set forth in the most unfavourable light; carricatured as that horrible thing which makes God the author of sin, and men mere machines; and that teaches that hell is paved with infants.

The writer knows some persons, members of Arminian Churches, who have read such books as the "Great Supper," the "Divine Purpose," the "Exposition of the Confession of Faith," and "Boston's Fourfold State." And these men express their satisfaction after having perused them. Surely, then, these books are doing good, they are allaying bitter prejudices and building up God's people in holiness.

Let every Presbyterian then, who desires to glorify God, keep a few of these publications on hand, to lend to his neighbours, and aid in every practicable way to scatter them abroad and extend their influence over the minds of men. By doing so, he will preach the gospel effectively. G. K. M.

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF THE BOARD.

Memoirs, including Letters and Select Remains of John Urquhart, late of the University of St. Andrews. By William Orme. With a prefatory Notice and Recommendation, by Alexander Duff, D. D. LL.D., 12mo. pp. 420. With a portrait. Price 65 cents.

This volume contains an interesting memoir of a young Scottish student of remarkable talents, attainments, and piety. At a very tender age he devoted himself to the work of preaching the gospel to the heathen, but owing to various obstacles, his intentions were never carried out. From the age of twelve years onward he was a fellow-student and intimate associate of the present distinguished missionary, Dr. Alexander Duff, who has revised the work; and written an introductory essay on the life and character of Urquhart for the present edition, at the request of a friend of the Board, who has generously furnished the means for stereotyping the work. The subject of this Memoir was also a beloved pupil of the Rev. Dr. Chalmers, in whose family he enjoyed a degree of intimacy. He died, deeply lamented, at the early age of eighteen and a half years. The delineation of this refined, intellectual, and devoted youth cannot fail to profit and stimulate our American young men who may give it a perusal.

We extract the following sentences from Dr. Duff's prefatory notice.

"The grand object of the memoir is, to exhibit the rise, progress, and formation of the religious character of the individual whose short life is illustrated. Amid the many clustering excellencies that adorned that character, by far the most prominent and striking was the evangelistic spirit and self-devotion by which it was so peculiarly distinguished. It was this which chiefly conferred on it at once its lustre and its uniqueness. The Church of Christ in all lands can happily point to not a few young men of sincere and shining piety; but, unhappily, to very few, who, at the age of young Urquhart, have been privileged to obtain and cherish so marvellously clear and intelligent an apprehension of the duty of exemplifying that piety by a solemn act of personal dedication to the God-like enterprise of the world's evangelization." * * * *

"It is known that, already, the perusal of this memoir has been sanctified as the means of quickening the desire of some, and confirming the timid resolve of others, to go forth as the heralds of salvation to the unevangelized tribes of earth. These, then, may truly be regarded as his substitutes and representatives in the heathen world, which he had so longed to visit and help to save. And souls rescued by their instrumentality from the bondage of sin and Satan, may yet hail him in the realms of everlasting day, as, in an important sense, their honoured spiritual progenitor.

"Recommending, therefore, this volume, with all earnestness, to the members, and especially the juvenile members, of the evangelic churches of America, my fervent prayer is, that the lessons which it is so well fitted to teach, may not be lost on old or young—that the perusal of it may, under God, be blessed to the stimulating of their souls to holier and more self-denying endeavours for the advancement of Christ's cause and kingdom in the world—that the mantle of the saintly, devoted, and now glorified Urquhart may fall on not a few youthful, ardent disciples, who, imbued with a double portion of his spirit, may be privileged to rear the standard of the cross over many a hitherto unconquered province of Satan's empire."

The testimony of Dr. Chalmers, in reference to the intellectual and spiritual character of Urquhart, may also be usefully inserted here:

"My first knowledge of him, was as a student, in which capacity, he far outpeered all his fellows; and in a class of uncommon force and brilliancy of talent, shone forth as a star of the first magnitude.

"For several months, I only recognized him as a person of fine taste, and lofty intellect; which, teeming forth, as they did from one who had not yet terminated his boyhood, gave the indication, and the promise, of something quite superlative in future life. It was not till after I had, for a time, admired his capacities for science, that I knew him as the object of a far higher admiration, for his deep and devoted sacredness.

"It was in the second session of my acquaintance with him, that I devolved upon him the care of a Sabbath-school, which I had formed. In the conduct of this little seminary, he displayed a tact and a talent which were quite admirable, and I felt myself far outrun by him, in the power of kind and impressive communication; and in that faculty, by which he commanded the interest of the pupils, and could gain, at all times, the entire sympathy of their understanding. Indeed, all his endowments, whether of the head or of the heart, were in the best possible keeping. For example, he was alike literary and mathematical, and combined the utmost beauty of composition, with the rigour and precision of the exact sciences. But his crowning excellence was his piety; that virtue which matured him so early for heaven, and bore him in triumph from that earth on which he hath so briefly sojourned. This religious spirit gave a certain ethereal hue to all his college exhibitions. He had the amplitude of genius, but none of its irregularities."

We warmly commend this volume to the attention of all our young men, but especially to the pious students of Colleges and Theological Seminaries.

The Glory of Woman is the fear of the Lord. By Charles Colcock Jones, D. D. Tract No. 174. pp. 36.

This is an admirable tract, abounding in important truth, presented in an earnest and persuasive manner. It is devoutly to be hoped that it may have an extensive and permanent circulation among the female sex in every part of our land.

The Exigencies of the Church. A Tract for the Times. By a New England Pastor. Tract No. 175. 36 pp.

This is an able vindication of the duty of contending earnestly for the faith, and rebukes fearlessly that sinful pliancy of creed or action which is ready to yield God's truth, or shrink from disagreeable duty, through indolence or mistaken views of the importance of peace, or for any other insufficient cause.

Learning to Converse. Revised by the Editor of the Board. 18mo. pp. 180. With engravings. Price 25 and 30 cents.

This little volume is from the same pen as "Learning to Think," "Learning to Feel," and "Learning to Act," all of which have been favourites with the young people ever since they were issued. The design of this new volume is sufficiently indicated by its title. We doubt not it will be found as interesting and instructive as the preceding works from the same pen.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

Donations received by the Board of Publication from September 15, to October 13, 1855, inclusive.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In accordance with an act of the last General Assembly, Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer of the Presbytery of Fort Wayne, Rev. James A. Stirratt and Charles Thayer of the Presbytery of Marion, and elders G. W. Farrington of the Central Presbyterian Church of St. Paul, M. T., met at St. Paul, on Saturday, September 1st, 1855, to constitute the Presbytery of Minnesota. Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer called the meeting to order and constituted the Presbytery with prayer.

Rev. Charles Thayer of Hudson, Wisconsin, was elected Moderator, Rev. J. A. Stirratt, of Prescott, Wisconsin, Temporary Clerk, and Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer, of St. Paul, M. T., Stated Clerk.

Rev. J. G. Riheldaffer and Elder G. W. Farrington were nominated as commissioners to the next General Assembly, and Rev. J. A. Stirratt and Elder R. Marvin, as their alternates.

Varieties.

Waldensian Churches.—The Waldenses have commenced a church in Nice, which it is expected will be completed in the spring. They have also commenced one at Genoa. The one at Turin is successful. These are the beginning of a new era, and serve to illustrate the remarkable providence which has preserved this interesting people unconsumed in the furnace.

Our Country.—The area of the Pacific slope is 766,002 square miles; of the Atlantic slope proper, 514,416; Northern lake region, 112,649; Gulf region, 325,537; Atlantic Lake, and Gulf east and west of the Mississippi, 952,602; Mississippi Valley, drained by the Mississippi and its tributaries, 1,217,563; Mississippi Valley and Gulf or Middle region, 1,543,000. Over two-fifths of the national territory is drained by the Mississippi and its tributaries, and more than one-half is embraced in what may be called its middle region. One-fourth of the total area belongs to the Pacific, one-sixth to the Atlantic proper, one twenty-sixth to the lakes, one-ninth to the gulf, or one-third to the Atlantic, including the lakes and gulf.

Our Northern Neighbour.—Canada contains 160,405,216 acres and has a population of over two millions. The total immigration into Canada in the last seven years has been 268,146. The gross revenue of the province for 1853 was 1,320,659*l.*; the imports were valued at 5,500,000*l.*, and the exports at 8,000,000*l.* The total value of the trade between the British North American colonies and the United States in 1853, was 15,630,000*l.*, having increased about 75 per cent. in four years; the total value of the trade between Canada and the United States, in 1853, was 4,140,000*l.* Between 1849 and 1854, the transit goods from Boston alone to Canada had increased from 30,000*l.* to nearly 1,000,000*l.* About 3,500 miles of railway are now chartered, of which about 1,200 miles are completed, and 2,100 are more or less advanced.

Free Church of Scotland.—The sums raised for the various objects of this church during the year ending March 31, 1855, were, for the sustentation fund, 100,407*l.*; building fund, 34,175*l.*; congregational fund, 85,910*l.*; missions and education, 61,797*l.*; miscellaneous, 25,759*l.*; making a total of 308,050*l.*

The Pope's Health, it is stated, is declining, and that he expresses doubts whether he will live to see another anniversary of his election.

The Friendly Islands, in the Pacific Ocean, have become a nation of Methodists: the whole population, from the king (who is a "local preacher") down to his meanest subject, attend the Wesleyan ministry.

Farewell Meeting in Philadelphia.—An interesting missionary meeting was held on the evening of September 23d, in the Third Reformed Dutch Church of this city. Long before the hour of service, the edifice was crowded to its utmost capacity, and many went away unable to procure places. The occasion called forth hundreds of people from various denominations, to whom the name of Scudder has, for a generation, been a household word, and who longed to see and hear the two sons of the veteran soldier of the cross, who are soon to go to India, their native land. The exercises were opened by an invocation, and a brief statement of the object of the meeting, by Rev. D. Malin, District Secretary of the A. B. C. F. M. for Pennsylvania. Rev. George Duffield, Jr., of the Coates street Presbyterian Church, read the Scriptures; Rev. A. A. Willits gave out the 72d Psalm, and offered a fervent prayer; Rev. W. J. R. Taylor then gave a brief account of the missions of the Reformed Dutch Church, welcomed the young missionaries to Philadelphia, and introduced them to the audience. Rev. Jared W. Scudder addressed the people with great power and pathos, and was followed by his brother, Rev. Ezekiel W. Scudder, in a speech full of ability and pious spirit. Between these two addresses the congregation rose and sang the last two verses of Heber's glorious missionary hymn. Rev. Dr. Boardman then offered prayer, and, after the doxology, the services were closed with the benediction, by Rev. Ezekiel C. Scudder.

Moravian Missions.—The recent report of the Brethren states that they have at present sixty-nine missions, in thirteen different countries, in which are employed many missionaries, male and female, and 212 brother converts. Their last station was formed in 1853, among the Chinese in Mongolia. A large number of these stations defray their own expenses, and for the rest only $9000 per annum are required.

Deposition from the Ministry.—Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, performed the painful duty, on the 15th Sept., of deposing from the ministry his own son, who has gone over to "Rome." The Bishop asks the prayers of the Church that his erring child may be brought back to the way of truth and peace; and that he himself may have grace to bear and do the holy will of God.

NOTICE.

Subscribers in arrears will oblige by attending to the payment of the bills which have been sent to them in previous numbers. If paid, the Home and Foreign Record will support itself; if not paid, the deficiency must be paid by the Boards from funds contributed for other purposes. Could ministers and elders not devote a little time to their collection? We know that many only want an opportunity to remit.

THE

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME VI. No. 12. | PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER, 1855. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

THE CHURCH EXTENSION COMMITTEE.

By an arrangement just completed, the Church Extension Committee of the General Assembly will hereafter use and occupy the fifteenth page of the newspaper edition of the Record, and the miscellaneous matter with which the first page has usually been filled, will in consequence be omitted. The Church will be glad, we doubt not, to receive through this channel, monthly intelligence respecting the doing and progress of this important Committee.

THE HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD.

As this number completes the Sixth Volume of the Home and Foreign Record, it may be useful to take a retrospective glance. To a considerable degree we think the periodical has answered the end of its publication. In this opinion we are fortified by the commendations given to it by successive General Assemblies—by the testimony of many ministers that they consider its circulation in their churches essential to their usefulness—and by a numerous list of subscribers who manifest their attachment by flattering encomiums, and the punctuality of their payments. We are pleased to think that for their favours the Home and Foreign Record has given an adequate return. The knowledge it disseminates has not been of that kind which excites the imagination, but without fear we affirm, that no one can have read the past volumes, without an influence for good having been exerted on his heart. And what really constitutes the value of knowledge? Is it of more value to a man to be acquainted with the stratagems of armies, the intrigues of councils, or the tricks of politicians, than to be familiar with the progress of truth, the struggles of the soldier of the cross, or the extension of Christ's kingdom? We think not.

During the first four years of this publication, the circulation amounted to a little over ten thousand: since the reduction of price in 1854, the number has increased to upwards of seventeen thousand. This will no doubt be so far gratifying to the Church as it has been to us; but why cannot the recommendation of the General Assembly of 1850 be carried out, and a copy placed in every family? Instead of seventeen thousand copies, this would require eighty-five thousand. There are, particularly, the families of the elders of the church, in which we think it should always be found; but in looking over the subscription books we find that in a great number of instances the minister alone gets a copy, and when a vacancy occurs there are no small number of churches in the country of which no member takes the Record.

We have also the pleasure of announcing that the Record is appreciated by ministers of other denominations, and in other lands, as well as by those of our own church. In the British Provinces it is read by nearly two hundred ministers, and by many of all denominations in the United States. In the United States it is sent free to ministers and candidates of our own branch of the Church, and to the ministers of those Churches who affiliate with us in the support of the India Mission. When applied for by others it has never been refused. Some who may be entitled to it are occasionally overlooked; but we are always thankful to be notified of any omission.

The careful observance of the following rules by subscribers, would greatly facilitate the business of the office, and prevent disappointment to themselves. 1. When you send your own name, or the name of another, always be sure to give the proper name of the post-office to which you wish the paper sent. During the six years of our existence there have been at least a hundred instances in which we have been directed to send to places not post-offices, but names of townships, counties, or villages. In this way many papers have been sent that were probably not received. 2. When payment is made by an old subscriber, be careful to give the name upon the books; the name of another member of the family is often given, and we suppose it is a new subscription. 3. When a change of address is to be made, we require the post-office from which the paper is to be discontinued, as well as the post-office to which it is to be sent. 4. When you remove from any post-office, please at once to notify, though unable to direct to what post-office you wish the paper sent. We are sorry to find that papers have been sent for long periods to post-offices from which the person addressed has removed.

It is generally known that the receipts of the Home and Foreign Record have not been altogether equal to the expenditure. This has been caused chiefly by the negligence of subscribers in not paying their subscriptions when due. By reference to our terms it will be seen that they are "Payment in advance." The difficulty of transmitting so small a sum is now greatly lessened, the small gold coinage and post-office stamps being diffused over the whole Union. We now earnestly invite those who are in arrears to remit the sums due. If all pay to whom bills have lately been sent, there will be sufficient fully to repay the Boards their advances on the cost of the Record.

We are sometimes told that the Record is not an interesting paper, but many also tell us that it is the most interesting paper they read. The same subject does not interest all men alike. Some find that the Record is not needful for them, because it is all contained in other papers: a thing we were never able to discover. Objectors there are to every good thing. The conductors of the Record are fully sensible that it is not all that it should be, or what they would wish to make it; and as its columns are open to contributors on a variety of subjects, they invite any who feel interested in its improvement to aid them in the attempt.

CIRCULATION OF THE RECORD.

The following remarks are extracted from the Home and Foreign Record of the Free Church of Scotland. They are equally well adapted to our own Church in the United States, as to that for which they were originally intended, and to the case of this Record as to that of the Free Church.

"It is of great, we might almost say, of the last importance for the successful prosecution of all the schemes of the Church, to have the Record, brought into every household. It is the Church's official organ. Other journals she has in which her principles are advocated, and her operations recorded more or less fully, but this is her official organ. These may be circulated, and ought to be circulated; this must be circulated. These supply the members of the Church with information highly interesting and highly useful; this with information altogether essential. These provide costly and delicious viands to sit down and partake of, which is truly an exquisite treat—articles written, some of them, by the greatest living authorities in theology and metaphysics, and by the greatest living writers in the departments of science and literature. The humble Record provides but ordinary fare, only daily bread; but just because it is daily bread, it is on that account the more necessary that all the members of the Church should regularly partake of it.

Further, the Record universally circulated would be a bond of union among the members of the Church. It would bind the most isolated and the most remote individual to the centre by the twofold cord of knowledge and love. The great Chalmers has said that the surest way to a man's heart is to go into his house. We would say to the Church, the surest way to the heart of all her members is to go into all their houses, to sit down at their firesides, and tell them what she has been doing during the past month in the way of subduing the heathenism at home, and of advancing her Lord's kingdom abroad. The people would thus know their Church, not as a mere abstraction, not as a name, not as a Committee, not even as an Assembly, but as a great living spiritual power, labouring like her Master in the work of saving a world. They would love her, not merely for the benefits which they receive through her, which is comparatively a selfish consideration, but for the good she is doing. They would feel ennobled by seeing themselves to be parts of a great whole, and that to the great results which are being wrought out their prayers and contributions have contributed. Thus would a bulwark of steadfastness and devotedness be raised around the Church, which would stand her in good stead in evil days, should such be in reserve for her or for the country.

We expect, too, not a little from the wide diffusion of the Record as regards the public spirit of the Church. The patriot well knows the importance of maintaining the public spirit of a country. Public spirit is of yet greater importance in a Church. Words cannot express the importance of training up in the Church a race of men who will care, not merely for the salvation of their own souls, or the welfare of their own particular congregations, but for the cause of Christ in the world. Under the broad shield of such a spirit, all the interests of the Church would be safe—the piety of the individual, the religion of the family, the peace of the congregation, the harmony and prosperity of the whole body, all would flourish. The worthies of the Bible were men of this stamp. Such, too, were the men in our own land, in former times, who exemplified the truth in their holy lives, defended it in their imperishable writings, and sealed their profession of it by their glorious deaths; the spring of all that was great and noble about them, next to the grace of God in them, was their public spirit. And even having respect to but the pecuniary interests of the Church, her mere outward prosperity, this is the true political economy. But how are we to have such a spirit, if not by diffusing intelligence, by widening the horizon of our people, and so enlisting their efforts, and enlarging their sympathies in behalf of the cause of God throughout the world. We appeal to our ministers: whom is it that they find the most deeply interested in all the concerns of their own particular congregation? not the man whose sympathies are narrow, whose vision is bounded, and who never looks beyond his own neighbourhood, but the man whose horizon is the world, and who, morning after morning, casts his eye, in prayer, over all the fields of the Church's operations, and waits month by month for tidings in her Record of the coming of the Lord's kingdom among the heathen.

And then we must take into account that no former generation ever had such a noble instrumentality for awakening and fostering a devoted, enlarged, and chivalrous spirit in behalf of religion, which is but another name for the welfare of men, body and soul, as we have. There is not at this hour on earth—and we do not know that there ever existed in any former age—such a magnificent scheme of missionary operations as that which our Church has been privileged and honoured to set on foot.

Now, surely, with such a scheme of operations, it is worth while making some efforts to make all our people at home familiarly acquainted with it, and to show them how God is answering prayer, and blessing efforts in connection with it. How can we expect, otherwise than by the diffusion of intelligence, to keep alive in the Church such a spirit as shall enable us to go forward, and worthily to fill

Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.

OUR FINANCIAL CONDITION.

Mission Rooms, Philadelphia, Nov. 15, 1855.

In our last number we felt constrained to call attention to the low state of our Treasury. Our financial condition is now worse; and we feel compelled to call more urgently upon the churches for aid.

On the 1st of April last, the commencement of our fiscal year, the balance on hand in the Treasury at Philadelphia, was $11,746.77. On the 1st of this month, November, the amount in hand was only $2,302.68. Our balance in the principal Treasury had therefore been reduced, in the course of seven months, $9,444.09! Our current weekly payments generally exceed $1000, and sometimes amount to nearly $1500. The churches will perceive from this, that with so small a sum now in the Treasury, we cannot meet our current expenses for a single fortnight without further remittances. It should be recollected too, that the Board have, agreeably to their own conviction of the wants of our missionaries, and the repeated recommendations of the General Assembly, increased their average appropriations some thirty or forty dollars; so that the annual expenses of the Board have been increased, in the aggregate, some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. We are now feeling the effect of this increase of the average salary of our missionaries; and it will be utterly impossible, as the Board have repeatedly stated, to sustain this scale of appropriations, unless the contributions from the churches are correspondingly augmented.

The condition of the Treasury at Louisville is equally embarrassing. Notwithstanding a large draft was made by that Committee upon the Treasury at Philadelphia during the month of October, yet, on the 1st of November, they reported a balance of only $45.01!

Now, brethren, what shall be done? Our missionaries are so inadequately provided for, even with the aid they have been receiving from the Board, that any material reduction of their support would either drive them from their work, or subject them and their families to actual suffering. Remember that the average appropriation made to them by the Board is only about $160; and that their average salary, from both the Board and their people, is only about $435! How will it be possible for them to support themselves and their families with less? Moreover, how are we to supply the immense destitutions of our vast country, and extend the boundaries of our beloved Church, unless the necessary means are furnished by the friends of Zion? Surely there is wealth enough, and piety, and patriotism, among our people to enable us to meet our obligations and discharge our duties.

With these brief statements, we leave this solemn matter to the reflection of all our people. Without prompt and liberal aid, the operations of the Board of Domestic Missions must very soon be seriously embarrassed, and we shall be unable to pay our missionaries for the services which they have already rendered. Brethren, we pressingly ask, because we now urgently need your assistance.

G. W. Musgrave, Corr. Secretary.

NEED OF FUNDS.

In view of the present state of our Treasury, and the greatly increased demands which will be made upon the Board during this year, will not the churches more generally and liberally contribute to this vitally important cause? After all, it rests with our people to say, whether the Board of Missions shall be able to sustain the missions which they now have, and go forward in establishing others where they are so urgently needed, or whether they shall be compelled to refuse new appointments, and actually reduce the number and compensation of the missionaries now employed. How immense is the territory yet unoccupied! How many important centres of influence are yet unsupplied! How impossible it will be to maintain the missionaries where they are now located, if the amount of aid now furnished by the Board should be withdrawn, or even reduced. How inadequately as yet are some of the missionaries supported, and how important it is both for their comfort and usefulness, that their meagre salaries should be increased, instead of being diminished. And yet, without a large increase in the contributions of the churches, the Board will be obliged ultimately, however reluctantly and painfully on their part, to restrict their operations within narrower limits, and reduce their missionary appropriations.

When the last General Assembly recommended the Board to advance still further their appropriations to the missionaries, they did so with the assurance that the Board might rely upon the justice and liberality of our people to supply the funds necessary to meet such an increase of expense. But the aggregate receipts of the Board, during the past year, instead of being larger, have been less than the year preceding. It is true, the falling off has been in the West, and in consequence of the extensive failure of the crops in that section of our country, and the small increase in the East, was probably occasioned by the commercial difficulties and monetary pressure of the times. But no matter what may have been the cause of the diminution of our aggregate receipts, the pecuniary effect upon the Board has been no less real and embarrassing; and the necessity for enlarged contributions, this year, no less imperative.

We are aware that some complain of the frequency and urgency of such calls upon their justice and liberality, but are not such complaints unreasonable? If the claims of benevolence are numerous and pressing, must they not be presented and urged with frequency and zeal? But after all, the objects proposed by the Church are very few; and if the applications for money are too numerous, the Church is not responsible for it, and her institutions ought not to be allowed to suffer on that account. We commend to all the consideration of the following statistics and suggestive remarks, furnished by one of our correspondents, and published in our April number.

"It is admitted by all Christians that they are stewards of God, holding their property in trust from him, and they ought to use a portion of it in promoting his cause. It should not, then, be an occasion of complaint, that the contribution of money for religious uses is a part of the business of every congregation. Yet it is often said that the calls are too numerous, that the financial duties are made too prominent, and are urged with undue importunity. I have no doubt that it really appears so, even to some intelligent and liberal minds. But the system of benevolence of our Church is not open to this objection. The calls of our Church for the general efforts of benevolence, are only four or five in the year. The striking disparity between the calls and the favourable responses might rather suggest the conviction that the latter are too few; that considerations of duty, with regard to money, are unduly neglected.

"The reports to the last General Assembly [1854] show that of our 2,868 congregations, contributions were made to Domestic Missions by	1,322,	being	112	less than half.

Foreign "	" 1,063,	"	341	" "
Education,	" 749,	"	30	more than a fourth.
Publication,	" 440,	"	37	less than a sixth.

Or it may be exhibited thus, for

Domestic Missions,	1,322	contributed,	1,546 did not.
Foreign "	1,063	"	1,805 "
Education,	749	"	2,119 "
Publication,	440	"	2,448 "

"Again, as a summary of the whole of the 11,472 collections asked by the General Assembly, only 3,574 were made, while 7,898 were omitted. It is a fair and solemn question for the conscience of the Church, of her ministers and people, to consider whether the 'calls' are too many, or the answers too few.

"But I will not do the congregations injustice. They have made many contributions besides those which I have mentioned. The Church has become a financial agent, not only for her own, but for many other interests. It is the calls of these, added to her own, that makes them appear so crowded and clamorous. Applications have, in some cases, to be put on file, to come up in succession at respectable intervals. And thus our church collections have to take their turn and chance with the rest; and we sometimes have to be content with 'e pluribus unum'—one out of the many that the interests of the Lord, in the Church's hand, require. I do not call in question the worthiness of other objects, nor the right or obligation of people to support them; but it seems rather hard that the wise and benevolent enterprises of our Church should be crippled by such displacement. Other contributions, in addition to these, and not to their exclusion, would better comport with the financial agency of the Church in Christ's cause.

"Allow me the further to illustrate our last year's contributions, to give just a glance at those of the Free Church of Scotland, our noble Presbyterian brethren. They have 737 congregations, and six regular collections are appointed by the General Assembly, for the year. Of these 4,422 collections, only 123 failed last year! If we had come up to their measure of faithfulness, we should have had 11,175 collections, instead of 3,574. Their failures were hardly three per cent., while ours approach closely to the startling ratio of sixty-nine per cent."

The foregoing statistics are mortifying and painful in the extreme; and we have reason to apprehend that the number of non-contributing churches, during the past year, will be found to have been no less than the year preceding—perhaps more numerous. More than one-half of our churches contributing nothing to the cause of missions! Where does the fault lie? Can it be possible that in all these non-contributing churches the pastors and elders afforded the people an opportunity to contribute, and urged upon them the duty of giving, and yet the people declined to contribute anything? If the cause was not even presented to these delinquent churches, how fearful is the responsibility of their pastors and sessions! How will they be able to answer for their official negligence in the day of judgment? We are amazed that so large a number of churches should prove thus deficient in duty from year to year, notwithstanding the appeals that have been made to them by the Board for assistance—the repeated and earnest exhortations and injunctions of the General Assembly—the wants of millions perishing in their ignorance and sin—and the imperative commands of their divine Lord!

But the past is beyond recall. What shall be done in future? Will not the officers of these churches see to it, that their people shall at least have an opportunity of contributing? Will they not faithfully discharge their own official and personal duty, by presenting the cause and urging its claims upon the justice and liberality of their congregations? And will not the people respond cheerfully and generously to such appeals? Consider, dear brethren, your personal obligations and duties. Have you not been indebted to Providence for all the means that you possess? If truly the children of God, have you not been indebted to Christ for salvation? Contemplate the miserable condition of millions who are destitute as yet of the means of grace, and who, without the gospel, must perish for ever. Reflect upon the instability of earthly treasure —the uncertainty of human life—and the solemn account which you will have to render to God for the use which you have made of all your talents. Remember, "there is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty:" and that your eternal reward will be in porportion to the measure of your fidelity. "He that soweth sparingly, shall also reap sparingly: and he that soweth bountifully, shall also reap bountifully."

But while we feel it to be our duty thus to appeal to those who have not hitherto contributed anything to the cause, in the hope that they may be stirred up to their duty, we know from experience that our dependence, under God, must be mainly upon those intelligent, conscientious and generous Christians who have heretofore contributed. To such we appeal with confidence; and with grateful acknowledgments for past assistance in carrying on this great and blessed work, we ask them not only to continue their aid, but, if possible, to augment their contributions largely during the present year. Many of you have given liberally to the cause and some munificently. God has graciously rewarded you for your liberality, and will still more richly recompense you in the world of glory. "Be not weary in well doing." God has greatly prospered the cause of missions in our country, through your liberality; and if you continue your generous co-operation and fervent prayers, He will still more highly prosper it. Now is the time for vigorous and extended effort—withhold not the means which you know to be indispensable for the proper and successful prosecution of this great and blessed work.

AN EXEMPLARY SABBATH-SCHOOL.

We had the gratification to receive a remittance of seventy-two dollars and twenty-six cents from the Sabbath-school connected with the First Presbyterian Church of Elizabethtown, (the Rev. Dr. Murray's,) towards the support of one of our missionaries in the West. This sum, we have been informed, they expect to be able to increase to two hundred dollars in the course of the present year.

The object of this liberal contribution is the promotion of Sabbath-schools in the West; and as our missionaries are engaged in organizing and superintending such schools as an important part of their evangelical labours, this Sabbath-school has wisely concluded to make their donation to their own Board of Domestic Missions.

We hope the missionary who has been selected as their correspondent, will write to them regularly, and that he will be able to furnish them such information respecting the progressive usefulness of Sabbath-schools in the West, as shall serve not only to sustain, but largely increase their interest in that important department of Christian labour. We heartily thank our young friends for their liberal remittance, and would earnestly say to all our Sabbath-schools, "go and do likewise."

A WANT OF THE BORDER.

We copy the following from the Philadelphia North American and United States Gazette of the 12th of November. It is seldom that we meet with such articles in our secular newspapers; and coming from such a source, it may perhaps be read by many with the greater interest on that account. The sentiments expressed in the article, respecting the necessity and importance of sending ministers to our newer States and Territories, are eminently wise and seasonable; and we heartily commend them, not only to all the members of our churches, but to all good citizens who may read our paper.

A WANT OF THE BORDER.

A rolling tide of emigration necessarily carries with it wealth and the means which produce wealth —energy and practical knowledge of agriculture, commerce, and mechanics. Settlers are supplied with the appliances to level forests, build roads, and erect towns; and they speedily convert the uninhabited tract into a teeming land. But there are other wants than mere physical ones. The mind and the moral nature need care and direction. In old settlements there are appointed teachers and preachers, and established schools, colleges and churches. These serve for the education of the young, and for the restraint and guidance of the adult, that the lessons acquired in infancy and in youth may be productive and influential in maturer years. Man, though ever so well taught in infancy, is prone to forget his religious and moral obligations, unless in active life he is still led and guided; and hence in all ages, and under all systems, Christian and Pagan, the necessity of continued religious culture has been recognized and provided for.

These provisions for education and for religious worship are the work of an advanced state of society. Emigrants do not usually carry with them teachers and preachers. In former times, when colonies were conducted by proprietaries, as in Pennsylvania, or by organized companies, such as settled Massachusetts, or in whatever other way there was a central head to direct operations, education and religion were well looked after. Everybody knew that the success of a community depended upon its culture; and when a colony was projected, care was usually taken of this among the other essentials of permanence and prosperity. But the emigration which is now populating the western wilderness, and with rapidity almost unappreciated occupying the habitable spots on the continent, is, with exceptions unorganized. Men do not go in bands, and with definite ideas of the form of social order they are to establish. They do not usually take with them their educational advantages, or their religious instructors. They go animated chiefly with the desire to mend or to increase their fortunes. They have little in common with each other, except a spirit of adventure. They represent all nations in their nativities, and all creeds, and no creed in their religion. They fuse into a curious mass, and are long in fusing, presenting for many years that heterogeneous state of society which exhibit what are known as border usages. And these usages include many licenses which are not subjects of boasting, however much from the circumstances of the case they may be susceptible of palliation.

Love of adventure cannot take teachers where there are few or no pupils. Nor can ministers of religion be tempted by the motives which actuate pioneer settlers. They must wait for the living materials, for schools, and for congregations. Consequently, while towns are growing, children must be growing in ignorance, and adults be losing their religious impressions. To a greater extent than is healthful this is the case. The evil is met in part by the liberal course both of general and state governments towards educational objects. There are large grants of lands made to schools, and for school purposes. But the wise jealousy of our people of anything like "Church and State," while it is on the whole a great advantage to true religion, has with its benefits some drawbacks. Among these is the fact that no grant can be carried for religious purposes. If land is wanted for schools, all that is necessary is to present the merits of the case to Congress. But if land is desired for the endowment of churches, the money must be raised by individual contributions, and the desired tracts purchased. Of course liberal men at the West set apart land for such purposes; but the government makes no grants.

Since teachers and preachers, and the latter profession particularly, are not, like doctors and lawyers, carried West in their due proportion to farmers, mechanics, merchants, and labourers, the lack of these necessary members of every well organized society is left to be supplied in another way. Ministers of the gospel ought to be on the ground among the first. It was so in the Old Thirteen, and it should be so in every new settlement. We should have less of border difficulties, if this were the case. And, as the causes which supplied the first American colonies with spiritual guides are not now in operation, at the commencement of new States another mode is resorted to. All the religious organizations in our country have their domestic missionaries. But the number is not large enough. Sufficient importance is not attached to the object, either in the sum or in the character of the men. There should be many more of them, and they should be selected for commanding and practical talent. The conventionalism of an old community will support a preacher indifferent as to talent, so that he is sound as to piety. But a man who expects to be heard where none of the courtesies and steady habits of society are at hand to back him, ought to be able to say something, and something to the purpose. The shepherd who has his flock to find and feed on the pasture ground between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains, has a large field to range over; and requires more nous and vim than will serve to feed and salt at stated seasons a quietly folded flock at the East.

Perhaps this topic is a little out of our line, but that is the very reason why we take it up. We reach some readers who do not see what are termed the religious newspapers, or who, if they do, see those—or perhaps one only—of a particular school. We stand, editorially, aloof from all; but we speak for all sects, and in behalf of all; and we would impress upon men of all creeds the necessity of labouring heartily to furnish this important means to the true greatness and prosperity of our future as a nation. To the clergy, and to the religious press, the religious bearings of the question belong. With the religious rivalries of sects and creeds, we have nothing here to do, except to hope that they will "provoke one another to good works." But, with all reverence for the religious aspect of the subject, and leaving that to its recognized expounders, we speak on political grounds; and on these we urge upon all patriots, of whatever creed, to contribute by purse, and in all other modes which may present, to the religious culture of the border. If our western extension is desired as a strength rather than as a weakness, we must keep up the moral and religious character of the border settlements. We must furnish what the ordinary motives of emigration do not, abundance of religious teachers. We must give, and give liberally, and in the lowest view of the case, the merely economic and pecuniary aspect, it will be found that we save money. The irregularities, border frays, fillibustering, and other expensive follies, vices and crimes, which grow up for the want of religious influence, will be kept in check, if not prevented.

And, begging pardon of their reverences, we think our friends the clergy are not quite outspoken enough on the pecuniary claims of their class. We do not ask these gentlemen to beg for themselves, or to beg for anybody; but to present the necessity of preaching, and the necessities of preachers in a more urgent and forcible manner. It is a scandal to us, as a people, that, of all the professions, the clergy are the most poorly supported. And this evil will not be decreased by neglect of the religious training of the great nation which is growing up in the interior of the continent, one day to look upon us as the border. "Westward the star of empire takes its way," and it will be a dim star, indeed, if we do not look to our duty in the matter of the religious culture of the new communities.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN ILLINOIS.

November 5th, 1855.

Rev. G. W. Musgrave, D. D.

Dear Sir—As this communication will close my correspondence with the Board as a missionary, it may not be inappropriate briefly to review the past, as it respects my labours in the West. I removed to —— in the fall of 1839, as an intended self-supporting missionary. A settlement of a few families from the East had been commenced, occupying the log barracks of the U. S. dragoons, who had recently vacated them. I was residing in the city of New York, when, by invitation, I concluded to go west. It was late in the fall before I could make the necessary arrangements to leave; the rivers were low; our way was obstructed by sand-banks, and finally by ice, so that we were obliged to resort to land conveyance. With great expense, fatigue, and exposure, myself and family arrived at our expected place of residence in the inclement season of December. We could bring no furniture, and expected to board, but in this were disappointed. With a few borrowed articles we were obliged to commence housekeeping, having two small rooms of the quadrangular log barracks. The winter was severe, and provisions of every kind extremely dear. I soon ascertained that a church could not consistently be organized with the materials then existing. In the succeeding spring, the Mormons came, and contemplated settlements on both sides of the Mississippi river. Our plan of a colony was relinquished; we were on the "Half-breed tract," and could obtain no valid title to land. Through the failure and bankruptcy of an individual my means became exhausted. I removed to —, in this State, where then but one professor could be found, and that of the Methodist denomination. I engaged to teach and preach for a stipulated sum, occupying five days in teaching, and preaching three times on the Sabbath to two congregations five miles apart. At length I organized a church, consisting of twelve members, and before leaving had a house of worship in part completed. During one summer I travelled one thousand miles on horseback, while fulfilling various appointments; and have, since I have been in the West, organized four churches, have witnessed the planting or organization of all the Old-school churches in the northern counties of the State, and nearly the doubling of the churches and ministers in the —— Synod. I came to this place in 1844; here having organized a church, for the first time received missionary aid, and through many changes, discouragements and trials, have continued to the present time. If I have not seemingly accomplished much, I have maintained the ground through many adverse influences, and prepared the way perhaps for other labourers—for "one soweth and another reapeth." Our house of worship is not yet completed; there has been added to it a stone bell tower, 14 feet square, which has hindered its completion. We have already a bell, and the arrangements for its use will soon be completed. What will be done for the support of the gospel cannot be determined till the house is finished and the seats rented. A greatly increased audience is then expected. I fear from the scarcity of workmen and the amount of buildings in progress, that, at the shortest, the first of January will arrive before this is realized. In the meantime patience must be exercised. My year has now expired, and much of the last year's salary is unpaid. The collector having the papers has been absent several weeks, and no one else could transact the business. If the influence of religion were to keep pace with our population, cheering times would be realized. Not a week passes without the erection of new buildings, and if the winter should prove inclement, many will have but a poor protection against the cold. Fuel is scarce and dear, and the expenses of living greatly enhanced. I trust that this people feel grateful to the Board as the almoner of the Church's bounty, for the aid received. May it be abundantly returned. And now, my dear sir, accept my individual thanks for your consideration and kindness. May your life and health be long spared, and your comfort and usefulness continued and promoted.

Yours, in Christian fellowship and hope, G. S.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CANDIDATES AND FUNDS.

It gives us pleasure to report that the number of candidates continues to increase. Since the meeting of the last Assembly up to November 1st, fifty-five new candidates have been received against thirty-six during the same period last year; making an increase of nineteen during the first six months of our ecclesiastical year. This encouraging state of things creates a demand for a corresponding increase of funds. The attention of the churches was called to this subject in the last two numbers of the Home and Foreign Record. A brief circular was also sent to the Presbyteries and Synods, from a considerable number of which we have received information of their action on this subject. It is gratifying to us to be assured of the lively interest manifested by our Church judicatories in this important department of Christian benevolence; and we earnestly hope that measures will be promptly adopted in all the churches to carry into practical effect the resolutions of our Presbyteries and Synods. A specimen of each is here subjoined.

SYNOD OF PITTSBURGH.

The following paper was presented, and on motion adopted, viz.

The Synod having listened with great interest to the statements and appeals made on behalf of the Board of Education, would adopt the following minute:

1. That we acknowledge with gratitude to the Lord of the harvest, his answer to the prayers of the Church in raising up an increase of candidates, seeking to become labourers in his harvest.

2. That this Synod acknowledge the corresponding obligation of the churches to furnish increased contributions to sustain those who have thus been brought forward in answer to their prayers.

3. That the present depressed state of the Treasury, which now fails to supply our candidates with their appropriation, is a rebuke to our unfaithfulness in not following up our prayers with our benefactions.

4. In response to God's goodness in supplying the men, lest he may again leave us to a dearth of candidates as the punishment of our illiberality, this Synod earnestly urge upon the churches to contribute promptly and freely to this Board in its present pressing necessity.

FLINT RIVER PRESBYTERY.

A letter from the Secretaries of the Board of Education, addressed to the Stated Clerk, was submitted to the consideration of Presbytery, and the following resolutions were adopted:

1*st. Resolved*, That we recognize in the Presbyterian Board of Education one of the chief agencies which the combined wisdom of the Church has put in operation for the promotion of truth and godliness; and that we would deplore it, as no ordinary disappointment of our hopes, if, through the indifference or forgetfulness of our people, the great work which it has undertaken should languish or fail.

2*d. Resolved*, That it affords matter of heartfelt gratitude to God that he has hitherto manifested his approval of this work of our hands, and vouchsafed his blessing upon it; and that the present largely increased numbers of candidates for the ministry under the care of the Board, shows a stronger necessity than ever for the continued and increased liberality of the churches in its behalf.

3*d. Resolved*, That it be made the duty of all our ministers to let their congregations know, without delay, that the necessities of the Board of Education require early action on their part, to enable it to meet its increasing liabilities; and to take up contributions in its behalf, to be sent to our Treasurer for immediate remittance.

AN EXAMPLE WORTHY OF IMITATION.

Rev. Mr. Lothrop, in his funeral sermon upon the death of the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, related the following affecting incident:

Mr. Lawrence's name has been so connected with this Institution and other public benefactions, that we are tempted to overlook the fact that his private charities were numerous and constant. Of these, I might recount many instances of those that are within my own knowledge. Many others are doubtless within the knowledge of those here present. I will mention only one, and this because it was recently made known to me amid a scene of interest and solemnity, that we shall not soon forget.

At the close of the funeral services on Wednesday, while crowds were passing up this aisle to look upon the face of the dead, as I was standing here just beneath this pulpit, a gentleman, who I saw at once was a clergyman, came, and addressing me by name, asked if he might speak to me a moment. My reply was:

"Can you not choose some other time? I cannot attend to any business amid this scene, and with that body lying there."

His answer was, rapid as he could speak, as if his heart was bursting for utterance, and with tears streaming down his cheeks:

"I must leave the city at two o'clock, and must speak now. It is of him who has left that body I would speak. Eighteen years ago, I was a poor boy in this city, without means and without friends. I was a member of the Mechanic Apprentices' Association. Mr. Lawrence came to one of our meetings. He heard me deliver an essay I had written. He spoke to me afterwards—inquired into my circumstances and character—I made known to him my wants and wishes. He furnished me with means to acquire an education; when prepared, told me Harvard was best, but to go to what College I liked. I went to the Wesleyan University. He supported me at it. I am a minister of the Gospel in the State of New York. I saw his death in the paper, and a notice of his funeral to-day. I came on to attend it. He was my greatest benefactor. I owe it to him that I am a minister of the glorious Gospel of Christ. I am not the only one he has helped thus. God will accept him. I felt that I must say this to some one; to whom can I better say it than to his clergyman?"

And with this he hurried away, leaving me only time to learn his name and receive from him a kind promise to write to me.

THE ATTRACTIONS OF THE MINISTRY.

To the lover of ease, to the self-seeker who values worldly distinction and reward, the gospel ministry offers few attractions. At a far less cost, he can get much better returns. He will be better paid, in proportion to his labour and talents, by farming, or merchandize, or teaching, or whatever pursuit almost, he may choose to follow. But for substantial happiness, for rational and full enjoyment of life, I do not hesitate to recommend it, with all my heart, to every intelligent man who can enter upon it heartily. Take it for the work's sake, and will be its own exceeding great reward. It will bring its peculiar trials, hardships, disappointments, and loss; for the servant is not greater than his Master, and he who undertakes the service must not shrink from bearing his cross. But if the minister of Christ is not pre-eminently a happy man, it is his own fault.

In point of dignity, also, however poorly it may be paid, and however much worldly-minded people may affect to look down on it, (though in fact it is far above their ken, and what they look down upon is the disturbed and false reflection in their own worldly character,) yet when rightly considered, how advantageously does it compare with other pursuits!—The details of secular life are often trifling, and derive their respectability in great part, if not entirely, from the temporal reward. Mercenary motives are legitimate, and the work which is not well paid for, is promptly declined. Even the teacher, or the physician, or the artist, may, without impropriety, chaffer as to the price, and regulate the amount of work by the payment received. By thus following their pursuits, they may secure, perhaps, the greatest success and consequent usefulness. But in the Gospel ministry, the common details of work possess an inherent dignity. Usefulness is their direct object, and a selfish or mercenary motive cannot be felt without the consciousness of wrong, nor avowed without a sense of shame. The amount of labour in it cannot be measured by the payment received; for the contract, on the workman's side, is to do all that he can, in season, and out of season, as the servant of Christ, in ministering to those for whom Christ died. However unworthy the ministers of Christ may actually be, and however selfish and worldly they may become, the theory of their office is that of disinterestedness and self-sacrifice in doing good. Herein consists its glory and its worth. It stands apart from other pursuits, and he who strives to make its theory and its practice one, will have no need to claim, for he will command respect. The office, whose prime duties are to proclaim the truth, and go about doing good, is one of which no man need be ashamed. If it had reference to this life only, it would still stand the first.

But when we consider the eternal bearings of the truths taught, and the spiritual meaning of the duties done—that in labouring among the poor, to provide for their temporal wants, to instruct their children and raise them above beggary; that in befriending the widow and the fatherless, and taking a part in the perplexing cares of a hundred families; that in watching at the bedside of the sick and dying, filling the place at once of nurse and of the nearest friend; that in labouring for the removal of social abuses, and in all the works of social reform; that in his daily intercourse with the rich and poor, the learned and ignorant, the refined and vulgar, and in all the multiplied details of the pastoral care; that in the labours of the study and the exhausting process of brain-work, meet the unreasonable exactions of those who do not know how much they ask; that in all a spiritual meaning is intended, and that it is the souls of men with which the faithful minister is really dealing; that he labours, not for present, transient interest, to increase the comfort and temporal enjoyment of those whom he serves, but to elevate them in the scale of moral existence and bring them nearer to God, to awaken their minds to the divine beauty of eternal truth, and by all the appliances of gentleness and love, of warning and rebuke, of friendship and sympathy, to bring men into the fold of the blessed Redeemer; when we thus consider our profession as "the calling of God in Christ Jesus," what need have we to surround it with worldly honours to render it attractive? What judicial blindness must fall upon us before we consent to degrade it, for the sake of greater temporal rewards, to the ordinary level of a "living" or a trade?

No; let the ministry of Christ still continue to stand apart among the ordinary occupations of men. It may be under-paid and over-worked, but they to whom grace is given to enter upon it, as their appointed place of working, need but one rule to secure their own happiness and to maintain the dignity of their place, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Rev. W. G. Elliott.

HINTS TO CANDIDATES.

The following, from a sketch of Archbishop Leighton, is adapted to encourage and instruct all who desire to do good.

"His aim was not to do great, startling, wonderful things, but to do little, every day, retired things, wisely and well. Just the opposite was he of many, in this, as in some other respects. What numbers think they cannot serve without doing some deed which shall excite attention, and be largely and loudly talked of? They seem to think they must produce a sensation, or do nothing, They mistake. It is not by accomplishing now and then a brilliant enterprise, but by steady, persevering, pains-taking endeavours to do God's will at home, in the family, among neighbours and fellow-citizens, that his servants most eminently glorify him. What is most talked of at present, perhaps, will be least thought of at the last day! What the world, and perhaps the church, now recognize as commonplace piety, mere every-day doings, will shine out with the sun-light lustre at the final hour of reckoning. He is a wise man who had rather be like Leighton, or like the plainest minister and humblest Christian, than like some who were looked up to in their day as wonderful oracles, before whom princes bowed down and nations did their bidding. Important is it (in these times, perhaps, above all times, when there are so many temptations to confound usefulness before publicity, success in service with what is conspicuous in service,) to enforce and encourage the performance of the simple, retired home duties of society. Nor is it necessary to be a minister at all, even of the humblest rank, to imitate Leighton. The tradesman, the mechanic, the labourer, the wife, the mother, the mistress, the daughter—each will be just like that good man in one of the most beautiful features of his character, if they will only do one thing—fulfil their course and serve their generation day by day in their own walk of life, according to the will of God. The river, while it flows in its channel, fertilizes all around. When it bursts its banks and wanders, it does mischief. The former no one remarks; the latter, every one talks of. The oblivion here, is incomparably better than the notice. How true this is of many noisy, ambitious professors, in reference to duty, that in retiring and rest, they shall be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be their strength."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

OXFORD FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Synod of Cincinnati at their late meeting took the Oxford Female College under their care, having a site of thirty-four acres of ground, and a building capable of accommodating one hundred pupils, partially complete, together with a subscription of over forty thousand dollars towards an endowment, and they appointed twenty-one directors to take charge of it.

SYNODICAL COLLEGE OF THE CINCINNATI SYNOD.

Two reports were received from the majority and minority of the Committee on Education, respecting the establishment of a Synodic College. It was agreed, however, to lay the subject over until the next meeting of Synod; and the Rev. Wm. Cox was appointed to meet and consult with the Synod of Ohio regarding it; and Rev. B. Spence to present it to the consideration of the Associate Reformed Synod of the West, in order to ascertain whether these bodies would be willing to co-operate in such an enterprise.

MILLER ACADEMY UNDER THE CARE OF THE ZANESVILLE PRESBYTERY.

The Miller Academy was reported to be in a more prosperous condition than ever heretofore. The number of students the last session was greater than ever attended during any previous session. Presbytery made ample provision for the coming year; and all parents who desire their sons to have an education that is strictly conducted on Christian principles had better send them to Washington, where the interests, both temporal and spiritual, will be cared for by those that conduct the Miller Academy. The next session will commence on the first Monday of November next.

HANOVER COLLEGE.

The property of the college is estimated at $70000; and an effort is being made to increase the endowment to $100,000. The Board, some five years since, purchased a farm of two hundred acres, lying between the village and the Ohio river, on a beautiful point of which, overlooking the river from an elevation of four hundred feet, they have erected a commodious college edifice, now nearly completed. The edifice consists of a centre building nearly eighty feet square, with lateral and transverse wings. The whole length will be nearly two hundred feet. The building affords ample and convenient halls, library, cabinet, lecture and recitation rooms, and a spacious chapel. The Alumni of Hanover College number two hundred and five, of whom one hundred and fourteen, besides some who did not graduate, are in the ministry, or preparing for it.

The above we take from the Presbyterian Herald. From the same paper we learn that at the late meeting of the Synod of Indiana, there was an animated debate on the state of the college, and measures adopted to raise $15,000 immediately, in order to pay the debt on the new college building.

WHITE WATER PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

The Second Annual Catalogue of this school shows its high standing and usefulness.

The number of pupils in attendance during the year has been 142:

In the classical department	34
Middle	55
Primary	53

We indulge the sure hope that the multiplication of such institutions will soon tell upon the increase of candidates for the ministry. This academy has a very beautiful and convenient edifice almost ready for use. The churches should furnish means to finish it and pay its debts.—Presb. of the West.

LAFAYETTE COLLEGE.

"This institution has given the Synod no small trouble. We thought we were receiving it free from debt, but found it greatly encumbered. It was almost without students or officers; and, in the change of its management, difficulties occurred which caused parties in the Synod, and have proved painfully perplexing. We trust that its affairs, now in a very flourishing situation, are so well understood, and its importance appreciated, and its management approved of, that it will hence be cordially sustained by the great body of our ministers and people. The discussions now had were very satisfactory, removing mistakes, dispelling prejudices, and awakening interest; and we hence hope that this effort at ecclesiastical control will not form an abortion, and that its few opponents will not pertinaciously hold on, to make our Synodical meetings scenes of conflict about business matters which should be left entirely with the Synod's own appointed Board of Trust.

The Trustees' Report stated that a large part of the $100,000 subscription was yet unpaid, but that in other respects things were very favourable. There are, in the regular classes, 103 students. Of these, 40 are members of the Church, 29 have already turned their attention to the Ministry, 86 are the children of pious parents, 22 are sons of ruling elders, and 8 are sons of ministers.

The report of the Board of Visitors spoke in high terms of the course of instruction, the progress of the students in knowledge, and their good conduct, and of the whole management of the affairs of the institution.

The reports were submitted to a committee of Synod, who presented the following paper, which was adopted, after mature deliberation, with only some four or five dissenting voices.

From the report of the Board of Visitors, Synod is gratified to learn, that the financial business of the institution is so correctly attended to; and that the college, as it respects the ability and fidelity of its Professors, the number and ability of its pupils, the number of pious young men having the ministry in view, and the number of sons of pious parents is in so flourishing a condition.

With regard to the report of the Board of Trustees, the Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Whereas, It appears from this report that many of the subscribers to the endowment funds of the College have not yet paid either the principal, or the interest of their subscriptions, thus causing much embarrassment to the finances of the institution. And, whereas, it has come to the knowledge of Synod that some of the subscribers, even among the members of our churches, profess to regard their subscriptions of little binding force; therefore Resolved, 1*st*. That in the judgment of the Synod, every subscriber, unless providentially disabled, or unless legally relieved from such payment, is bound to pay his subscription, both principal and interest, just as much as he is bound to pay his legal bond; and Synod would urge upon all the subscribers, the propriety of paying their subscriptions as early as possible.

2*d*. That Synod earnestly calls the attention of those, to whom God in his providence has given liberal means, to the importance of contributing liberally to the endowment of professorships in our literary institutions; and we entertain the hope that God may put it into the hearts of his people to endow Professorships in this rising institution, where there are already so many young men in a course of training for the gospel ministry, and which promises so much for the Church and the world.

Mr. William C. Cattell, a licentiate of the Presbytery of West Jersey, lately chosen temporarily by the Trustees, and the Rev. James F. Kennedy, of the Presbytery of Carlisle, were nominated as suitable persons to fill the Chair of Languages, made vacant by the resignation of Professor Burrowes."—Presbyterian Banner.

PADUCAH PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

The Presbytery of Paducah had taken action to establish a Presbyterial Academy at a previous meeting. At its last meeting, held at Princeton, Ky., a report was received from the Board of Directors, representing that "the building of a house had been contracted for, at a cost of about $3,000, and the work is in progress." The Rev. J. P. Riddle has been elected President of the institution, and has accepted the place, and the school was opened the first Monday in September, under favourable auspices. The Presbytery resolved first: Recommending the Institution to the patronage of all who have sons or wards to be educated: and secondly, Empowering the Trustees to dispose of the real estate, there put at the disposal of Presbytery, by renting, leasing, selling, or otherwise disposing of the same, as in their wisdom and discretion may be deemed most for the interests of the institution.

GREENVILLE PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

At the late meeting of the Muhlenburg Presbytery at Greenville, Kentucky, the Academy under the care of the Presbytery, received consideration; and a new impulse seems to have been given to its affairs.

Edward Rumsey, Esq., of Greenville, a gentleman of high literary as well as legal attainments, was elected President of the Presbyterial Academy, at Greenville, and the sum of eight hundred dollars raised at once by members of the Presbytery and citizens of the town, for improving the building and grounds, under the direction of the President elect.

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE, Mo.

By a communication received from this Institution we learn that nearly one hundred students entered college at the opening of the present session; that "full one-third" of the whole number are members of the Presbyterian Church, and that some fifteen have the ministry in view. A work of grace has recently commenced in the village of Fulton, where the college is located, and thirty-five have been received into the Presbyterian Church, among whom were eight or ten college students. Several others are serious. From the Report of the Trustees to the Synod of Missouri, at its late meeting, we extract the following:

The agent of the Board reports as the result of his labours in the past year, $17,000, which, added to the amount previously obtained, makes the sum of $34,000.

It is further peculiarly gratifying to learn from the agents that the interests of Westminster College are taking a deep hold upon the affections of this people, and increasing in favour with our churches throughout the State. And recent indications encourage us to believe our gracious God is putting into the hearts of some who have the means to become personally responsible for the endowment of one or more of the Professorships, and we are thus led to hope, that through the blessing of Him who loveth Zion, we shall soon be able to report the ample endowment of our Institution, thus preparing it to be a permanent blessing to the Church and the world.

The Faculty now consists of Rev. S. S. Laws, President; W. Vandoran and M. M. Fisher, Professors; J. M. Hughes, Principal of the Preparatory Department, and T. Barbour, Tutor; all of whom are in their places, and actively employed in the work to which they have been severally called.

ALEXANDER COLLEGE IN THE SYNOD OF IOWA.

The Committee on the Annual Report of the Trustees of Alexander College, reported, that after a careful perusal of the report, there are good reasons why Synod should be pleased with the intimations of progress and improvement which are making in the several departments of the College. The report was approved.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

We have received an intimation from a source entitled to high respect, that our missionary churches in the new settlements, would find the establishment of Parochial schools an important auxiliary to their growth and prosperity. By carrying into effect John Knox's remark, that "wherever a house of worship is erected, a school-house should be built by its side," well trained materials would be furnished for the increase both of the congregation and the number of communicants. In many instances too, these schools, aided as they are, to the amount of $75 or $100 per year, through the Board of Education, by a generous friend of Christian Education, would be a valuable addition to the pastor's support. Many of our ministerial brethren have daughters who might become teachers, and thus besides contributing to their mental improvement, happiness and usefulness, obtain the means of a comfortable and respectable support, which must otherwise be supplied from the scanty and often insufficient salaries of their laborious and self-denying fathers. We submit these thoughts to the special consideration of our brethren in the more newly settled portions of our country; and if they concur in them let the requisite steps be taken, where circumstances are favourable, to carry them into practical effect. We would remind such brethren however, that one important consideration in establishing these schools is the prospect of permanency. We do not consider it expedient to commence them for a single year only, unless there is a reasonable ground for expecting their continuance. Hence they should be made a subject of deliberation by the pastor and elders, and other influential members of the Church. And when commenced, they should be conducted on the principles laid down by the General Assembly. This course persevered in, will, by the divine blessing, be ultimately successful, and will contribute much to the strength and efficiency of those new and feeble churches which faithfully engage in this work.

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOL.

From Dr. Duff's "India and India Missions."

While from the very first, the Bible itself was thus made a school and class-book, it was so made distinctly, avowedly, and exclusively for religious and devotional exercises, with the view of bringing all the faculties of the soul into contact with the life, and spirit, and quickening influence of Jehovah's holy oracles; and never, never for parsing, syntactical, and sundry other grammatical exercises of lingual acquisition. Than this practice, which we fear is but too common, we know of none more likely to lower the Bible from its unapproachable eminence of sacredness, as "the Book," "the Book of books;" and we have never ceased, and, through God's blessing, never will cease, humbly but resolutely to lift up our solemn protest against it.

* * * *

On the frontispiece of their Bibles, the Jews were wont to inscribe, in flaming characters, the exclamation fear and astonishment extorted from Jacob by the vision at Bethel—"How dreadful is this place! —this is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven!" On which the great Owen most appropriately remarked—"So ought we to look upon the Word with a holy awe and reverence of the presence of God." But if any scheme could be devised more cunningly than any other, by which, under the semblance of honouring and magnifying it as a school-book, we could succeed in divesting the perusal and contemplation of it of all "holy awe and reverence" of God's presence, it is the very practice which has now been reprobated—reprobated not so much from abstract considerations, however convincing, as from painful experience of its most blighting effects.

If the Bible is to be made a school-book—and rather, infinitely rather, let us decide on the banishment of grammars, and geographies, and all popularized excerpts, consecrated exclusively to science and the muses, from our schools, than suffer it to be dislodged by the great Anti-christian confederacy from the throne of rightful supremacy in wielding the sceptre over the entire educational realm;—if the Bible is to be made a school and class-book, let it not be evacuated of its Divine significance, by being turned into common use for testing the rules and laws of every self-elected dictator in the ancient domain of speech. Let it not be lowered from its regal dignity, to dance attendance, and serve as humble vassal at the outer portals of knowledge; let it be ever maintained in the right ascension of its sacredness, the meridian altitude of its spiritual power; let it be gratefully studied as the Book of God.

From the Cincinnati Christian Herald.

OUR CHILDREN.

From the Memoir of Dr. Justin Edwards, we select a passage spoken by him on a public occasion, near the Rock of Plymouth, in 1824:

"The wisdom that is from beneath says, Give to children no religious instruction; and exert upon them no moral influence in favour of the Gospel, lest they receive an improper bias; let them alone to choose for themselves, and when they come to years of understanding, they will choose right.

"But the wisdom that is from above saith, 'Train up a child in the way he should go.' 'Teach these things diligently to thy children, when thou sittest in the house, and when thou walkest by the way; when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.' 'Suffer little children to come unto me.' 'Train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.'

"In yonder distant country was a little feeble band, and inspired with love to Christ, who covenanted to educate their children for him. Not able to do it according to his Word and the dictates of their consciences in their own land, they escape under the cover of night, with their little ones, to a foreign clime. With their children still exposed, they embark upon the ocean with no protector but their covenant God. And though the very elements seem to join with earth and hell to oppose them, borne in His arms, I see them approaching, till they enter yonder haven, and stand upon a rock. And though winter and famine and pestilence attack them, and cut down half their numbers, around them I see the arms of the everlasting covenant, within them the Shekinah, and hear a voice saying, 'Leave your fatherless children, and let your widows trust in me.' 'I will never leave nor forsake thee;' and 'they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing.' They hearken, and lo, they 'break forth on the right hand, and extend themselves on the left;' 'a little one becomes a thousand, and a small one a strong nation.' They spread from sea to sea, and 'he is a God to them, and their children after them, from generation to generation;' 'keeping covenant and mercy to thousands of them that love him, and obey his commandments.'"

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, November 13th, 1855.

India.—We have received since our last issue, letters from Lahor, August 18; Lodiana, August 16; Ambala, to August 29; Saharunpur, August 18; Agra, August 18; Allahabad, August 20. We regret to learn the death of a child of Mr. and Mrs. Scott, at Agra. Some members of the mission families at that station and at Allahabad had suffered from severe sickness, but were better. Mr. Rudolph, writing from Simla on the 31st of August, speaks of having received benefit from the hill climate, though his health was still feeble. We regret also to learn the death of a native Christian woman, at Allahabad. Mr. Hay thus speaks of her Christian character and her dying hours: "She was a member of the church, and possessed a quiet, peaceable disposition, and though not active, yet exerted a good influence on the other members of our little community. I conversed with her during her illness, about her spiritual state, and feel satisfied that she had a good hope through grace. She was not afraid to die; I trust she found death not only a sweet release from bodily suffering, but the harbinger of everlasting spiritual joy." Mr. Forman thus writes of the schools at Lahor—"Our schools are as large as ever; many of the pupils are becoming well acquainted with the Scriptures, and some of them seem to be favourably impressed." Permission has been given by the Executive Committee, to the Lodiana Mission, to form a new Station at Roorkee, the head station of the Ganges canal, a growing place, about twenty miles from Saharunpur. It will probably be occupied by one of the brethren from that station.

China.—Our letters are dated at Canton, Aug. 8; Ningpo, July 20; Shanghai, August 1. At Canton public matters had become more settled, the gates of the city were again open, and the number of executions, though still great, was much diminished. Mr. Preston gives a good account of the boys' school, temporarily under his care, but will be glad to give up the charge of it to Mr. Happer again on his return. Mr. S. Martin mentions his visits to families, shops, and boats, in one of the suburbs of Ningpo, where he was well received. He had also put books or tracts on board of several hundred junks and boats trading to distant places. It has not yet been practicable for Dr. McCartee to visit Japan, no vessel having been found that was willing to take passengers. The prospect of early missionary efforts in that empire do not appear to be encouraging. Mr. Culbertson reports the completion of the whole of the revised translation of the New Testament, and says: "I feel deeply grateful that I have been permitted to finish this part of our work, though at the beginning of the year I had so much reason to apprehend a sudden interruption of my labours here. I have further reason to be thankful, that I have been allowed to revise the portion of the Old Testament which I translated in Dr. Bridgeman's absence. I have just completed the revision—it extends hrough 1 Kings." Mr. Culbertson was expecting to sail for this country in October. His health was about the same as previously reported.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Monrovia to September 7, and from Corisco, August 6. Mr. Wilson had had a severe attack of fever, but it yielded to medical treatment, and he was able to resume most of his labours. The other members of the mission families were well. The high-school is reported as "progressing very well, all things considered. The scholars attend with great regularity, and most of them prepare their lessons very well." At Corisco the missionaries were enjoying good health, and going on with their usual labours. On the 26th of July, the Rev. George W. McQueen, Jr. was united in marriage to Miss Georgiana M. Bliss.

Indian Missions.—A letter from the Rev. S. M. Irvin, of October 17, contains news of much interest from the Iowa Mission: "We have just closed an interesting sacramental meeting here. We had an addition of eight to our little church, four by certificate, and four upon examination. Of the latter, two were from our Indian scholars. . . . It was an interesting sight, and one which seemed to affect the congregation, to see these young people coming forward to receive the ordinance of baptism, and sit down at the Lord's table. An additional interest was given to the occasion by the fact than an adult lady, who was received upon examination, and who had not been baptized, stood up with these children of the forest to receive the sacrament of baptism. . . Some of the other children applied for admission to the communion, but it was thought best to defer them for the present. We elected and ordained two new elders, which gives strength to our little church, now numbering over twenty members." Mr. Irvin earnestly desires that the interests of the mission should be remembered in the prayers of the churches.

Sailing of a Missionary.—The Rev. Joseph K. Wight, of the Shanghai Mission, embarked on his return to Shanghai in the barque Maury, October 25th. He leaves his wife and children in this country for the present, making this great sacrifice in fulfilling his own convictions of duty to the perishing heathen. We are thankful to state that his health is in a great measure restored. We ask for him and his family the prayers and Christian sympathies of our readers.

A MISSION FOR THE AFGHANS.

The Executive Committee have had under consideration, the question of commencing missionary efforts for the Afghans. This people inhabit the country between Persia and India, and were contemplated by the first missionaries of the Board in India, as eventually to be included within the sphere of their labours. Indeed several Afghan youths were under instruction in the first school of the Mission at Lodiana, in the year 1834. It is not yet practicable for missionaries to live in Afghanistan, but considerable numbers of the Afghans are accessible at some places in the Punjab. It is proposed to form a mission for their benefit, but having in view as its chief object, the conversion of their countrymen. Amongst the measures considered practicable at present, and also of great importance, are those which contemplate the translation of the Sacred Scriptures into their language, the Rushto. The population of Afghanistan is estimated at five million, nearly all Mohammedans. For their conversion there is but a small force now employed—lately a station has been formed at Peshawar, by the English Episcopal Church Missionary Society. Towards the mission of the Board, an English gentleman, a captain in the Indian army, highly esteemed as a Christian friend by our missionaries, with whose labours he has been long acquainted, has generously contributed the handsome sum of $7,500. We would ask our readers to remember this projected mission in their prayers to the Lord of the harvest.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

REPORT OF THE REV. A. REID.

Studies of the School—Encouraging results of the year.

The following is the report of Spencer Academy, for the year ending July 11th, 1855.

The whole number of boys connected with the School during the session, was one hundred and twenty. The number present at the time of the final examination was one hundred and five. The system of separate divisions or schools, is still continued. The studies of the First Division under the care of Mr. George Ainslie, were as follows:

1st. A portion of every day was devoted to the careful study of the Holy Scriptures by the whole division.

2d. The whole division attended daily, to exercises in reading and spelling. Text books—American First Class Book, Eclectic Fourth Reader, Old Sea Captain, and Willard's and Universal History. A taste for general reading was carefully cultivated, by furnishing the scholars, in their leisure hours, with suitable books from the Spencer Library.

3d. Arithmetic was studied by all the boys in this division. Text books—Davies' and Chase's Arithmetics. Ten boys went through Davies'; four almost through, and five went as far as Interest. A class of twelve studied Chase's Arithmetic through Decimal and Vulgar Fractions.

4th. A large class recited through Bullion's English Grammar several times during the session.

5th. The whole division attended regularly to Penmanship, English Composition and Vocal Music.

6th. There were also small classes in Algebra, Geometry, Physiology and History. Text books—Davies' First Lessons in Algebra, Hackley's Algebra, Davies' Legendre, Cutter's Physiology, and Willard's History.

The Second Division, under the care of Mr. R. J. Burtt, pursued the following course. The whole division numbering thirty-six boys, gave regular attention to reading, spelling, mental arithmetic, penmanship, English composition and vocal music, Text books—Old and New Testaments, McGuffey's First, Second and Third Readers, and Colburn's Mental Arithmetic. Thirty-three studied Smith's First Book of Geography, and four, Smith's Quarto Edition. Thirteen studied Chase's Arithmetic, and twenty-seven the Assembly's Shorter Catechism.

The Third Division, under the care of Miss M. Davidson, was composed of the younger and less advanced boys. Their studies were, of course, of the most primary character, learning to read and spell occupied most of their time in the school-room. Many committed hymns and verses of Scripture to memory; and a few commenced the study of arithmetic and geography. Nearly all in this division received instruction in penmanship.

In the early part of the session, the dysentery made its appearance among us, and prevailed generally for two or three weeks. Two of the younger boys died of this disease. With this exception the health of the Institution was unusually good.

No difficulty whatever was experienced in sustaining good order and discipline. Our pupils yielded prompt and cheerful obedience to the rules of the Institution. We think they deserve much praise for their generally good behaviour and diligent attention to their studies.

It is with peculiar pleasure I mention, that during the greater part of the session much serious concern for the salvation of the soul was felt by many of our boys. Seventeen gave such evidence of sincere and intelligent faith in the gospel, that they were received into the communion of the church.

A number of the older boys made themselves very useful, by teaching Saturday and Sunday-schools in the vicinity of Spencer. The whole number of scholars attending these neighbourhood schools, was one hundred and fifty. The majority of these are adults. Quite a number of them have within the past year learned to read and write their own language. Many of the youth in these schools are taught both in the Choctaw and English.

The gospel has been preached regularly to all the people in this vicinity. The word of God is listened to with the most devout attention. A large number of persons have been awakened to serious concern for the salvation of their souls. About one hundred have been received into the communion of the church within the past year.

Whiskey drinking, dancing, ball-playing, and frolicking, are almost entirely abandoned by our neighbours. There is a Temperance Society, of which nearly the whole population, men, women, and children are members.

The people are evidently making progress in civilization. The marks of improvement are many and manifest to those who have been for some time familiar with the people. Altogether, the condition of the Choctaws around Spencer, is full of promise for the future.

AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM AN ADDRESS OF THE REV. JAMES L. MACKEY.

The following extracts are taken from an address delivered by Mr. Mackey at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, on the 2d of October, two days previous to his sailing for Africa, for the purpose of resuming his missionary labours. They contain some important facts in relation to the history, results, and prospects of this mission, and will be read with interest by all who love the missionary cause.

What has the Corisco mission done in this great work? What has now been accomplished by its missionaries?

We have acquired the language of the people. When the mission was first established, their language was an unwritten one; they had neither literature nor books. We have succeeded in writing their language, and have now, besides a grammar, one small book printed, which contains much Scripture truth. This, we trust, is the beginning of greater things; for we hope to see the Word of God given to them in their own language. I may say here, it is no small work to acquire the language of a heathen people which has never before been written. It requires both patience and perseverance. No helps, such as grammars and dictionaries, are accessible, nor even interpreters who have any knowledge of the structure of language. But to acquire the language of the people a missionary wishes to instruct, is a necessary part of his work, and one that meets him on the very threshold of his labours. The grammar of the Benga language, which is spoken in Corisco, is now so well ascertained, that those who join us hereafter will find their labours in acquiring the language much lightened.

We have also scattered much precious seed. Many of the people, not only on Corisco Island, but on the Continent where we have travelled, have heard the truth from our lips. We have three places of preaching where the people meet regularly every Sabbath to hear the Word of God. Their attendance is not so large as it ought to be; but still there are many who attend regularly, and more who attend occasionally. The attention they give is good; the decorum they observe when met together as worshipping assemblies, is very commendable. They are willing to acknowledge that the instructions we give them are good, that the doctrines we teach them are better than their own fetichism and superstitions; but still their minds are very dark. They need to be illuminated by the Spirit of God. There are, we suppose, very few people on the island of Corisco, but what have heard the name of Jesus, and know something about what he has done for the salvation of man. We know there are many who pray, and we trust there are some, but the number may yet be very small, who believe to the salvation of their souls.

The most important feature of our work is no doubt the instruction of the young. We have schools for boys and girls, and though the number brought into them, for various reasons, has not been large, still much has been accomplished by them. Though we have free access to all in imparting instruction, yet our great hope is with the young. Their minds are more susceptible to receive correct impressions; they are less attached to their superstitions and fetichism, and they are more likely to come under the influence of the truth. There are as many as twenty, I suppose, who are able to read the Testament in English, and who have knowledge enough of the English language to profit to some extent by what they read. A small class have committed the whole of the Shorter Catechism, and the whole Sabbath-school at Evangasimba could repeat in concert the answers in a Catechism prepared in their own language, which contained much Scripture truth. So has our work progressed. Our field is not a barren one. The harvest is great, but the labourers are few. The field before us is an extensive one. We do not know how large it is, for it has only been partially explored. The present force on the ground consists of but two ministers and their wives. Our little company go forth to join them. We know they look with longing for our arrival, and we long to be with them. Some of our company go forth for the first time. To them the field is an untried one. Some of us have been there, and we start on our return with more joy than we felt in leaving for our native land.

In the mind of a missionary who is first going out to a post untried by him, there is probably always a degree of vagueness and indefiniteness in regard to what he may expect. He knows all will be new to him. He will be called upon to act in circumstances in which he has had no previous experience, but he is willing to trust fully to the promises of the Saviour, and he knows that the path of duty will be made plain. There is always some sneering opposition to be met from the world, and some remonstrances from false friends, about a man's throwing away his life, and some opposition to be encountered from Christians, who think they see a better and more promising field of labour at home, which a missionary ought to enter; but especially when the missionary has devoted himself to the work in Africa has he to meet a flood of opposition. There are more who are willing to point him to the graves of those who have fallen, than there are to speak words of encouragement and hope; there are more who are willing to invoke the voice of the dead to oppose him, than there are of those who are willing to point him to the living God, who will protect him. Happy for the missionary who meets with such opposition, if he has a mother whose heart is in the missionary work, who can bid him God-speed in his labour of love.

Six years ago a little company of us were preparing to go out to the coast of Africa with the view of establishing a new mission. Many professing Christians, and even ministers, opposed our going. Even the Presbytery by which I was ordained, spoke almost unanimously against the project. They were unwilling to take the responsibility of deciding officially that I should not go, but so far as I remember, not one entered heartily into the project of establishing a new mission on the coast of Africa, or spoke words of encouragement to us who desired to go. One member of Presbytery asked me, "Have you determined to throw away your life? Stay at home here, you may accomplish something; go to Africa and you will lay your bones on her sands with the multitudes who have gone before you, and who should be a warning to you." Another aged member of the Presbytery said to me—"Well, I admire the spirit which takes you to Africa, but I feel that you are throwing away your life." These men were not destitute of missionary spirit, or of Christian zeal, but certainly lacked one thing—an humble trust in a sovereign God and a firm reliance on the guidance of his Spirit. My friends, this is my belief—those who sincerely desire divine guidance will receive it. The presumptuous will go astray, but the humble seeker after the true way will receive light and his feet will be directed in the right way. But all was not opposition; many hearts deeply imbued with the love of Christ sympathized with us; some gave us encouragement; multitudes prayed for us. We went forth, it may be, weeping, bearing precious seed. Our Saviour was with us; his promise has been verified: "Lo, I am with you always." We have been called upon to meet some trials. Scarcely had we landed on the heathen shores of Africa, and been welcomed by our brethren of another mission, when one of our number was called away to her reward on high; and again, ere we had fully commenced our work of preaching, a mysterious dispensation of God's providence called from earth away two of the rest, on whom the very highest hopes of usefulness had been placed. To human vision this was a dark hour for our mission. It seemed that the fears of some halting Christians in regard to us were to be realized. But God had purposes of mercy towards the poor people of Corisco. The very afflictions with which we were visited tended to direct the sympathies of the Church towards us, and to draw out the prayers of many of the people of God in our behalf; we were abundantly sustained by the grace of God, and we have been reinforced, and now our mission promises great and extensive usefulness. When we look back on our past history, we have reason to thank God and take courage. His goodness and mercy to us in times past, may lead us to put implicit confidence in him for the future. Hitherto the Lord has helped us, we will praise his name and trust in his mercy.

Our work is one of faith. He would be a poor missionary who went out trusting in his own strength. Our own strength is weakness—in God we are strong. We believe that he will accomplish his own purposes by our instrumentality, and we desire only to be faithful instruments in doing his will.

My friends, we desire your sympathies and your prayers. When we are in a heathen land, separated from the people of God, we love to feel that there are Christians who are sustaining us with their prayers. Do you not often hear the request of the Apostle repeated, and coming up from missionaries in foreign lands, "Brethren, pray for us." Not seldom has the heart of the missionary been raised to God in gratitude, when he has been cheered by the intelligence, "You are always remembered in our monthly concert; you are daily remembered when we surround the family altar; you and your work are frequently borne on our hearts to a throne of grace." We thank God for the prayers of his people, and gratefully and earnestly do we request that the blessings that they desire for us may be richly returned upon themselves. The missionary is in a great measure cut off from direct intercourse with God's people. His labours call him to mingle constantly with those who are sunk in wickedness and corruption; not only strangers to God, but systematically doing those things which are offensive in his sight, and with no desires after a better way. He has no society around him to sustain him by their countenance and to second his efforts for good. His labour is one of self-denial. He has voluntarily separated himself from the privileges of Christian society, in order to instruct the heathen, and to lead them to Jesus Christ. Who can be placed in a position so much calculated to lead him to esteem the prayers of God's people? My friends, we thank God, who puts it into the hearts of his people to pray for us, and for the advancement of the cause in which we labour; and we know that the prayer of faith is never offered in vain. If your prayers ascend in behalf of those who are engaged in the missionary work, your sympathies will also be with them.

I know there is a great deal of sympathy felt among Christians with the foreign missionary, and a great deal of intelligent sympathy, but there are very many who think far more about the worldly deprivations to which he is supposed to submit, than who think of his being cut off from Christian society and Christian privileges. His circumstances of a worldly kind are not those that demand your sympathy. It is not that he is deprived of some of the comforts that he might enjoy in his native land; it is not that he is deprived of social intercourse with those of the same tastes and feelings, or that he is exposed to dangers of the sea, or from a hostile climate. The trials which he has to bear, arise from a set of circumstances different from these. It is a pleasant thing, my friends, to live in a Christian land, surrounded by Christian society, in the enjoyment of Christian intercourse and privileges; but it is a very different thing for a Christian to live in a heathen land, where the true God is not known nor worshipped; where the Sabbath is not honoured, where, instead of prayer and the hymn of praise to the Redeemer, the nightly orgies, the drum, the dance, and the savage yell are heard. The corrupt and sickening details of heathenism meet the missionary wherever he turns, except in his own chamber or in his closet. And were it not for the sustaining grace of God, and the feeling that the sympathies of God's people are with him, it would no doubt frequently occur that he would be so filled with disgust and hatred towards those whom he is endeavouring to elevate, that he would turn from them and leave them in their vileness and ingratitude.

The missionary would go forth to his labour among the heathen with less alacrity than he now does did he not feel that the sympathies of Christians go with him, and that their prayers frequently arise in his behalf.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. GOPEE NAUTH NUNDY.

His dangerous illness—Notices of Converts and Inquirers—Enlargement of the Mission Chapel.

After giving some particulars of a severe and dangerous complaint affecting his head, which was referred to in a former number of the Record, Mr. Nundy proceeds as follows, writing at his station, Futtehpore, June 16th.

It was not long ago I was very unwell, every one around me thought that I would not live to see the sun of another morning, but thanks be to our gracious heavenly Father for sparing my unprofitable life. I feel no better, the noise is still as great as before. It is no doubt a dangerous complaint, and with less than a moment's notice I may be removed. Our trust is upon Him who is not only able to remove this, but all other sicknesses. But should it be his good pleasure to take me away from this world, I bow down with submission, and say with the Apostle, "For we know if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens."

Our schools and other missionary operations are carried on as usual. We are thankful to say that the Lord has blessed our labours in some respects. On the 20th of May, last Lord's day, three Brahmins were baptized at the Mission Chapel. One of them named Sadasook, formerly a Brahmin, and an inhabitant of Joloween, who with his old mother were on their way to Benares, where they intended to reside the remaining short period of their lives and die in the holy city. Bathing with Gunga water and dying at Kashi [Benares,] are believed by Hindus a most meritorious thing, and those who get the opportunity of doing so are carried into heaven, however great and aggravated their sins may have been. After he heard the gospel news, he expressed a desire to remain some time with us and hear more of the plan of salvation it revealed. To his wishes we readily acceded. He is a learned man, well versed in Sanscrit and Hindui. His former occupation was to go about and preach Hinduism, or in other words, to read and expound Ramayana and Mohabharuta to rich families. He was highly esteemed by his people and no doubt they felt a great loss in his coming away. Before coming to us, he had obtained a portion of our Holy Scriptures from a boatman, which he still possesses, and which he read through, but did not understand. When he heard us preaching the same religion he had been reading, he felt more anxious to know it, and as far as I could see, he expressed a great concern about his and his old mother's soul. As a mark of his sincerity, he one day put into my hand the sacred thread he wore, and he has since given up all his Pujahs, (idol worship,) &c., &c., and carried on his studies in the Scriptures with greater zeal. He was soon convinced by the teaching of God's Holy Spirit, that washing with Gunga water and dying at Kashi would profit nothing; that he needed the washing and cleansing by the precious blood drawn from Immanuel's veins—and gave up all idea of proceeding to Benares. Thus he was awakened and saw the great danger his soul was in, and felt an ardent desire to be admitted into the Christian Church; and he, with his old mother, publicly renounced Hinduism and acknowledged Christ as their Saviour, and received baptism.

The third convert's name is Musihi Dyal, formerly Shew Dayal. He was a Brahmin of the Gouer denomination, and an inhabitant of a village called Burety, in the Oude Territory. He was a cultivator at first, but afterwards he became a Jogi, and while in that state he came to beg with our Saturday's mendicants, (every Saturday morning from three to four hundred poor people are gathered in the Mission premises, to whom the gospel is preached, and from three-quarters to half a sier of flour, given from the local Relief Fund,) and there he heard the gospel news for the first time, after which he expressed a strong desire to remain with us, and learn more of Him who is the only Saviour of lost man. We gave him shelter and instructed him further in our true religion. He was baptized at the same time with the others.

The Chutry woman who was baptized in July last, I am thankful to say, is going on consistently. We have two more inquirers who are under instruction of our blessed religion, and who we trust will soon follow the good example of others and receive Christ as their Saviour. And now, may the good Shepherd of our faith bless and take care of these new converts, as well as of the other members of this small flock, is our constant and earnest prayer.

On account of the increased number of the members of our small flock, for we have now between adults and infants about fifty souls, we have to break down the small place we appropriated for divine worship at the commencement of this branch Mission, when our congregation consisted only of about half a dozen of members, and make it larger, that there may be room at least for one hundred persons. In order to accomplish our object we needed funds, and I am glad to inform you that we have already collected from Christian friends here, four hundred and fifty rupees, (two hundred and twenty-five dollars.) It will take about two hundred and fifty more, which we humbly trust "the Lord will provide." The building has been commenced and I hope it will be finished before the rains set in. And now may I ask the favour of the churches at home to pray for the success of our labours in this heathen and benighted country, that the children of Rama and Shiva may be the children of the living God, being washed of their sins by the precious blood of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of lost man. To him be glory, honour and praise, for ever and ever.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. W. A. P. MARTIN.

Trials of a convert and his mother—Calls—Trials of another convert from his mother.

March 3d, 1855.—One of our church members who is a graduate of the Boarding-school, and has during the past year been engaged as assistant teacher in a day-school under my care, has just returned from visiting his relations in the country. During his visit he has been called to suffer great indignity for Christ's sake, and has borne it all with Christian fortitude.

His mother is a widow and resides at the house of a rich uncle. While visiting her he was required to join in the rites of ancestral worship, and on refusing, was driven from the house. The uncle further required the widow to cast off her only son, or be deprived of the protection of his roof. She accordingly prepared to leave, and both would have been ejected in one day, the son for Christ's sake, and the mother for her son's sake, had not other relations interposed. The uncle then invited them to remain, but the young man refused to cross the threshold, and consented that his mother should remain only until he should provide another home for her.

April 14th.—Four persons come in together, who are natives of four different provinces. I conversed with them all in the court dialect, and gave them books, which, unlike the vernacular, are equally intelligible in all parts of the Empire.

15th.—An officer, formerly a neighbour of ours, who has been promoted to the Mayoralty of Chinhai, called to renew his acquaintance. As we are preparing to establish a branch station there, his countenance may be of some value.

17th.—A young man of respectable connections, named Ying-Fong, came in to ask how far it would be proper for him to assist his mother in preparing articles for the family sacrifices. His mother is violently opposed to his professing Christianity, and endeavoured to deter him by depicting the horrors of martyrdom, to which she thought he might be exposed. This producing no effect on him, she threatened to commit suicide, if he should persist in his resolution. He still appears firm, and says that he prays to God to change the heart of his mother. He was himself an enemy of the gospel a few years ago, and tried to dissuade one of his friends from embracing it. That friend is now one of our Catechists, and his altered life has led his old companion to take up the cross.

While talking with him, one of our converts came in, bringing two men from an adjacent district, who were desirous of hearing more of the gospel.

Opium traffic; its evils: measures proposed for its suppression—Two young men baptized.

May 8th.—At a meeting of missionaries, held monthly, for the discussion of questions relating to our work, we considered the question, "How can we best exert our influence for the suppression of the opium trade?"

We daily witness the destructive effects of opium, and feel constrained, if we can do no more, to protest publicly against the sale of the poison by our countrymen. Opium is consumed by probably ten millions of Chinese, and annually destroys more lives than perished in Napoleon's disastrous invasion of Russia. The noise of battle excites the attention of the world, but the millions whose lives slowly moulder away in the fire of the opium pipe, are almost unnoticed and unpitied.

The missionaries at Ningpo have determined to lay their testimony on this subject before the Congress of the United States, and the Parliament of Great Britain, invoking the interference of both governments, to prevent the importation of the drug. If this can be effected, it will be easy for the Chinese government to suppress the native growth of opium, and its consumption must, of course, cease. We are also endeavouring to engage the missionaries at other stations to unite with us in these measures.

June 3d.—Baptized two young men, one of them is a cousin of Yu Sin-sang, and the other is Ying-tong, above mentioned, an old friend of Dzing Sin-sang, our other assistant. The case of the latter is one of peculiar interest. He was originally, according to the Chinese standard, a man of strict virtue, and seemed to be seeking the truth. He was not however permitted to embrace it, without his sincerity being subjected to a severe test. Besides the opposition above noticed, he was beaten by his mother, reviled by his friends, and threatened by his brother with confinement in the house. To this he replied "that he should then be able to keep the Sabbath." When his mother expressed a fear that he would lose his employment, he said he would be content to be a huckster or porter. His relatives, as a final stratagem, contracted a marriage for him. They hoped thus to involve him in the performance of idolatrous rites; and also to divert his attention from the concerns of his soul. He however promptly informed his intended father-in-law that he was a Christian, and though not averse to the marriage, would by no means celebrate it with idolatrous rites. The engagement was accordingly broken off, to the great disappointment of relatives. Having thus proved his sincerity by the endurance of bodily suffering and the sacrifice of worldly advantage, and testifying to the comforts of the Holy Spirit during all his trials, we had peculiar pleasure in receiving him into our little flock. I have known the young man for several years. His talents and education are such as to fit him for great usefulness.

POLYNESIA.

REPORT OF THE ELEVENTH MISSIONARY VOYAGE TO THE NEW HEBRIDES, AND NEW CALEDONIA GROUPS, AND SAVAGE ISLAND.

In the autumn of 1854, some few months before the "John Williams" left the Pacific on the return voyage to England, the ship proceeded on her visitation of the New Hebrides and other Westerly Groups. The incidents of the voyage have been supplied by the Rev. Charles Hardie. The facts narrated are some of them of a painful and even appalling nature, but, for the most part, they are truly gratifying; and of this latter class, is the account of the location of the Rev. Messrs. Creagh and Jones, on the island of Maré, under circumstances of peculiar interest and encouragement.

"In again," writes Mr. Hardie, "laying before our readers an account of the stations of the London Missionary Society at these islands, we have much of an encouraging character to add to the cheering statements contained in former reports. With the painful exception of those on one island, the stations that have hitherto been the least promising, encourage the hope that our labours there will yet be crowned with success; and at others, 'fields already white unto the harvest' promise a rich reward to the labours of the spiritual husbandmen.

"We sailed from Apia, Upolu, in the 'John Williams,' on the 26th of September, 1854, in order to visit the stations at the above-named islands. We had on board Mr. and Mrs. Sunderland, of the Samoan Mission, the two new Missionaries, Messrs. Creagh and Jones, for the Loyalty Islands, and their wives and two children, together with Mrs. Hardie and our little boy; ten native teachers and their wives, one unmarried teacher, fourteen children, and four servants, all from Samoa: thirteen natives belonging to the New Hebrides, the Loyalty Islands, and Savage Island; making, with the ship's company—twenty-two in number—eighty-five persons.

Aneiteum.

"On the evening of the 3d of October, after a run of ten days from Samoa, we reached this island; but the wind being light, we were obliged to stand off for the night. On the following morning, which was Sabbath, as our vessel was beating into the harbour of Aniligauhat, we were delighted with the improved appearance of things, and to see the people decently clothed, going to and returning from the house of God. As soon as we came to anchor, our esteemed friend the Rev. J. Geddie came on board. We were sorry to find him in a rather poor state of health, from fever and ague, to which he is frequently subject, but glad to know that all the other members of the mission were in good health, and that their work was prospering.

"In the afternoon, we went on shore with the teachers we had brought from Samoa, and received a most hearty welcome. We then went with our friends and the natives to the commodious new chapel, to unite with them in praise and thanksgiving to the Father of all our mercies. Addresses were given, and prayers and praise offered in the Aneiteum and Samoan languages. It was a thrilling and affecting scene to see so many who were but lately living in the lowest state of heathenism, decently clothed, attentively listening to the word of God, and earnestly engaged in prayer and praise. We could not help exclaiming, 'What hath God wrought!' Next day, Mr. and Mrs. Inglis arrived from their station on the other side of the island; and we were glad to see them in excellent health. They are devoted to their work, and co-operate most harmoniously with Mr. and Mrs. Geddie. Messrs. Geddie and Inglis had nearly completed a census of the island, by which they find that it contains about four thousand inhabitants. Of these, about two thousand six hundred have renounced heathenism, and profess Christianity. The remaining fourteen hundred, who are still more or less attached to heathen practices, are so scattered and disunited as to possess but little influence. The Christian party has gained a very decided ascendancy over the island, and the ancient customs are everywhere on the wane.

"A considerable band of natives and four Samoan teachers assist the missionaries in their labours. Thirty schools are now in operation on the island, and the work of education is steadily progressing. About fifteen hundred are under instruction. About one-third of these have learnt to read, and a considerable number can write a tolerable hand. One of the most promising features of the infant mission on Aneiteum is its missionary spirit. Last voyage, it sent forth two native teachers to Fotuna; and we had the happiness, this voyage, to take two more, with their wives, to Tana. What a rich reward has God given to the labours of his servants on this island!

Tana.

"Last report recorded the melancholy events occasioned by the introduction of the small-pox, which ended in the breaking up a second time of the mission on this island. It will be gratifying to our Christian friends to know that a gleam of hope has again burst through the dark cloud that envelopes this hitherto difficult field of labour.

"On the 24th of October, three days after leaving Aneiteum, we made the island of Tana on the south-east side, which fortunately happened to be where the chief Iarisi, who, with his people, had been to Aneiteum, and with whom we were to leave the teachers, lived. Several canoes came off to the vessel, in one of which were some relatives of the chief. These immediately recognized the teachers, and were delighted to see them. As we pulled in, several canoes followed us, and natives to the number of about three hundred assembled on the beach; the men, without any warlike weapons, and the women and children, joined in the crowd to gaze at the strangers. All behaved in the most orderly manner, and seemed friendly and pleased. When we got close in to the landing-place, the people very readily took the teachers and their things from the boat to the shore in their canoes; and when the teachers' wives stood up to go into one of the canoes, the females on shore, as soon as they caught sight of them, set up a loud and joyous shout, and ran forward to the landing-place, leaping and dancing with delight. A more peaceful and friendly reception we could not have had. Having accomplished our work here, we bade the teachers and their wives farewell, and returned to the vessel, thanking God for this fresh opening for the introduction of the gospel to this unhappy island.

Eramanga.

"We left Tana in the afternoon of the 16th of October, and next morning reached Eramanga, and anchored in Dillon's Bay. We were delighted with the improved appearance of things. As the vessel was beating into the anchorage, a few of the people assembled on the beach, more or less dressed in English clothing. As soon as we came to anchor, the teachers came on board, whom we were glad to see so stout, and looking so well. They reported that they and the other teachers and their wives had all been ill of ague and bilious fever, and that two of their wives and one of the teachers were still ailing, but that all the rest were well again.

"Since last voyage, the number attending the religious services has been more than doubled. Sixty-seven, young and old, have renounced heathenism, and attend instruction regularly. Only one-third of these are females. With the exception of seven young men who were at Samoa, who can read and write, none of these know much beyond the letters of the alphabet. They are willing to learn, but the work of instruction has been much hindered by the illness of the teachers, and the want of suitable school books.

"It is pleasing to know that the young men who were at Samoa, with the exception of one, keep steady in their adherence to the teachers. The interesting young man, Naldial, referred to in former reports, continues steadfast, and is a very valuable assistant to the teachers. He constantly takes part in conducting the schools and religious services. The poor fellow was quite overcome with joy to see his old friends on his native shores.

"The foreigners residing on the island speak favourably of the teachers. Captain Edwards, who has the charge of the sandal-wood station at Dillon's Bay, was very kind to them in supplying them with food in the time of scarcity. We called on him, and thanked him for his kindness. There are several sandal-wood stations on the island.

"Soon after we came to anchor in Dillon's Bay, Mr. Sunderland and I went on shore, and having ascertained the state of things, and learning that teachers would be received at other parts of the island, we decided to leave four more on it. These we advised to remain, in the meantime, with the teachers already there, and zealously attend to the acquisition of the language, as a primary object, and then when sufficiently advanced, to proceed two and two, to the most eligible stations they could find; taking into consideration whether it would not be advisable that two of them should go to Elizabeth's Bay, which the teacher formerly taken there had left.

"In the afternoon, the teachers and their wives were landed, and at the same time, accompanied by the ladies, we all went on shore. When we landed, the people, quite delighted, crowded to the boat. Those who had been in Samoa, welcomed us with tears of joy. To the teachers, with whom they had been associated in Samoa, they showed much affection, and were delighted when they knew that they were to live among them. We then, surrounded by the people, first went to the teacher's house, and then to the chapel, and, after some pleasant intercourse, and tendering some words of encouragment, returned to the vessel, thankful to God for all we had seen and heard.

"Next morning, Mr. Sunderland and I went again on shore, to visit the teachers. They had but poor accommodations, but we found them all well pleased with their first night on shore. We had a meeting with them and the people in the chapel. There were not very many present, most of the people being away at some distance, preparing food for a great feast. Prayer and praise were presented by the teachers in their native language. We then gave an exhortation to the people, which was interpreted by one of the teachers, after which we addressed a few words of advice and encouragement to the teachers. Our feelings were of no ordinary kind while engaged in these solemn and delightful duties, so near to the spot where Williams fell. Having taken an affectionate farewell of the teachers and their wives, we took on board with us the chiefs Naiuan and Kauiaui, with whom the teachers respectively reside, and, making each of them a present, thus completed our deeply interesting duties at Eramanga.

Fate.

"We reached this island early on the morning of the 19th of October, and sailed along close in shore. A canoe came off, in which was a man who had been at Samoa. We got him on board, and learnt from him that the sad tale which we heard before we reached the island was too true, that some of the teachers had been killed. We then shortened sail, and stood close in towards the station at Erakor.

"In a short time the teacher came on board. Poor fellow! when he saw us he was deeply affected, and gave vent to his feelings by a flood of tears, being overcome by the thought that he was the only teacher whom God had spared amid the sad events which had happened to the mission during the year. As soon as he could compose his mind, he gave us a sad and distressing account. The bright hopes of last visit were all overclouded by a dismal tale of disasters. On the 20th of November, last year, only nineteen days after they were landed, under the most cheering and promising circumstances, the Rarotongan teachers, Pikika and Kavariri, and their wives, who were left at Lolopa, were all barbarously murdered! Who could have thought that so soon after so apparently hearty and enthusiastic a reception, such a bloody deed could have been perpetrated?—that a people seemingly so desirous of teachers, and who gave them so joyous a welcome, could so soon imbrue their hands in their blood. How true is it that 'the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.'

"The news of the horrid deed reached the teachers at Erakor, two days after it was committed. They were told it by a man of a neighbouring village, to which a part of the body of one of the teachers' wives had been sent. There are various reports respecting the cause of their murder, and also respecting the manner in which it was perpetrated. We could not ascertain the truth of the matter. It seems to be quite certain, however, that the Lolopa people killed them, and that their bodies were cut up, distributed, and eaten! It is said that, when the teachers were killed, the chiefs wished to take their wives for themselves, and that the poor women fled, and attempted to cross the narrow strait that separates the island on which they lived from the main land, and were pursued, and, by order of the chiefs, were killed in the water. It is also reported that one of the chiefs spared the life of the little boy, the son of one of the teachers, but that afterwards he ordered him to be taken out to sea and cast away, which was done; but having escaped from the deep, they cut off the poor little fellow's hands, and otherwise mangled him, and then killed and eat him!

"Whether it was superstitious fears of disease and death which they thought would be caused by the teachers and their religion, a desire for their property or their wives, or the anger of the chief on account of the death of his son, who had been at Samoa, and died suddenly about a fortnight after his return;—whether any or all of these, or some other cause, led to the murder of the teachers, we cannot tell. Without doubt the deep ignorance and superstitious fears of the natives, had much influence in leading them to commit such horrid deeds.

"The teacher Vaaru, who was left at Erakor last voyage, died of fever on the 15th of January, after eight days' illness. Tauri, the other teacher from the Hervey Island at this station, died of dysentery on the 15th of May, after lingering for several months. Both died in the faith, exhorting their fellow-labourers to steadfastness and perseverance. Thus, besides the five from the Hervey Islands who were cut off by the hands of the natives, two more from that group have since last voyage fallen victims to the fatal climate of this island. The only remaining survivors are a Samoan teacher and the widow of the Rarotonga teacher, Vaaru. These, and four natives of Fate and a Tongan man, who has been long on the island, we have brought to Samoa. One of the four Fatese is the son of Pomare, the chief of Erakor. The teachers at Erakor were, during the last year, frequently in danger of their lives.

"The only surviving teacher being promised by the deputation, last voyage, to be taken back to Samoa, and having fully made up his mind to return now, we thought of leaving Sualo and another in his place. We tried much to get Sualo to agree to this, but could not prevail on him to do so.

"We felt exceedingly for the poor people of Erakor, and, no doubt, they too felt keenly on being left without a teacher. But they have a little light among them, which we hope will continue to burn and brighten, and yet spread over this dark land. A considerable number at Erakor have abandoned most of the heathen practices, and, to a great extent, at least in their external conduct, conform to the requirements of the word of God. Family and public worship are regularly attended to by them, and they are very desirous of instruction. Seven men, including the chief, afford evidence that they have felt the power of the truth on their hearts, and have been for some time employed as assistants to the teachers. These will, no doubt, continue to conduct public services, and we cherish the hope that the day will yet come (may it be soon!) when the eyes of this people will again 'see their teachers.' Sualo, who is married to a daughter of the chief, and the teacher who has now left them, yet hope to return to live and labour among them.

Maré (Nengone.)

"We left Fate (or Sandwich Island) on the 19th, after sunset, and reached Maré on the 23d. In the morning we were off Neche, in the district of Secuama, the principal station on the island. The teachers came off and gave us the gladdening intelligence that all the teachers and their families were well, and their work going on prosperously. We got the boats down immediately, and Mr. Sunderland and I, accompanied by the new missionaries, Messrs. Creagh and Jones, went ashore. The people crowded to the beach, and gave us a hearty welcome. We were much pleased with their respectful behaviour, and to see so many of them clothed. With very few exceptions they had all some covering, either native or foreign. We passed along through the crowd to the teacher's house, and, finding everything in a most encouraging state, we told the teachers that we wished to have a meeting with the chiefs and people. Very soon a large number eagerly assembled in the space before the house erected for the missionaries. We then asked them if they still held the desire repeatedly expressed by them, for missionaries to come and live among them—whether it was their wish that Messrs. Jones and Creagh should do so—and, if they did, whether they would protect them and their wives, treat them kindly, and attend to their instructions. To all these questions the chiefs promptly answered in the affirmative. We then told them that, in case of political difference, or of war breaking out, which we hoped never would, the missionaries could take no part in them; that their aim would be to promote peace and friendship among all parties, and to labour for the present welfare and everlasting happiness of all.

"All being thus far satisfactorily arranged, the next thing was to get homes as temporary residences for our newly arrived friends, and Mr. and Mrs. Sunderland, who were appointed to remain with them for a time to assist them in commencing their labours. As there were three families, we wished to know what houses they might have to live in, and were told they might have any they might choose. We soon fixed on three convenient plastered cottages which the owners gave up to them most cheerfully. Having thus got the way fully prepared for the landing of our friends and their property, we returned to the vessel and told our good captain, who soon brought the vessel to an anchor about two miles from the settlement, and commenced taking the goods on shore. Early in the afternoon of the 25th of October the landing of the goods and cattle were completed, and our dear friends took up their residence at this most interesting station. Seldom or ever has it been the lot of missionaries to commence their labours under circumstances so favourable, among a people so prepared to receive them, and to benefit by their instructions. More than one half of the island have abandoned heathenism, and are thirsting for instruction; and in those parts where the people have not yet done so, the teachers are well received, so that there is every reason to hope that the whole island will very soon profess Christianity.

"At Neche, the station at which the missionaries now are, and throughout the district of Sekuama, the whole population, with the exception of the very aged, and the very young, can read, and about forty can write. About one hundred persons are candidates for gospel ordinances, and there is every reason to hope that the missionaries will soon have the happiness to form a Christian church. The chiefs have each put away all their wives but one. Twelve plastered houses have been built; and since last voyage, in place of a large plastered chapel, which a storm had blown down, a strong stone chapel has been built, eighty feet long by sixty wide, which is filled to overflowing every Sabbath, with attentive hearers.

"Having completed our work so auspiciously at this station, we left it, Mr. and Mrs. Sunderland accompanying us, on the afternoon of the 25th, to visit the district of Seuaeko, where our other station on this island is.

"We came to anchor at Uananaletch, where the teachers are stationed, on the morning of the 26th. Here we found things in a state of prosperity similar to that at Sekuema. Heathenism and polygamy are entirely abandoned; the people are equally desirous of missionaries, and thirsting for knowledge. They very much wished that one of the missionaries should live among them. We told them that it was likely this would be the case, and that in the meantime the missionaries would visit them until further arrangements could be made. At this station sixteen plastered houses have been built; and, since last visit, their plastered chapel blown down by the storm, has been replaced by another, ninety feet long by thirty wide, which is crowded every Sabbath. Two hundred and fifty persons have learned to read well, and a large number, in different stages of progress, are learning. Nearly forty have learned to write. There are eighty-five candidates for church-fellowship, and here, too, it is likely a church will be formed. We had a large and deeply interesting service here with the people. It was most encouraging and refreshing to hear them join in the song of praise to God, and to see them listen with so much attention to the word of life.

"The teachers at both stations are highly respected and esteemed, and treated with great kindness. They have gained great influence, which they have used to good account, as appears from the large measure of success with which, under the blessing of God, their labours have been crowned.

"We left three more teachers from Samoa on the island, two of them married, who, with the four there before, will greatly aid the missionaries in carrying forward the good work which has already been so successful.

Lifu.

"We left Maré on the morning of the 27th, and after touching at Toka, we reached Lifu about three in the afternoon. The wind and sea prevented us from having any communication with the teacher at Mu (Anerewil,) the first-formed station on this island; we therefore passed on to Ue, the station formed upwards of two years ago, which we reached about 4 P. M. We were glad to find that the teachers were well, and that their labours on the island were being increasingly blessed and prospered. With very trifling exceptions the whole population of the island profess Christianity, and their call for missionaries is becoming louder and louder. They pleaded much to get one of those placed on Maré; but we could only leave with them two more teachers, expressing our confident hope that two missionaries would be brought for them next voyage of the missionary vessel; and in this, we trust, neither we nor they will be disappointed.

"Having completed our work at Lifu, we sailed again for Maré on the 1st of November, and arrived on the 3d, and went on shore with Mr. and Mrs. Sunderland, who were to remain for a time to assist in commencing missionary operations. We found our esteemed missionary friends on shore all well and comfortable in their little cottages, and animated by the promising state and pleasing prospects of their mission; and, having affectionately commended each other and our work to God in prayer, we bade all our dear friends farewell, and sailed for Niue, or Savage Island.

"We reached this island in the afternoon of the 24th of November, just three weeks after we left Maré. One of the teachers came off and remained on board all night; and on the following day we saw all the teachers, and got their reports. We were happy to find that, with very trifling exceptions, heathenism had been abandoned throughout the whole island. The people now go from land to land without fear of each other; and the teachers can pursue their work everywhere without interruption, and are kindly treated by the people. The desire for instruction is becoming general. To use the words of one of the teachers, 'The mountains of difficulty are now all removed; the word of God is growing, and will grow rapidly in this land.' It was our happiness to convey to them one thousand copies of an excellent elementary school-book, containing select portions of the Old and New Testaments, and also a small collection of hymns. It will be a great boon to the people, and will be highly prized by them. This book was translated by the teachers into the native language, and printed at Samoa.

"The desire for teachers is great, and we ought, as soon as possible, to send two more efficient men, who, with those already there, will fully supply the island.

"The facts above narrated will speak for themselves, and will show our friends who are interested in our work in these seas how much cause there is for thanksgiving to the Hearer of prayer. Though some of our courageous and noble pioneers have fallen in the high places of the field, and a gloom has, for the present, been cast over one fair island, yet what a large amount of success has crowned the work of the devoted labourers in our infant missions! What a large return has been made to the comparatively small outlay that has been expended upon them! It is therefore to be hoped that the earnest and affecting appeals which are constantly being made from so many of our stations will be speedily responded to, and a sufficient number of well-qualified and devoted men be found for them in the churches. May the God of missions bless his people with a spirit of prayer and liberality, and speedily send forth an adequate number of labourers to these fields, which 'are white unto the harvest!'"—Missionary Magazine, October, 1855.

WESTERN AFRICA: YORUBA MISSION.

Open-air preaching.

"When the priest saw he did not succeed, he took mud, dust, wood, and stones, what he could get, and threw it over them, which caused many to fetch the sacrifice requested. Two priestesses also appeared, and posted themselves on the other side, under the same tree where I stood, praising orisha with their songs. The priest had meanwhile fetched his sacred cloak—a long wide garment of a reddish colour, almost covered with regular groups and rows of white cowries, and bordered with little bells below—and received the sacrifice on the same spot. This was, then, a remarkable contrast under one and the same tree. I went on talking to my still numerous people as calm and friendly as possible, encouraging those that seemed alarmed, by telling them of the power and love of God, and relating some stories, how our fathers got angry when they heard the first time of this fashion, but as soon as they understood a little, they thanked the strangers most heartily for having persevered in teaching them. One of them they called even by another name—Benefactor—because he had done so much good to them. Whilst thus talking, the number of my listeners increased, and by degrees the bringing of sacrifices ceased, in spite of the continued singing of the priestesses, and the repeated threatenings and hailings of the priest. All the people, except some children who wanted to rob the priest of some cowries, stood once more on my side of the tree, and listened so well that my talk and stay was unusually prolonged. The priest gathered at last his cowries together, in vain looking out for some more. Before I left I wished all the people the light, blessing, and peace of God, which was, as usual, followed with their united "Amin."

"Sept. 3, 1854: Lord's-day.—Went again to Ijaye quarter, where I found our preaching-place nicely swept, and the little orisha-houses washed, and furnished with some pots of water. The people did not flock towards us as usual, but the priest in his cloak, and several priestesses stood there ready for our reception. They gave hardly an answer to our salutation. When the people were assembled I began as usual, but the priest interfered, and said, 'The chiefs have their sources they get money from to live; farmers find their food; the Mohammedans have their living by selling charms; my own portion, like all the babalawos, is to make country-fashion and sacrifices for the people, and from this I eat. Why do you come here and spoil my living with your preaching another fashion? I cannot allow this, else I see in a short time nobody would care for me, nor bring me money and food. I give you, therefore, the advice not to talk here any more. Besides this, you talk here to children, and to people who are fools, and cannot understand such words, so you had better keep at home.' In my reply I could not help pitying him, before all the people, that he must fear his orishas would leave him, a priest, in such a helpless condition. They must have little power. I advised him, then, to serve the living and Almighty God, who will then surely provide for him in another way, and listen to his word, which is for the wise as well as for those who have little understanding; or else this people he despised, if they listen well, will find a great good, whilst he remains miserable. I invited him then to join us at once in prayer. When he heard this he could not suppress his anger any longer. He began to roar, but the people sent him away, and he did not make his appearance any more. After his departure we could proceed without much interruption, and finish in peace."

It is indeed very remarkable how closely the people will bear to be pressed on the subject of their superstitions. We again refer to Mr. Kefer's journals.

"Oct. 13.—Going to town I passed a woman whilst she was just placing a sacrifice into the fetish-house, murmuring some words to it. I began to talk with her, and was soon joined by the priest and the owner of the house, with many of his wives. I spoke of the true God, and how we have to serve him. The priest then acknowledged that their doing is good for nothing. Upon this confession all the bystanders mocked at him, and reproved him for his deceiving people.

"June 4: Whit-Sunday.—Took the morning service, Mr. Hinderer going out. Read the history of the day, Acts ii., and preached on verses 37, 38. Immediately after service, the owner of a large compound, whom I visited during the week, came, with many of his people, and I had a long talk with them.

I went out in the afternoon to visit some compounds. In the first one I argued against some idols, images roughly carved, which were put up in the piazza. I showed, first, its foolishness, and tried then to explain that only reasonable service is required in the word of God. In the last compound I entered, the master told me the mending of his house prevented him from coming to us. I talked then of the 'house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens,' prepared by our Saviour for all true believers. 'These are sweet words,' exclaimed he at last; 'I wish to get one too.'

"July 5, 1854.—Had some occasion to go to Ijaye gate, and stopt there with the man who receives the duty. During our conversation I happened to drop some pieces of printed paper, which attracted the attention of the numerous listeners. I was asked whether they would be useful as charms; upon which I read a part of their contents, and explained that all the papers, &c., sold to them, as powerful charms, for high prices, are good for nothing, except that they fill the pockets of the seller, and make the deceived people poor. By this remark my hearers were struck, and some of them related instances which illustrated and verified my words. My friend, the agbowode, had been listening in silence, but now he took off his charm, showed it to me, and began at once to undo the whole. At last we found a rough paper with some Arabic writing. When seeing this, all the people laughed at his and their own folly. They seemed the more convinced when I began to write something on paper, and told them we could write and sell such things, but we cannot deceive people and displease God, who wants us to teach His word, which is true, and good for this life and eternity.

A VISIT TO SIX SYNODS.

During the month of October, the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication visited six of the Synods, and enjoyed the privilege of addressing five of them on behalf of the Board. A brief notice of these visits may be interesting to our readers.

After an agreeable journey by railroad through Albany and Syracuse, he reached on Tuesday evening, October 9th, the thriving city of Oswego, New York, delightfully situated on the southern shore of Lake Ontario, at the mouth of the Oswego river. Here he found the Synod of Albany holding its sessions in the First Presbyterian Church of Oswego, of which the Rev. R. W. Condit, D. D., now is and has been for a long course of years, the beloved and useful pastor. This church has not been long in the Old-school connection. The number, intelligence and activity of its communion, make it a highly important centre of influence. The Rev. Jeremiah Wood, D. D., was the newly elected Moderator of Synod. On Wednesday, the Secretary was very courteously invited to address the body, which he did for about half an hour, spreading before it the plans and aims of the Board of Publication, and the necessity there was for more general and efficient co-operation on the part of ministers and churches. Secretaries of two of the other Boards also addressed the Synod. An interesting discussion subsequently occurred, the result of which was the cordial adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, 1*st*. That in the opinion of the Synod, it is the undoubted duty of every Church within our bounds, to contribute annually to each of the Boards of the Church; and that it is obligatory on every Pastor and Session, to afford an opportunity for such annual contribution to each Board.

Resolved, 2*d*. That it be enjoined on each of our Presbyteries, to appoint, at its next regular meeting, a Committee on Benevolence, whose duty it shall be, by some method deemed most convenient to them, to secure the annual presentation of the several interests represented by these Boards, to the Congregations in their connection and a contribution in response.

Resolved, 3*d*. That it be recommended to the Presbyteries, unless there be some insuperable objections, to insist upon a fixed period of the year, for these several contributions.

What the effect of these resolutions may be, will of course depend largely upon the pastors of the Synod, and especially upon the activity and earnestness of the Presbyterial Committees appointed under the second resolution. The indications visible in the Synod, were such as to induce a strong hope of more general and energetic co-operation than heretofore, for the Boards throughout the bounds of the Synod.

Leaving Oswego on the afternoon of Wednesday, and spending the night at Syracuse, we reached on Thursday forenoon, the flourishing village of Port Byron, situated on the Central Railroad, about twenty-four miles to the west of Syracuse. At this place the Synod of Buffalo was in session, its Moderator being the Rev. J. H. McIlvaine, D. D. The church in which the Synod met, is under the pastoral care of Rev. George C. Heckman, and after having been enlarged and beautified, had been only the day before (the 9th,) reopened and rededicated to the service of God. Port Byron is a flourishing village containing about two thousand people, and its Presbyterian church under the ministry of its youthful and earnest pastor is exerting a wide and happy influence for the truth. In company with brethren representing two other Boards, the Secretary addressed the Synod, and after a full and free expression of opinion and suggestion from various members, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That Synod call the attention of ministers, sessions and churches, within our bounds to the imperative duty of taking up annual collections for the several Boards and the Church Extension Committee of the General Assembly; and that at each stated meeting of Synod, the ministers and delegates from the churches be called upon to report what they have done to give effect to this resolution.

Resolved, That in order to awaken a deeper and wider interest in the benevolent schemes of the General Assembly, Synod recommend to the Sessions of churches without exception, to adopt measures to secure the extensive circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, the Foreign Missionary, and the Sabbath-school Visitor, within the bounds of our several congregations.

There seemed to be a deep anxiety felt by most of those present, to use every practicable means to induce every Church of the Synod, to co-operate with all the Boards. An anxious desire was also expressed on all hands to have the publications of this Board circulated abundantly throughout the bounds of Synod.

On Tuesday evening, October 16th, the Secretary was in attendance upon the Synod of New Jersey at Newton, in Sussex county, N. J. Rev. Myron Barrett is the present pastor of the church in this pleasant and growing county town. The Synod of New Jersey is one of the largest and oldest of the Synods of the denomination, comprehending among its members many men eminent for talents and learning. Having addressed the Synod in relation to the operations and wants of the Board of Publication, the Secretary remarked that the resolution adopted by the Synod last year, respecting the Board, covered the whole ground, and that if the spirit of that resolution were only carried out, it would be all that was needful. Nor did he desire the addition of any new resolution to the former one. Rev. N. Murray, D. D., followed with a few remarks, expressive of his deep conviction of the importance and usefulness of the work of this Board, and related an instance in which was strikingly displayed the value of sound and thoroughgoing Calvinistic publications. A tract on election, written by a venerated father of the Church, who is still living, found its way afar off among the Himalaya mountains, and was there greatly blessed of God, in the case of two or three educated and influential men. The feeling of the Synod seemed to be unanimously and cordially favourable towards this great interest of the Church.

By riding all night, the Synod of Philadelphia, in session at Hollidaysburg, Pennsylvania, was reached by 10 o'clock, A. M. of the next day after leaving Newton. The Synod was much occupied with one or two judicial cases, likely to be tedious and difficult. Nevertheless an opportunity was speedily and cheerfully accorded, for the presentation of the interests of the Board. When this had been done, Rev. E. P. Rodgers, D. D., in rising to introduce resolutions on the subject, made some very animated and appropriate remarks. He said he had observed the activity of Satan's colporteurs everywhere, and had learned that if the Church did not employ this sort of agency, the great enemy would not fail to do it. He found men and boys everywhere, on our steamboats and railway cars, engaged in hawking books. And when he looked into their contents, he found them not only of the most unprofitable, but some of them of the vilest sort. He had found books which slandered and reviled the pulpit and the ministry, among them. He then made a brief, but earnest and effective appeal to the Synod to aid the Board of Publication. Rev. Alfred Nevin, the Moderator, left his chair for a few minutes, and made an animated address to the same purpose. Alluding to remarks of the Secretary's, on the importance of giving our people a sound and complete system of Gospel teaching, to comprehend plainly, just as the Bible did, the great doctrines commonly called Calvinistic, he said he would say Amen to that with all his heart. The great demand of the day was for such publications as were founded deep upon the doctrines of eternal love, and eternal purposes. And he believed what had just been said, that these, after all, were the class of religious writings likeliest to convert the soul. He had in his recollection a case, where a man of education, long prejudiced against the truth, had accidentally laid hold of a book on the doctrine of election. Within twenty-four hours afterwards the speaker was sent for to pray with that man, who was now an active and useful member of the church. He besought his brethren to help on the good work in which the Board of Publication was engaged. After Mr. Nevin's address, the Synod unanimously adopted the resolutions offered by Dr. Rogers, which were as follows:

1. That the Synod have heard with great interest the statements of Rev. Mr. Schenck, Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication, in reference to its operations.

2. That inasmuch as the power of the press is rapidly increasing, and becoming an agency of almost incalculable magnitude for good or evil, the work of providing a sound Christian literature for our country and the world, is becoming proportionally imperative upon all who desire to promote the best intellectual and moral welfare of our race.

3. That firmly and piously believing, that the doctrines of grace, as embodied in our standards, possesses a mighty power of intellectual development and of spiritual advancement, it is our duty, as Presbyterians, to scatter throughout our land those publications, in which those doctrines shall be fully, symmetrically, and earnestly presented.

4. That the Assembly's Board of Publication, on whom this important work is especially devolved, be heartily commended to the more general, and liberal, and regular co-operation, and sympathy, and contributions of all our ministers and churches.

On the evening of the same day, arriving at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, by way of Altoona, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Synod of Pittsburgh was found in session at that place. Johnstown is a rapidly growing place, closely surrounded on all sides by a wall of mountains, which are full of immense and incalculably valuable masses of coal and mineral. Extensive and numerous furnaces and forges sustain great numbers of labouring people, who compose a large portion of the population. The Secretary enjoyed the pleasure of spending an evening among the brethren of the Synod, and of conversing individually with a considerable number of them, but in the morning when the body had convened, a proposition was laid before it to cross the mountains, and hold a fraternal conference with the Synod of Philadelphia, afterwards so happily carried out, which prevented his enjoying any opportunity of addressing them collectively. He was well repaid, however, for the addition to his journey, by the pleasant conferences had with so many brethren, and by receiving their encouraging expressions of good will and active interest in the Publication Board.

On Tuesday, October 23d, after having climbed by steam power to the summit of the Blue Ridge, in Virginia, and enjoyed the magnificent scenery presented by adjacent valleys spread out far below, and by the mountain slopes, clad in the variegated dress of autumn, we descended into the beautiful Valley of Virginia, and arrived in safety at Staunton. A stage ride of thirty-six miles thence down the valley, in very agreeable company, brought us to Lexington, where, on the next day, the Synod of Virginia was to convene. Here all the surrounding scenery was replete with interest. The Military Institute of Virginia and Washington College are here. A mile or so from the town is the spot where the venerated Dr. Alexander spent his boyish days, and where his near relatives still reside. In full view, in the same direction, stand the ancient-looking ruins of Liberty Hall, where Graham taught; while, looming up loftily in the southwest, are the House Mountain and the Jump Mountain, which are alluded to in Dr. Alexander's biography, as having had so powerful an influence upon his youthful mind. Fourteen miles to the southward is the Natural Bridge, one of the most stupendous and magnificent natural objects on the globe.

The Synod of Virginia convened on Wednesday evening, and their sessions throughout were largely interspersed with preaching and devotional exercises. The attendance was large, and a most fraternal spirit predominated. It was truly good to be there. A Secretary was present from each of the four Boards, and they were treated throughout with the kindest consideration and most generous hospitality. It was arranged that the representative of the Board of Publication should be heard on Thursday afternoon, when he was listened to with a most encouraging attention. Immediately afterwards, the Rev. W. S. White, D. D., of Lexington, made an earnest and appropriate address. He said the Synod of Virginia loved the Board of Publication, and its cause. If there were any discontent in reference to it anywhere in the Synod, he had never yet heard of it. Dr. White enlarged upon the value and necessity of the colportage system. As to the importance of making a use of the press, in the way the Boards are trying to do, he observed, that the history of the Church in Virginia was full of illustrations of it. There were, he remarked, at that moment in the house two elders representing important churches in Eastern Virginia, both of which owe their very existence to the early use of good books. Dr. White then introduced resolutions, which were referred to the Committee on Colportage, and having been again brought up by that Committee, on the following day, were passed unanimously. They were as follows:

Resolved, 1. That the Synod have heard with great satisfaction the address of the Rev. William E. Schenck, the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication, and highly approve of the principles and plans of the Board, as he has presented them.

2. That Synod earnestly commend increased diligence and enterprise to be used by the several Presbyterial Committees on Colportage.

3. That the Presbyterial Committees be respectfully requested to lay before the Board of Publication an annual exhibit of their labours in the work, so that the entire operations of our Church in this department of benevolence may be presented in the annual reports of the Boards.

4. That Synod reiterate the recommendations of the General Assembly, touching the importance of the co-operation of pastors and Church sessions in the work of disseminating the publications of the Board.

The visit to these six Synods has left recollections of unmingled pleasure and encouragement. The treatment experienced was throughout of the most courteous, cordial, and hospitable kind. Much apathy and sluggishnesss were indeed found in many minds, to the great and good work in which the Board of Publication is engaged; misapprehensions as to the nature and necessity of that work were encountered here and there in individual cases; and unfounded prejudices had been the natural consequence. Yet these misapprehensions and prejudices were found, in many cases, to yield before the force of strong facts and plain reasonings, and it was cheering to receive not only public and collective, but also many private and earnest assurances of steady future co-operation from individuals, who had before done little or nothing to help the Board.

Let our Church at large once arise to the help of this Board—let those multitudes who now do nothing, begin to do something, and those who do a only little, go forward to do more, and the Board will be enabled, by God's blessing, to do a work for the Church and for the world, which our weak faith has scarcely dared as yet to consider possible.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FAMILY ALMANAC.

As the beginning of a new year is close at hand, we would again remind readers of the Record, that the Board has issued a "Presbyterian Family Almanac" for the year 1856, which not only contains all the ordinary information looked for in an Almanac, but also a vast amount of statistical and other matter respecting the Presbyterian Church and its progress during the past year. There is likewise much miscellaneous religious reading of an interesting kind, and the whole is embellished with a number of handsome wood-cuts. This Almanac ought to become, for the next year, an inmate in the dwelling of every Presbyterian family in the land. Price $4, per hundred; 6 cents a piece.

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF THE BOARD.

A Collection of the Acts, Deliverances, and Testimonies of the Supreme Judicatory of the Presbyterian Church, from its Origin in America, to the Present Time, with Notes and Documents explanatory and historical: constituting a complete illustration of her polity, faith, and history. Compiled for the Board of Publication, by the Rev. Samuel J. Baird. Octavo, pp. xxii, and 856. Price $3.50.

We are at present able to do no more than merely announce the publication of this important volume, which has frequently been inquired after during the last six months under the name of "The Digest." The work would have appeared considerably sooner, but for the necessity of delaying its issue while the printed sheets were transmitted to the author in Iowa, and the Index, which will add much to the value of the book, prepared by him and forwarded.

That Mr. Baird has exhibited in the preparation of this work an uncommon amount of laborious and persevering industry, no one who examines it will deny. That it will be found free from all errors or defects, no one will expect. Prosecuted as the undertaking has been, as an experimental effort, and surrounded by the many drawbacks and difficulties to which he alludes in his preface, it were wonderful were no defects to be discovered. Yet we think, the Church will find in this book a great and most valuable convenience.

Having thus announced the publication of the "Collection," we shall probably recur to it at a future opportunity. As only one thousand copies have been printed, and the book is not stereotyped, application for copies had better be made soon. Price to Ministers and Students, $2.80.

The Port Folio of Entertainment and Instruction. Compiled by the Editor of the Board. Quarto.

In this volume the Board presents to the public an elegant gift-book for the approaching holidays, although suitable for every season; its materials, its style of binding, and its engravings, furnish a very unusual exhibition of richness, good taste, and artistic skill. The engravings, which are ten in number, will bear the most critical examination, and cannot fail to be admired for their beauty. It contains twenty-three pieces, in which prose and poetry are agreeably intermingled, and all will well repay a perusal. And while all will be found sprightly and interesting, all will be also found adapted to purify the mind, and to draw the affections towards Jesus Christ, and heavenly things. In this quality at least it will have a great advantage over the mass of holiday literature. We therefore earnestly invite those who may be intending to purchase books for presentation during the coming month, to examine the "Port Folio," before supplying themselves elsewhere.

The Board has also just issued the following works, of which a fuller notice will appear in the next number of the Record.

Sermons and Essays by the Tennents and their Contemporaries. Compiled for the Board. 12mo. pp. 374. With a portrait of the Rev. Gilbert Tennent. Price 70 cents.

Life Sketches from Scottish History, or brief biographies of Scottish Presbyterian Worthies. Compiled for the Board of Publication. 18mo. pp. 144, price 20 and 25 cents, with an engraving.

Suggestions on the Religious Instruction of the Negroes in the Southern States, together with an Appendix containing forms of Church registers, form of a constitution, and plans of different denominations of Christians. By Charles Colcock Jones, D. D. 18mo. tract form, pp. 132. price 10 cents.

the wide field into which God has permitted us to enter?

But to come nearer home, let us say to ministers, the Record will be their best ally; and to sessions and deacons' courts, the Record will be their best ally too. It will go before them in the houses and hearts of the people, and pave the way for the counsels they may have to tender, the claims they may have to urge. Every additional Record introduced into a congregation is an additional coadjutor to the elder and the deacon; labouring when he, it may be, is resting. Every additional Record is another tie between the pastor and his flock. There can be no steadfastness or attachment to either pastor or Church, worthy of the name, save what is based on intelligence. The pastor would find, in this way, his ministrations more appreciated, his prayer-meetings and missionary meetings better attended, and his calls on the liberality of his hearers better responded to, and a larger share of the influences of the blessed Spirit enjoyed by his flock.

And, as regards congregations, we would venture to say to those who may be wholly or in part overlooking the record of God's workings in the world, that they are sustaining a loss by no means inconsiderable. It is part of the Great Mediator's reign that is spread out before them in the Record. "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things," may here see proofs that Christ is ascended, that the government of all things is in his hands, and that the triumph of his Church, and the complete emancipation of the world from Satan's yoke, is the great final end of his reign, and that this consummation in all its glory is speeding on apace. How, we would ask, can they who neglect to peruse the Record, pray for the coming of Christ's kingdom! How can they pray intelligently and with adaptation to the circumstances of that kingdom in the world, and how can they pray with that ardour with which prayers for the world's evangelization ought to be breathed forth? And how can they give? How can they give acceptably unless they give in faith? and how can they give in faith unless they give with knowledge, and with a hearty, cheerful willingness, such as God loves? And how can they continue to give? The springs of liberality will dry up unless replenished by the periodic descent of intelligence, as would the fountains of earth, but for the dews and rains of heaven. On all these considerations we would earnestly entreat our brethren throughout the Church to give this matter their most serious consideration, and their early, their conscientious, and their vigorous attention. A little effort here would most materially benefit all the schemes of the Church. We may be reminded that the Record is not what we would wish to see it. Most true. We might all take a wider range, and lift ourselves more to a level with our great subject. The Editors could do more, Conveners could do more, Missionaries could do more. But such as it is, the Home and Foreign Record is a great instrumentality of which the Church has never yet availed herself to all the extent to which she could and ought. Were our hearts more filled with the love of the Prince of Missionaries, we would prize more its statements and narratives, plain and unpretending as they are. Surely, that ear is dull that does not hear in these tidings the first welcome utterances of that triumphant shout which will one day be raised over an emancipated world, loud as the voice of mighty thunderings, and melodious as the voice of many waters, saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.
